During the last twelve months The Queen Elizabeth II Conference Centre has published two documents—its updated Framework Document in January and the Annual Report 1991-2 in June.

If I can be of any further assistance please do not hesitate to contact me.

Letter from Roger H. Powell to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 2 November 1992:

I have been asked to reply direct to your parliamentary question regarding papers published by myself since taking office.

The only published document to date has been TBA's Annual Report for 1991.

Coal

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the Government's policy on the appropriate level of national coal stocks; and if he will now review the procedure for planning applications for opencast mines.

Mr. Baldry: The review announced on 21 October by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade will look at the level of coal stocks, both at the pithead and the power stations and whether plans to run them down are sensibly phased.

With regard to the procedure for planning application for opencast mines, I announced on 15 July that the guidelines contained in MPG3 will be revised. My Department expects to bring forward a draft for public consultation next year following the review of the Government's energy policy.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the Government's policy on the relief of hardship for business ratepayers;

(2) what is the Government's policy regarding the current operation of section 49 of the Local Government and Finance Act 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Section 49 of the Local Government Finance Act 1988 gives local authorities discretion to grant hardship relief of up to 100 per cent., where it is reasonable for them to do so having regard to the interests of their community charge payers. Where they grant such relief, 75 per cent. of the cost is met by the non-domestic rates pool and only 25 per cent. locally. Alternatively, under regulations, authorities may enter into an agreement with a ratepayer to defer liability and take an interest in his property to secure payment, or they can spread a ratepayer's annual liability over 12 instalments instead of 10. These are decisions which are best made locally. We have drawn authorities' attention to the existence of their section 49 powers and issued advice on their use.

Rented Housing

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many new homes were built for rent in (a) 1979 and (b) 1989.

Mr. Baldry: The Department does not collect information about houses built to rent. However most housebuilding by housing associations, local authorities, new towns and Government Departments will be for rent. Figures for housebuilding completions by these bodies are published in the annual and quarterly publication "Housing and Construction Statistics". Figures for England in 1979 appear in table 6.1(a) of the 1979-1989 annual edition. Latest figures for 1989 appear in table 6.1(a) of the 1981-1991 edition. A copy of both publications is in the Library.

Home Insulation Scheme

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what the budget for the home insulation scheme was in (a) 1979 and (b) 1989.

Mr. Baldry: Total expenditure by local authorities in England on the home insulation scheme, as reported to the Department, for the years 1979 and 1989 is shown in table 7.7 of the publication "Housing and Construction Statistics 1979-1989". A copy of this publication is in the Library.

Uniform Business Rate

Mr. Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to exclude charities and voluntary organisations from the uniform business rate.

Mr. Robin Squire: No. The needs of charities have long been recognised in reliefs from taxes. In England and Wales they enjoy 80 per cent. mandatory rate relief on all property occupied for charitable purposes. It can be topped up to 100 per cent. at charging authorities' discretion. Non-profit-making bodies in England and Wales are eligible for relief of up to 100 per cent. at charging authorities' discretion. The discretion permits authorities to reflect the benefit derived by charge payers who bear part of the cost of the relief.

Public Sector Tenants

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek to establish a mobility discount scheme to enable public and social housing tenants to change to other forms of tenure.

Mr. Baldry: Section 129 of the Housing Act 1988 empowers local authorities to give grants to their tenants to help them obtain other accommodation by buying or leasing a home or by extending an existing property. Housing associations that are registered with the Housing Corporation may give similar grants to their tenants under the corporation's tenants incentive scheme.

European Community

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the number of civil servants in his Department whose main task is work related wholly or mainly to the European Community.

Mr. Howard: I will write to the hon. Member, as the information requested will take a little time to assemble.

Pit Closures

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) for each of the 31 coal mines listed for closure, what are the sums he has set aside to increase grant aid to each of the local authorities affected by the resulting loss of rates revenue;

(2) if he will publish a table to show for the 10 coal pits listed for immediate closure and the 21 pits to be closed in the longer term the sums paid by each pit in rates in each of the last two years, and the current year, indicating the councils to which the rates were paid in each case.

Mr. Robin Squire: Information on the rates paid by each of the pits in question is not held centrally.

Any change to a local authority's rate income during the course of a financial year will not affect the amount of its revenue support grant. Authorities are able to avoid the cash flow consequences of any significant unplanned loss by recalculating their contributions to the national non-domestic rates pool.

Tenants Charter

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to monitor the progress of the tenants charter.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 2 November 1992]: The tenants charter set out the individual legal rights of secure tenants. The council tenants charter, published earlier this year, is a framework for action by tenants and landlords and gives more information about the standards council tenants can expect. Local authorities are required to send annual reports about their housing management performance to their tenants. My Department receives a copy of each authority's report.

Constituency Boundaries

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all the reports published by the Local Government Boundary Commission regarding the boundaries of the Epping Forest parliamentary constituency, including the dates of publication of first and further draft proposals, the date by which comments were to be received and the date of publication of final reports; and if he will send a copy of each report to the hon. Member for Doncaster.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Local Government Boundary Commission deals with local authority boundaries, not parliamentary boundaries. But the Parliamentary Boundary Commission for England takes account of county and London borough boundaries.

Reports of the Local Government Boundary Commission relating to county and London borough boundaries affecting Epping Forest are listed in the table. I have sent copies of the reports to the hon. Member.

Table showing local government boundary commission reports affecting Epping Forest

Name of report	Date of draft proposals	Closing date for comments	Date of further proposals	Closing date for comments	Date of final report
Essex/Hertfordshire	15 April 1988 & 13 November 1989	Not known	None	—	15 February 1991
Redbridge/Epping Forest	31 May 1989	26 July 1989	14 December 1990	15 February 1991	12 May 1992
Waltham Forest/Epping Forest	19 September 1988	14 November 1988	None	—	28 February 1992

Timber Imports

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will restrict imports of illegally harvested timber; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for St. Helen's, North (Mr. Evans) on 20 May, Official Report, column 157.

EDUCATION

Teachers Pensions Agency

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list (a) by grade the number employed, (b) the staffing costs for the year 1991-92 and (c) the estimate for 1992-93, for the Teachers Pensions Agency.

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for staff numbers and costs has been delegated to the Teachers Pensions Agency under its chief executive Mrs. Denyse Metcalfe. I have asked her to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Denyse Metcalfe to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 3 November 1992:

The Secretary of State for Education has asked me to supply a detailed answer to the recent question you tabled about the staffing levels and costs of the Teachers' Pensions Agency.

The Agency was not established until 1 April 1992. The estimate of numbers to be employed during the year 1992-93 is as follows:

Grade	Estimated numbers (full-time equivalent)
Grade 5	1·0
Grade 7	4·0
SEO	4·7
HEO	19·0
EO	43·4
AO	142·6
AA	71·9
SGB1	2·0
SGB2	17·0
Personal Secretary	1·0
	306·6

The estimated staffing cost for 1992-93 is £3·725 million. I have copied this reply to Mr. Forth.

European Community

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the number of civil servants in his Department whose main task is work related wholly or mainly to the European Community.

Mr. Forman: Eight.

Exhibition, Upper Waiting Hall

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the London Institute to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Forman: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Services Committee, arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from Monday 23 November until Friday 27 November 1992.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the cost of the publicity brochures on grant-maintained status that have been sent to all chairs of school government management committees.

Mr. Forth: Publicity brochures on GM status have not been sent to all chairmen of school government management committees. My right hon. Friend recently wrote to the headteacher and chairman of governors of all maintained schools about GM status in the light of responses to the White Paper, "Choice and Diversity: a new framework for schools". That letter invited them to request an information pack if they so wished.

Schools (Complaints)

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what recent reports and representations he has received on the effectiveness of the parents charter in helping parents who want to complain about their child's school; and what plans he has for a simple and accessible complaints system for schools.

Mr. Forth: Parents' complaints about schools are best dealt with locally as far as possible, and many schools and local education authorities provide advice to parents on complaints procedures.

The Government are committed to safeguarding and keeping under review parents' channels of complaint and rights to redress if they are dissatisfied. The Department is currently giving detailed consideration to the report of the National Consumer Council "When things go wrong at school", which we welcome as a contribution to that process of review.

School Meals

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will reintroduce nutritional standards for school meals.

Mr. Forth: It is for those who provide school meals to determine the nutritional balance of the meals on offer.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Inheritance Tax

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the estates in Wales which have been granted relief from inheritance tax on condition that public access is allowed to the land in question in each year from 1984 to the present time.

Mr. Dorrell: The heritage advisory agencies, including the Countryside Council for Wales, can supply information about public access to heritage land including conditionally exempt land. To protect taxpayers' confidentiality, the conditionally exempt land cannot be distinguished.

Electricity Privatisation

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total cost to public funds of electricity privatisation.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer the hon. Member to the replies given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy on 31 January 1992, at column 723, and by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Scotland on 31 January 1992, at column 722. The costs for the privatisation of the Northern Ireland electricity industry will be announced in due course.

Brookvale Trading Estate

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement setting out the reasons why the Inland Revenue valuation office in Birmingham has refused the claim for alteration to the rating list by businesses at the Brookvale trading estate in respect of the effect of overdue work on a motorway repair contract.

Mr. Dorrell: The claim for alteration to the rating list by businesses at the Brookvale trading estate is still under consideration.

The valuation officer, Birmingham has explained to the ratepayers that he is prepared to discuss the position with them and he is currently carrying out further investigations before doing so.

Mortgage Tax Relief

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to study the German system of mortgage tax relief for first-time buyers of homes as an alternative to mortgage interest relief at source.

Mr. Dorrell: The Government have received a number of suggestions recently involving increased mortgage interest relief for first-time buyers, all of which are considered carefully.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to grant mortgage holders the right to capitalise mortgage interest relief at source tax benefit as a means of reducing mortgage debts.

Mr. Dorrell: We have no plans to do so.

Maxwell Pension Trust

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether companies' contributions to the Maxwell Pension Trust are treated by the Inland Revenue as tax allowable.

Mr. Dorrell: The general rule when calculating the trading profits of a company is that a deduction is allowed for expenses incurred wholly and exclusively for business purposes. Whether a company's contributions to the Maxwell Pension Trust satisfy this test will depend on the particular facts of each case.

Friendly Societies

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made in setting up the Friendly Societies Commission under the Friendly Societies Act 1992.

Mr. Dorrell: The Treasury has appointed five commissioners, one full time and four part time, to the Friendly Societies Commission, one more than the minimum required by the Friendly Societies Act 1992. The new commission was formally constituted on 1 October 1992.

Royal Family

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to extend taxation of income to members of the royal family who are currently excluded.

Mr. Lamont: I have no plans to do so.

Corporation Tax

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the change in the yield of corporation tax as a result of the reduction in interest rates from 15 per cent. to 10 per cent.; and what further increase would result from a reduction in interest rates to 6 per cent.

Mr. Dorrell: The yield of corporation tax depends on all forms of company income and on reliefs and allowances, each of which may be affected directly or indirectly by interest rates and by a range of other factors. I regret therefore that it is not possible to answer the question put by the hon. Member.

Customs and Excise (Transfer)

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his most up-to-date assessment of local job opportunities which will arise when the Customs and Excise department moves from London to Liverpool.

Sir John Cope: The new Customs and Excise office at Queen's dock will have room for 1,800 staff. Of these some 300 posts have already been relocated to Liverpool from the south-east. Some 800 further posts will be relocated from Southend to Liverpool from August 1993 to January 1995. The other 700 posts represent existing posts in Liverpool and extra posts created by the migration of work from other parts of the country. Some of these posts will be filled by Customs and Excise staff transferring to Liverpool and others by staff currently employed elsewhere within the Liverpool area.

It is therefore not possible at this stage to give precise figures.

Self-regulatory Organisations

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had on the effectiveness of the self-regulatory organisations set up under the Financial Services Act 1986.

Mr. Dorrell: On 9 July this year, following publication of both the summary of conclusions and findings of the Investment Management Regulatory Organisation's review of its regulation of Maxwell companies and the Securities and Investments Board's own assessment, the Chancellor of the Exchequer asked Andrew Large, the SIB's new chairman, to conduct his own review of how the SIB carries out its regulatory responsibilities.

The detailed terms of reference for the review are:

To review how SIB carries out its regulatory responsibilities under the Financial Services Act, with particular reference to the way it exercises oversight of the recognised bodies for which it is responsible, to ensure that they meet their obligations on a continuing basis.

The review will take full account of SIB's assessment of its own monitoring of IMRO in the Maxwell affair, and any consequent action taken by SIB and IMRO to improve their performance, as well as the general need to strengthen the implementation in practice of regulatory standards.

The review is concentrating on identifying action that might be taken by the SIB and the bodies recognised under the Financial Services Act to improve regulatory performance, including deterring and detecting fraud.

The chairman of the SIB has formed a small team, independent of the SIB, to conduct the review. The review team will be consulting widely. The chairman will submit his report to the Chancellor by the end of March 1993.

After consideration of the chairman's report, the Chancellor will report to the House.

Windsor Great Park

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consultations the Crown Estate undertook before felling began last week of the 17th century avenue of trees in Windsor great park.

Mr. Lamont: I understand that the Crown Estate Commissioners decided earlier in the year, after consultations with English Nature, to proceed with the clear-felling and removal of the avenue of mainly old and decaying lime trees bordering Queen Anne's Ride and their replacement by 1,000 oak saplings over the next four years. Work on the south end of the avenue has started and it will be replanted during the winter months. The commissioners and English Nature are fully aware of the importance of the great park as a habitat for many rare and endangered species of beetles and fungi, mainly associated with old oak trees. Only a few oak trees will be felled in the restoration of the avenue and more that 6,000 old oak trees will remain in the park as a home for invertebrates. Agreement was therefore reached to proceed with the restoration of Queen Anne's Ride as an historic and visually valuable landscape feature for the benefit of future generations to come.

Business Expansion Scheme Lettings

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give figures for the void rate in business expansion scheme lettings (a) as a figure and (b) as a percentage of all business expansion scheme lettings for each year since 1989.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 29 October 1992]: I regret that this information is not available.

Sub-contractors (Payments)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the exceptions allowed in his policy of insisting on prompt payment to sub-contractors by main contractors employed by Government Departments.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 30 October 1992]: There are to be no exceptions. If the hon. Member wishes to raise a particular case, I hope that he will contact me.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of sub-contractors are covered by his new condition of prompt payment of debts owed to them by contractors engaged on government contracts.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 30 October 1992]: This condition is to apply to all sub-contractors.

Wages

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many minutes it took an average wage earner to earn the price of 20 cigarettes (a) 10 and (b) 20 years ago; and how many it takes today.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 2 November 1992]: The lengths of time necessary to work to pay for a selection of goods and services are published annually in "Social Trends". Copies are available in the House of Commons Library.

European Central Bank

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to propose amendments to articles 38.1 and 38.2, of the Maastricht treaty protocol on the statute of the European system of central banks and of the European central bank, to give parliaments access to information held in the ECB.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 2 November 1992]: My right hon. Friend has no plans to propose such amendments.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans Her Majesty's Government have to propose an amendment to the Maastricht treaty protocol on the statute of the European system of central banks and of the European central bank, chapter III, article 7, on the independence of the ECB, to ensure member state parliamentary oversight of the ECB decision-making bodies.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 2 November 1992]: My right hon. Friend has no plans to propose such an amendment.

Fuels

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the trade balance with the other members of the EC in fuels for Britain in (a) 1985 and (b) 1990.

Mr. Dorrell: The trade surplus with the EEC in fuels was £9·2 billion in 1985 and £3·2 billion in 1990.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Probation and Bail Hostels

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many sites have been identified for new probation and bail hostels; and if he will list the probation committee area in which these sites fall.

Mr. Jack: The following six probation areas have selected their sites and now have planning permission and Home Office approval for the establishment of new bail or probation and bail hostels:

Area	Type
Cheshire	Bail
Humberside	Bail
Inner London[1]	Bail
Merseyside	Bail
Surrey	Probation/Bail
West Yorkshire	(1) Probation/Bail (2) Bail

[1] Hostel being developed by voluntary managing committee.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many additional probation and bail hostel places are planned for each of the next three years.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 2 November 1992]: The approved hostel expansion programme which began in 1988-89 has delivered an additional 805 places in bail and probation/bail hostels. The 1992 Home Office annual report indicated that resources would be provided for an additional 400 places by 1995. However, the precise time scale on which these places will become available will depend on the ability of individual probation areas to complete their plans for hostel construction or redevelopment and management.

Probation Staff

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many additional probation staff his Department intends to recruit for each of the next three financial years.

Mr. Jack: The plans set out in the 1992 Home Office annual report provide for increases in probation staff as follows:

Year	Number
1994-95	376

The 1993 report will set out updated plans for the period to 1995-96.

Dangerous Dogs

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of recorded attacks, per month and by region, by (a) dangerous dogs as defined by the Dangerous Dogs Act 1991 and (b) all dogs since the implementation of the Dangerous Dogs Act 1991.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is not available.

Murderers

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many individuals convicted for murder and sentenced to life imprisonment have been released and thereafter convicted for a further murder since 1965.

Mr. Jack: During the period 1965 to 1991, five persons in England and Wales were convicted of murder and received a life sentence, were released on life licence and were then convicted of a second murder. In addition, one person was convicted of murder in England and Wales, released, and was then convicted of a second murder in Scotland.

Police Forces Inquiry

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to receive the report of the committee of inquiry into the conditions of service in the police forces of the United Kingdom; and if it is his intention to publish the document.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend has asked the inquiry to report to him by the end of May 1993. He expects the report to be published.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give his reasons for the decision not to appoint to the committee of inquiry into the conditions of service of the police forces of the United Kingdom a suitably qualified person with experience and knowledge of Scottish police forces.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend has considered it important for the inquiry to be conducted by a fully independent team with appropriate expertise in a number of disciplines. The inquiry is, however, working very closely with the police service.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his latest estimate of the cost incurred so far by the committee of inquiry into the conditions of service in the police forces of the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The estimated cost of the inquiry for the financial year 1992-93 is £720,000. For the financial year 1993-94 the estimated cost is £300,000.

Crown Immunity

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what proposals he has to remove the Crown immunity to prosecution in the national health service with respect to fire legislation;

(2) what policy considerations underlie the continuation of Crown immunity for the national health service with respect to fire legislation.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: National Health Service premises are already subject to the provisions of the Fire Precautions Act 1971. The Crown immunity which they formerly enjoyed was removed on 1 April 1991 by section 60 of the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990.

Leave to Remain Status

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what equivalent categories exist in each of the EC countries to the exceptional leave to remain status in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Exceptional leave to enter or remain in the United Kingdom outside the immigration rules is granted where there is no provision within the immigration rules to grant an application but in all the circumstances it would not be reasonable to refuse it. In the case of applicants for asylum, most EC states have provision for the granting of B status of "de facto" refugee status to applicants who do not fall within the terms of the United Nations refugees convention but have other humanitarian reasons to be allowed to remain.

Immigration

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) during the year 1991, or the most recent period for which statistics are available, how many visa and entry clearance applications from persons who wanted to follow a course of study of not more than six months' duration were refused; how many of them appealed against the decision of the entry clearance officer, and in how many of these appeals were the refusal decision upheld;

(2) during the year 1991, or the most recent period for which statistics are available, how many visa and entry clearance applications were refused from people who sought to enter as a visitor; how many of them appealed against that decision of the entry clearance officer, and in how many of these appeals were the refusal decision upheld;

(3) how many applications for entry clearance for visits and short term, less than six months, stay as students were entertained during each year since 1989; how many in each category were (a) granted and (b) refused; how many of the refusals were appealed against; and how many of such appeals were (a) unsuccessful, (b) successful, (c) withdrawn or abandoned or (d) settled.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Separate information about entry clearance applications and decisions and about appeals from visitors and students is not available. The available information on total non-settlement entry clearance applications made at all posts overseas is given in the table. Non-settlement entry clearance applications are mainly in respect of visitors. Information on appeals against a refusal of entry clearance for temporary purposes is published in table 37 of "Control of Immigration: Statistics—United Kingdom, 1991", Cm 2063. Information for 1990 is in table 37 of Cm 1571 and for 1989 in table 6 of Cm 1124. A copy of these publications is in the Library.

Applications made at all posts overseas for non-settlement entry clearance to the United Kingdom 1989-91

Number of applicants

	Newly received	Granted (Total)	Refused initially
1989	865,986	775,246	45,062
1991	915,614	778,845	77,370

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action is currently undertaken by his Department to offer legal advice and representation from a choice of providers to individuals pursuing immigration and nationality inquiries; and if he will make it his policy to ensure that such services are fully accessible and are sufficient to meet both the current and projected demand.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Home Office funds the United Kingdom Immigrants Advisory Service and the Refugee Legal Centre to provide free legal advice and assistance for people with rights of appeal under immigration legislation and for asylum claimants. The Government are at present considering recommendations about the future provision of legal services for asylum seekers made in a report published on 21 October by an independent planning group chaired by Ms. Usha Prashar. We shall announce our conclusions as soon as possible.

As I said on 8 July in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North (Sir J. Wheeler), at columns 202-3, Mr. Humfrey Malins has been invited to lead a planning group outside the Government to draw up proposals for an organisation to take over UKIAS's general immigration work. This group would welcome views from any interested individual or organisation and hopes to publish its report by the end of the year. Green form legal aid continues to be available in immigration and asylum cases.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to ensure that the immigration and nationality department makes a public commitment to provide a non-discriminatory service, supported by measures to monitor and eradicate discriminatory practice.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The immigration and nationality department is fully committed to a policy of non-discrimination and published a formal policy statement on race relations in 1988. This is displayed prominently in all public areas at the headquarters building in Croydon as well as at ports around the country. The immigration rules state specifically that staff should carry out their work without regard to race or colour.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the publicity material produced by the immigration and nationality department for actual and prospective applicants; and in which languages such publicity material is available.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The material includes the following. Some of the items are published in Farsi, Bengali, Hindi, Arabic, Gujarati, Turkish, Chinese, Punjabi and Urdu and these arrangements are kept under review.

Form number	Publicity material
RON 29 (AP)	Information about Au Pairs.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to ensure that the immigration and nationality department publishes standards for service delivery to include arrangements for regular monitoring, the review of service provision and maximum time scales for dealing with applications.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Service standards for the immigration and nationality department are being developed and published, for example in the IND annual report and the immigration service (ports) operating plan 1992-93.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last reviewed the instructions to immigration officers.

Mr. Charles Wardle: These instructions are kept continuously under review and amended from time to time.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place a copy of the instructions to immigration officers in the Library.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No. It is not the usual practice to publish such internal instructions.

Asylum and Immigration Appeals Bill

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to offer the assistance of his Department to brief the hon. Members appointed to the Committee on the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Bill; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Officials always seek to respond positively to requests for factual information from right hon. and hon. Members. My right hon. and learned Friend and I will look carefully at any specific requests for briefing for Standing Committee members.

Animals (Scientific Procedures)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to extend the code of practice for the housing and care of animals used in scientific procedures to breeding and supplying establishments.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, North (Ms. Walley) on 29 October 1992, at column 764.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to undertake a review into the necessity of primate use in research and testing.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Animal Procedures Committee, which has a statutory responsibility under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 to advise the Home Secretary on animal procedures matters, is currently undertaking a review of primate use. We look forward to receiving the advice of the committee in due course.

Asylum

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will publish the full terms and form of the entry clearance which can be issued abroad to those seeking entry clearance for the purpose of making an asylum application;

(2) if he will list the proposals brought forward since 1979 to make it easier for asylum seekers to gain pre-entry clearance;

(3) in what circumstances it is possible for a person to claim asylum in the United Kingdom having admitted to an entry clearance officer that this was the intention;

(4) if it is his practice for an individual who has been granted entry clearance abroad for asylum purposes to apply for asylum at the port of entry into the United Kingdom or at the port abroad;

(5) if he will bring forward proposals to make it easier for asylum seekers to gain pre-entry clearance in their home countries.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The obligations of the 1951 United Nations convention on the status of refugees are not at large but apply only when a refugee is in the territory of a state party to the convention. Nevertheless, the Government are prepared to grant entry clearance abroad to a person who wishes to travel to the United Kingdom in order to make an application for asylum, if he meets the definition of a refugee under the terms of article 1A of the 1951 convention and has close ties with the United Kingdom such as to make it the most appropriate country of refuge for him. Entry clearance would normally be granted in the form of a visit visa or its equivalent. The person would be free to apply for asylum at the port on arrival in the United Kingdom or direct to the Home Office after arrival. Close dependants of people recognised as refugees in the United Kingdom may apply for entry clearance in their country of origin to join the sponsor on the basis of family reunion. On arrival they may apply to be recognised as refugees. I have no plans to change these arrangements.

EC Interior and Justice Meetings

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the interior and justice meetings for the purposes of intergovernmental co-operation within the European Community which have taken place since 9 April, giving the date and nature of the meeting in each case.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Interior and Justice Ministers have met on two occasions since 9 April 1992. A meeting of Trevi Immigration Ministers was held on 11 and 12 June 1992, and an extraordinary meeting was held on 18 September on the subject of organised crime.

Executive Agencies

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list, for the last 12 months, the titles of papers published by the chief executive of each executive agency for which he is responsible;

(2) if he will list the fact-finding visits made in the last 12 months by the chief executive of each executive agency for which he is responsible; and what were the findings resulting from each visit;

(3) if he will list by grade the numbers of staff and their cost for 1991-92 and the estimated figures for 1992-93 for each executive agency for which he is responsible.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the agencies concerned: the Forensic Science Service, the United Kingdom Passport Agency and the Fire Service College. I have asked the chief executive of each of these agencies to arrange for a reply to be given.

FACT FINDING VISITS AND PUBLICATIONS

The Secretary of State has asked the individual Chief Executives of the Executive Agencies within the Home Department to write directly to you in answer to your two Parliamentary Questions about fact finding visits which we have made and the papers we have published during the last 12 months. I am replying as the Chief Executive of the Fire Service College which became an Executive Agency and Trading Fund on 1 April 1992.

Although the College's principal customer is and always will be the United Kingdom Fire Service, one of our other business objectives is to expand the training we provide to industry, commerce and overseas fire brigades. In that connection I have made fact finding visits during the last 12 months to the United States and the Netherlands, and the Deputy Commandant of the College has made similar visits to several countries in Europe, the Middle and Far East, and Africa. Their purpose was to promote the College and assess the opportunities for new business.

The visits raised the College's profile in the countries concerned and confirmed that in many instances they have a significant need for fire related training which we could meet. The College's Marketing Department is following up the enormous interest the visits have generated in an attempt to win training contracts. Those efforts have already met with considerable success.

I have not formally published any papers within this period. However, I did give a paper at the "Industrial Fire World Exposition" in Texas in April this year which was subsequently reported widely in the United States.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Letter from Dr. Janet Thompson to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 2 November 1992:

You recently tabled three Parliamentary Questions seeking information about agencies. As you know, the arrangement now is that the Chief Executive of an Executive Agency, with the agreement of the Minister, replies to Members of Parliament on operational matters. I am therefore replying on behalf of the Forensic Science Service (FSS).

The FSS gained Agency Status on 1 April 1991 and at the same time a system of direct charging was introduced. Since then I have made several visits to outside organisations to bring their experience to bear here. During the past twelve months I have spent 2 days with executives at Hoskins Group PLC in order to gain a wider understanding of organisation development and customer relations. I have also visited Forensic laboratories in the Netherlands as well as United Kingdom laboratories to contribute to an exchange of information on forensic matters.

Your second Question concerns papers published by Chief Executives. The FSS Central Research and Support Establishment based at the Aldermaston laboratory circulates its research papers to a limited number of law enforcement agencies worldwide but these are not generally available and could not be described as published in the wider sense. Individuals are on occasion permitted to publish their research papers in the scientific press under their own names. The FSS is very shortly to publish its first annual report since becoming an agency. A copy will be placed in the House of Commons Library.

Your third Question asked about the number of staff in the FSS by grade, and their cost, in 1991-92, and an estimate for 1992-93. The information is enclosed in tabular form. The figures for staff show the average staff in post over each year.

Letters from Mr. J. E. Hayzeldean to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 30 October 1992:

FACT FINDING VISITS

The Home Secretary has asked me to write to you in response to your Parliamentary Question about fact-finding visits by me in my capacity as chief executive of the United Kingdom Passport Agency.

In the last 12 months, I have visited all the regional Passport Offices in Belfast, Glasgow, Liverpool, London, Newport and Peterborough. In addition I have visited other towns and cities in the UK to meet suppliers and other organisations with which the Passport Agency has dealings. The findings from these visits have been fed into the Passport Agency's corporate and business plans.

PUBLICATIONS

The Home Secretary has asked me to write to you in response to your Parliamentary Question about publications by the UK Passport Agency in the last 12 months. Apart from the normal passport application forms and guidance notes, we have published the following:

Corporate plan 1992-95
Business plan 1992-93
Summary of targets and plans
Publicity leaflet (Beat the Rush).

We hope shortly to be publishing our Annual Report and Accounts for 1991-92.

Letter from J. Hayzeldean to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 3 November 1992:

Staff Costs

The Home Secretary has asked me to write to you in response to your Parliamentary Question about staff costs in the United Kingdom Passport Agency. I have set out below, as requested, our staff numbers by grade, their cost for 1991-92 and the comparable estimated figures for 1992-93. For 1991-92, the table shows average staff numbers in permanent posts. For 1992-93, the table shows the current complement of permanent posts.

	1991-92	1992-93
Grade 5	1·0	1·0
Grade 6	3·0	3·0
Grade 7	10·0	10·0
Senior Executive Officer	13·0	15·0
Higher Executive Officer	45·0	47·0
Executive Officer	158·0	156·0
Administrative Officer	641·0	631·0
Administrative Assistant	272·5	337·0
Personal Secretary	4·0	4·0
Typing Manager	2·0	2·0

Telex Operator	2·0	0·0
Support Grade Band I	18·0	19·0
Support Grade Band II	59·0	68·0
Support Manager III	1·0	1·0
Total	1,250·5	1,316·0

The costs of employing these staff in 1991-92 amounted to £13,853,000 (salaries plus employers national insurance contributions). The costs of employing seasonal staff and overtime working amounted to a further £2,256,000.

The costs of employing staff in 1992-93 is expected to amount to £15,450,000 (salaries and ERNIC). The costs of employing seasonal staff and overtime working in 1992-93 is expected to amount to a further £3,087,000.

PRIME MINISTER

Sir Peter Kemp

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 23 October, Official Report, columns 389, what redundancy payments were paid to Sir Peter Kemp following his early retirement.

The Prime Minister: None. As I said in my earlier answers on 23 October, at columns 388-89, Sir Peter received immediate payments of pension and lump sum due on retirement, six months salary in lieu of notice and a compensation payment.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 23 October, Official Report, columns 388-89, if he will make a statement on the time and resources given to exploring opportunities of re-employment and retraining for Sir Peter Kemp.

The Prime Minister: I am satisfied that all practicable alternative posts for Sir Peter Kemp were considered before he was asked to take early retirement from the civil service.

Civil Servants

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 23 October, Official Report, column 388, which posts of permanent secretary have been filled by promotion or transfer since the beginning of 1992; and if he will give the dates in each case.

The Prime Minister: Since January 1992 the following permanent secretary appointments have been made on promotion or transfer:

Name	Department	Date
G. A. Hart	Health	2 February
Sir C. W. France	Defence	28 February
W. P. McLennan	Central Statistical Office	2 March
G. H. Phillips	National Heritage	21 April
Mrs. B. J. L. Mills QC	Crown Prosecution Service	21 April
R. T. J. Wilson	Environment	3 June
R. C. Mottram	Public Service and Science	17 August
G. A. Hosker	Treasury Solicitor's Department	19 October

Libya

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will set out the current position in respect to United Nations sanctions against Libya.

The Prime Minister: The United Nations Security Council reviewed the sanctions against Libya on 12 August and agreed that there was no justification for lifting them. Sanctions will be lifted only when Libya has complied with UN Security Council resolutions 731 and 748.

European Community

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister what is the number of civil servants in his office whose main task is work related or mainly to the European Community.

The Prime Minister: None of my staff's time is wholly related to work on the European Community, but a number spend significant amounts of time on work related to the European Community.

Windsor Great Park

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister if the Crown Estate will make it its policy to halt the continued felling of the 17th century tree avenue in Windsor great park.

The Prime Minister: The Crown Estate Commissioners consulted English Nature before taking the decision to clear fell, remove and replant Queen Anne's Ride in Windsor great park with 1,000 oak saplings.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister if Her Majesty's Government will bring forward legislation to amend the Crown Estate Act 1961 so as to vest responsibility for Windsor great park with the Department of the Environment.

The Prime Minister: No.

Forestry

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Prime Minister if he is satisfied with co-ordination of Government policy on forestry and deforestation; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I am satisfied that the arrangements for the co-ordination of Government policy on forestry and deforestation are working well.

In addition to the normal day-to-day contacts between Departments, an interdepartmental steering group for forestry was set up in 1990. This keeps under review the development and implementation of forestry and related environmental policies in Great Britain to ensure that they remain complementary.

The interdepartmental working group on forestry issues relating to the UN Conference on Environment and Development which was established in the run-up to the Rio summit is being continued. This will ensure that our post-Rio policies relating to forests, including deforestation, are effectively integrated.

Maastricht Treaty

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister what communications have been received from the Danish authorities in the last week regarding the Maastricht treaty.

The Prime Minister: The Danish proposals on the Maastricht treaty were approved by the Folketing market committee on 30 October and were transmitted to me, as President of the European Council, later that day. A copy of the proposals is available in the Library.

Castle Vale Housing Action Trust

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Prime Minister if he will hold a meeting with Mrs. Carole Rafferty, Mr. Kim Rose and Mr. Sydney Gettings of the Castle Vale community action team, Birmingham, concerning the proposed Castle Vale housing action trust.

The Prime Minister: My hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning met tenants from the Castle Vale estate earlier this year to discuss the proposal for a housing action trust. He expects to do so again when the assessment of feasibility work on the proposal is complete.

Colombian Coal

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister what policy the Government have adopted towards the complaint made by British Coal to the European Commission, on the basis of the Commission's anti-dumping rules, about the importation of Colombian coal into the United Kingdom.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister what action he has taken to expedite an investigation by the European Commission into complaints by British Coal that supplies of Colombian coal to the United Kingdom constitute dumping; when inquiries into the complaint were undertaken; when the inquiry into the complaint will be complete and made public; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 29 October 1992]: British Coal's anti-dumping complaint to the European Commission against imports of coal from Colombia, the United States and China is a matter for the Commission to consider. The Government look to the Commission to take seriously its responsibilities in this area and therefore to consider British Coal's complaint carefully. I understand that the Commission has not yet taken a decision on whether to open an investigation.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Prime Minister what undertakings have been given to the Colombian Government by the British Government on British Coal's anti-dumping petition currently before the European Commission.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 30 October 1992]: None.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister on what dates he had meetings with representatives of the Government of Colombia at which the sale and supply of Colombian coal to the United Kingdom was discussed; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 29 October 1992]: I have nothing further to add to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Clackmannan (Mr. O'Neill) earlier today.

Mr. Macklnlay: To ask the Prime Minister if he discussed the importation of Colombian coal during his last visit to that country.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 29 October 1992]: I have nothing further to add to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Clackmannan (Mr. O'Neill) earlier today.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions he had in June with the President of Colombia, Cesar Gaviria, on the market for Colombian coal in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 29 October 1992]: I have nothing further to add to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Clackmannan (Mr. O'Neill) earlier today.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Explosives

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what guidelines his Department has issued to the Health and Safety Executive on its issuing of import licences for explosives.

Mr. Needham: Under the Explosives Act 1875 and related legislation, the Health and Safety Executive (HSE) is responsible for issuing import licences for explosives. My Department has no locus in the matter and has issued no guidance to the HSE.

Nuclear Energy

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what were the main proposals put forward by Her Majesty's permanent representative to the International Atomic Energy Agency at the agency's 1992 annual general conference; and if he will make a statement on decisions taken at the conference that will affect the United Kingdom nuclear industry and Her Majesty's Government's present nuclear policy.

Mr. Eggar: As leader of the United Kingdom delegation, I called for action to improve safety in eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union. On behalf of the European Community and its member states, I also called for further measures to strengthen nuclear safeguards, and congratulated the IAEA on the important contribution it has made to international efforts to uncover and render harmless Iraq's weapons of mass destruction. I have placed a copy of my speech in the Library of the House of Commons.

ECGD

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list, for the last 12 months, the titles of papers published by the Export Credits Guarantee Department.

Mr. Needham: During the last 12 months, ECGD has presented its trading accounts for 1990-91 to Parliament. In addition, ECGD has also submitted various explanatory memoranda to Parliament concerning international developments in relation to the OECD consensus on export credits and EC issues. These documents have been placed in the Library.

Rough Diamond Trade

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the current published rough diamond trade worth in the United Kingdom; what were the comparative figures for other European Community countries; and if he will show these figures as a plus or minus percentage to the United Kingdom figure.

Mr. Needham: The information is in the table:

Tropical Timber

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy during the United Kingdom's presidency of the EC to encourage a Community-wide moratorium on the import of raw logs from the Sarawak region of Malaysia.

Mr. Needham: No. Import restrictions would rob forests of their value and serve only to speed up the rate of deforestation to free land for alternative uses. Our efforts are best directed at persuading all tropical timber-producing countries to manage their forests on a sustainable basis. The Government of Malaysia have re-affirmed their commitment to the International Tropical Timber Organisation to reduce significantly the amount of timber extracted from Sarawak and to work towards the objective of exporting timber only from sustainably managed forests by the year 2000.

Import Statistics

Mr. Garnier: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will give details of the total United Kingdom imports by value of all manufactured goods from (a) the United States of America, (b) China, (c) Hong Kong and (d) Taiwan for each of the last five years, split between textiles, clothing and other.

Mr. Needham: The figures requested are as follows:

Coal Industry

Mr. Stevenson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will give the production levels of (a) Trentham colliery complex and (b) the seven pits in the Selby area, for the last full year.

Mr. Eggar: This is an operational matter for British Coal.

Refrigerators

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many domestic fridges were imported from Germany, in each year since 1988; and what was their total value in each of these years.

Mr. Needham: The information is given in the table:

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many British made domestic fridges were exported in each year since 1988; and how many fridges currently sold in the United Kingdom are imported from other countries.

Mr. Needham: The country of manufacture of refrigerators exported from, or sold in, the United Kingdom is not collected. Import and export information is given in the table:

United Kingdom Trade in Domestic Refrigerators[1], 1988-1991 ('000 units)

Textiles

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received about extension of the European Community discipline on state subsidies to synthetic fibre production; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: United Kingdom industry has told me that it hopes to see the synthetic fibres discipline renewed and strengthened. My Department has told the Commission—which has sole responsibility for decisions in this area—that the British Government strongly support this objective.

Animal Testing (Cosmetics)

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will support proposals being put forward to the Council of Ministers to end the use of animals for the testing of cosmetics products and ingredients.

Mr. Leigh: The Government's policy in the negotiations on the proposed sixth Council amendment to the cosmetics directive is to keep animal testing to a minimum consistent with human safety. We will continue to press for reduction in animal testing and we hope that during our presidency member states will agree to the phasing out of testing on animals as soon as they can be replaced with suitably validated alternatives.

Auditing Practices Board

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish details of the oral and written comments made by his representative on the Auditing Practices Board in relation to the going concern exposure draft.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: My Department's representative on the Auditing Practices Board participates in its debates, but no verbatim record is kept and as a non-voting member he does not take a position when the board reaches its decisions. I have placed in the Library a copy of my Department's response to the board's exposure draft on going concern.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what priorities he has suggested to the Auditing Practices Board.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has not suggested priorities to the Auditing Practices Board, but in October last year my Department's representative responded to a general invitation to board members to identify topics for early attention. Those suggested on behalf of the Department included illegal acts, going concern, the role and function of the audit, the auditing of computer-based systems, the relationship between international and United Kingdom auditing standards and guidance, and a programme for revising the existing body of guidance, including the conversion of guidelines to standards.

Company Accounts

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many company accounts he has referred to the financial reporting review panel.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Three.

Small Firm Bankruptcies

Mr. Welsh: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he next plans to meet the Federation of Small Businesses to discuss the number of small firm bankruptcies in 1991; and what are the numbers involved.

Mr. Leigh: I have no plans to meet the Federation of Small Businesses. Baroness Denton, in her capacity as Minister for Small Firms, has frequent meetings with the federation and all the major small firms organisations to discuss a range of issues.

There were 47,467 insolvencies in England and Wales in 1991.

Post Office

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the external advisers on the future of Post Office services; and what is the estimated expenditure on the provision of such advice in the current year.

Mr. Leigh: Kleinwort Benson and KPMG Peat Marwick have been appointed to advise the Government on the Post Office review. Price Waterhouse has been appointed to advise the Government on the method and timing of the sale of Parcelforce. A total of £500,000 has so far been allocated to this work from within class IV vote 2, subhead A4 (other services) of Supply Estimates 1992-93.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will place in the Library the Kleinwort Benson report on the future of postal services.

Mr. Leigh: Any reports produced by the Government's advisers on the Post Office are internal Government documents. I do not intend, therefore, to place such documents in the Library.

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many times his officials have met the liquidators of BCCI, with the dates and the purposes of the meetings.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: My officials met one or more of the joint liquidators of BCCI on 26 March, 19 May, and 23 July 1992. On each occasion the holding of a meeting of creditors, pursuant to section 141 of the Insolvency Act 1986, was discussed. At the 23 July meeting the exercise by the joint liquidators of their powers under schedule 4, part I and II of the Insolvency Act was also discussed.

Atomic Energy Authority

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what financial target and capital expenditure limit has been set for the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority for 1992-93.

Mr. Eggar: The United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority's financial target for 1992-93 has been set as an 11 per cent. return on net assets on a current cost basis —before long-term interest payable and extraordinary items—subject to the outcome of a revaluation of the AEA's assets. I have also approved the AEA's capital expenditure programme for the year at £27·3 million.

Serbia and Montenegro

Mr. Meacher: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will set out the level of trade, both exports and imports, with Serbia and Montenegro for each month in the current year by each main category of commodities.

Sir John Cope: I have been asked to reply. Trade with Serbia and Montenegro has been identified separately from that with the other former Yugoslav republics since 1 July 1992.

The figures for the subsequent months are recorded as follows:

	Imports £	Exports £
July	215,783	Nil
August	206,938	33,477
September	Nil	45,379

A further breakdown by commodity cannot be published at this time as this would identify individual consignments. Both imports and exports for Serbia and Montenegro require licences and the goods permitted to be exported are strictly for medical purposes, foodstuffs and humanitarian aid.

GATT

Mr. Spearing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what reports have been received by the Industry Council of the European Community from its Commission concerning its negotiating activities as representing the Community in the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade; what consultations the Commission has had with the Council on these matters; and what was the last date when it provided the Commission with a negotiating mandate.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 29 October 1992]: The Foreign Affairs Council is the forum in which Community Trade Ministers discuss external trade issues. The Commission reports regularly to the Council on progress in the GATT negotiations, and last did so on 6 October. The most recent guidance given to the Commission was at the European Council in Birmingham on 16 October, on which my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister reported to the House on 20 October, Official Report, column 319.

Manufacturing Trade

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what effect the increase since the second half of 1973 in the terms of trade for finished manufactures and in the relative unit value of exports of finished manufactures has had on the volume of imports and exports and on manufacturing output; and if he will publish a table showing for finished manufactures for each year since 1970 the percentage increase/reduction in the terms of trade and in relative export unit values together with (a) the increase in the volume of imports and exports of both finished and semi-finished manufactures and (b) the increase in manufacturing output.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 29 October 1992]: The Department does not produce estimates of the effects of terms of trade and relative export unit values on trade flows and output.

The information requested for relative export unit values is not available. The other statistical information requested is given in the table.

Car Prices

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the percentage reduction in the value of sterling against the deutschmark since July; and what effect that has had on the retail price of cars imported from Germany.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 30 October 1992]: The percentage reduction since July was 14·3 per cent. as at 23 October 1992.

The reduction in value of sterling has exerted pressure on German manufacturers to increase the prices of cars they export to the United Kingdom in order to retain profit margins. The wide variety of other factors which affect pricing policies of car manufacturers and the current reduced demand in the United Kingdom car market have made them reluctant to do so. Much will depend on the value that sterling settles at after the current upheavals in the currency markets have passed.

Exports

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his estimate of the percentage manufactured-import content of United Kingdom exports of manufactures in standard industrial trade classification 7-8 in 1991 and of the increase since (a) 1970 and (b) 1979; and if he will publish a table showing for each year since 1970 and the current year to date the percentage increase in United Kingdom output of such manufactures together with the increase in the volume of output, imports and exports of (i) intermediate goods and (ii) semi-manufactures.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 30 October 1992]: The latest available analysis of the import content of manufactures is for 1985. Estimates of the destination of imports were published for 1985 by the Central Statistical Office in "Input-Output Tables for the UK, 1985" (table 6). Estimates were similarly published for some earlier years, including 1970 and 1979. These published data could be used to produce estimates of the import content of exports in SITC 7-8 for the earlier years, but only at disproportionate cost.

Output information is not available for finished manufactures, semi-manufactures or intermediate goods. These categories of goods are defined only in the trade classification. Volume indices for imports and exports of these categories are regularly published in tables B8 and C9 of the "Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics", which is available in the Library of the House.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people are currently receiving invalidity benefit in each standard planning region in Northern Ireland; and what is the expected expenditure in 1992-93 in each such region.

Mr. Hanley: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Social Security Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Alec Wylie. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Your recent Parliamentary Question asking for the numbers of people currently receiving Invalidity Benefit in each standard planning region in Northern Ireland and the expected expenditure in 1992-93 in each such region has been passed to me for reply as I am responsible for the Northern Ireland Social Security Agency.

The information is not available in the form you requested because Northern Ireland is regarded as one region for Invalidity Benefit purposes. However, you may be interested to know that at September 1992 there were 60,048 people in Northern Ireland receiving Invalidity Benefit and that the total expenditure on this benefit for 1992/93 is estimated at £238·4m.

I hope this information is helpful.

Ozone Depletion

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to introduce regional UV-B monitoring systems; what initiatives he has taken to encourage Northern Irish industry to switch to non-ozone-depleting substances; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The National Radiological Protection Board has been measuring levels of UV radiation at three sites in Great Britain since 1988. There are no plans for separate monitoring in Northern Ireland.

The phase-out of man-made chloroflurocarbons under the Montreal protocol will require industry to switch to non-ozone-depleting substances. Northern Ireland industries which require more information may contact the industrial research technology unit's freephone environmental inquiry point, and their attention has already been drawn to this facility.

Racial Discrimination

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he intends that persons who are the offspring, or other more distant descendants, of persons of different races shall be covered by legislation against racial discrimination.

Mr. Hanley: In March 1992 the then Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, my right hon. Friend the Member for the City of London and Westminster, South (Mr. Brooke), agreed in principle to the publication of a consultative document which would examine the scope for legislation on racial discrimination and consider what additional action ought to be taken by the Government to promote equity of treatment for ethnic groups. Consideration of the content of possible legislation will be informed by the outcome of the consultative process.

River Bush

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table to show the salmon redd count in the River Bush and its tributaries for each of the last five years; what is his assessment as to the number of redds needed to maintain the present five-year average number of salmon and grilse entering the system; and what is his assessment as to the number of such fish the system could support and the number of redds necessary to attain that number.

Mr. Hanley: The information on salmon redd counts in the River Bush and its tributaries is published in the annual reports of the Fisheries Conservancy Board for 1989, 1990, and 1991, copies of which are available in the Library.

The work on assessing the number of salmon redds required to maintain and support the system is still ongoing and the information requested is not available.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the total number of (a) salmon and (b) grilse taken by anglers in the River Bush in each of the past 10 years or as much of such information as is available to him.

Mr. Hanley: The available information is published in the annual reports of the Fisheries Conservancy Board for the years 1988-91 inclusive, copies of which are available in the Library.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what evidence he has that (a) increasing numbers and (b) an increasing percentage of salmon and grilse enter the River Bush in each of (i) September, (ii) October and (iii) November; and if he will publish the figures.

Mr. Hanley: The late runs of salmon and grilse into the River Bush over the past six years was as follows:

	Four-week period ending
	30 September		28 October		25 November
	Number	per cent.	Number	per cent.	Number	per cent.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what costs have been incurred by the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland in each of the past five years and the current year in operating the River Bush angling fishery; what has been the total income from angling in those years; and where a detailed analysis of the costs and income is published by his Office.

Mr. Hanley: Operational costs for the angling aspects of the Department's activities at the River Bush are not recorded separately.

Such information on angling income as is available relates only to the special angling stretches and is published in the annual reports on the sea and inland fisheries of Northern Ireland for 1987-91, copies of which are available in the Library.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table to show how many angling permits were issued for each stretch of the River Bush in the (a) 1989, (b) 1990, (c) 1991 and (d) 1992 angling seasons up to 30 September, what sums were received for those permits each month; and how many salmon, grilse and sea trout were caught in each stretch in each month and in total, or as much of such information as is available to him at present.

Mr. Hanley: The number of angling permits sold for each stretch of the River Bush between 1989 and 1992 and the annual income received was as follows:

		To 30 September
Stretch	1989	1990	1991	1992

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table to show the number of (a) salmon and (b) grilse entering the River Bush in each month of each of the past five years and the current year, indicating how many fish in each month were (i) one sea winter fish, (ii) two sea winter fish and (iii) three sea winter fish; and what correlation there was between each sea winter class, their weight and how many were classed as spring, summer, autumn and winter running fish.

Mr. Hanley: The number of salmon and grilse entering the River Bush system in each month for the years 1987 to 1991 was as follows:

Separate figures are not available for salmon and grilse.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table to show how many angling permits were issued for each stretch of the River Bush in the period 1 to 20 October, inclusive, during the current year; what sums were received for these permits; and how many salmon and grilse were caught in each stretch in that period, or as much as such information as is presently available to him.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is as follows:

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table to show his estimate of the number of salmon smolts descending the River Bush in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Hanley: Estimates of the number of wild Atlantic salmon smolts descending the River Bush in the years 1987-91 are as follows:

Year	Smolts
1987	22,156
1988	22,994
1989	17,812

European Community

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the number of civil servants in his Department whose main task is work related wholly or mainly to the European Community.

Mr. Mates: Fifty-nine.

Health and Social Services Trusts

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the particular circumstances in Northern Ireland which underlie the Government's decision to sponsor trust status for social service units in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: The health and personal social services in Northern Ireland have an integrated management structure which has been delivering high-quality services for many years. The Government's proposals for reform, set out in the White Paper "Working for Patients", extend to Northern Ireland and the benefits inherent in those reforms should be applied with equal advantage to the people of Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the applications received for health and social services trust status in Northern Ireland to date, indicating those that have been successful, those that are pending, those that have been withdrawn, and those postponed or unsuccessful and indicating the likely timetable for introduction.

Mr. Hanley: In the first round in Northern Ireland, one application for HSS trust status was received from the Royal group of hospitals. It was established as an HSS trust from 1 April 1992 and will come into operation on 1 April 1993.

Applications for trust status in the second round have been received from the following units:

Belfast city hospital
Craigavon area hospitals group
Mater Infirmorum hospital
Ulster, North Down and Ards hospital unit
Green Park unit of management
Eastern ambulance service
North Down and Ards community unit
North and West Belfast community unit
South and East Belfast community unit
Down and Lisburn unit of management

A decision on the applications which have been successful in the second round, and the date on which they will come into operation will be made shortly.

To date, no unit has withdrawn its application.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps are being taken to encourage more HSS units in Northern Ireland to apply for trust status.

Mr. Hanley: My noble Friend will announce the launch of the third round of trusts shortly. The chief executive will then write to all directly managed units inviting expressions of interest in the third round of HSS trusts. It will be a matter for those units to decide for themselves whether to make an application for trust status.

Neil Latimer

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action he proposes to take in the light of the further statment made by witness A in the case of Neil Latimer.

Mr. Mates: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State received yesterday an affidavit giving an account of a conversation with witness A, in which she is reported to have made a number of comments about Mr. Latimer's case. My right hon. and learned Friend is considering it.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Fraud

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will state for his Department's benefit fraud programme for the year 1991-92 (a) the number of staff years used, (b) the running costs, (c) the additional benefit recovered and (d) the unit cost ratio of cost to benefit.

Miss Widdecombe: The investigation of benefit fraud is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefit's Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. Andrew Smith, dated 2 November 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the investigation of social security fraud.

You asked how many staff years had been used in the benefit fraud programme during 1991-92; the running costs; the additional benefit recovered and the unit cost ratio of cost to benefit.

Figures are not available to show the number of staff years used. However in 1991-92 2,873 staff were employed to detect and prosecute fraud at a cost of £62·5 million.

In 1991-92 the estimated savings that accrued from the investigation of fraud totalled £427 million. This is represented by a unit cost ratio of cost to benefit of 1:6·6.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many asylum seekers have been (a) charged and (b) convicted of offences relating to defrauding his Department in each year since 1962.

Miss Widdecombe: Prosecution statistics do not indicate the origin or status of individuals. The information requested is, therefore, not available.

Correspondence

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what guidelines are issued to his Department for the processing of correspondence from hon. Members; and what is the average delay between receipt of correspondence from, and the date of response to, an hon. Member.

Miss Widdecombe: Guidance to the Department, including its agencies, makes it clear that Ministers and chief executives aim to reply to letters from hon. Members within an average of four weeks of receipt. So far, in 1992-93 average response time for both Ministers and chief executives has been 21 working days.

Training Courses

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security under what circumstances and for how long a trainee who is receiving income support, who is participating in a local authority or voluntary sector training course supported by the European social fund, may temporarily leave the United Kingdom as part of a transnational visit to another EC country as part of his or her training course without affecting his or her entitlement to income support; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: Unemployed trainees who undertake non-governmental training courses funded by the European social fund must continue to satisfy the normal conditions of entitlement for benefits for unemployment, including income support. Consequently, they must be available for, and actively seeking, work.

Income support recipients who are required to be available for work are not entitled to income support for the duration of an absence from the United Kingdom.

Consultants

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list all of the reports his Department has commissioned from external consultants in each of the last three years; for each of the last three years, how many reports from external consultants to his Department led to further consultancy work being commissioned, stating for each of these who were the original and subsequent consultants and briefly describing the subject matter of the consultancy work; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: Details of all the external management consultancy projects commissioned by the Department of Social Security in the financial years 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92 have been placed in the Library.

Information concerning the commissioning of further work as a result of an external consultancy project is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Housing Benefit

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy to ensure that housing benefit is available to all persons who cannot afford to pay rent.

Mr. Burt: Housing benefit is available, on an income-related basis, to anyone who has a commercial liability to pay rent for his or her home.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will seek to introduce a new housing benefit system to include households paying mortgages.

Mr. Burt: We have no such plans.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on what dates in west Lancashire the cold weather payments system was triggered during the winter of 1991-92; and how many households received payments on each occasion.

Mr. Scott: Such information as is available is in the Library.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy to provide assistance to households in need through cold weather credits prior to the onset of winter.

Mr. Scott: No. Income support rates provide for normal day-to-day living expenses, including heating costs throughout the year. Cold weather payments already provide extra assistance to the most vulnerable income support recipients during periods of exceptionally cold weather.

Trainees

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security where a local authority or voluntary sector training provider who is running a training course supported by the European social fund wishes to reimburse the expenses of his or her trainees who are in receipt of income support (a) what is the maximum value of a daily luncheon voucher that can be paid to the trainee without affecting his or her entitlement to income support and (b) under what circumstances a trainee who has to pay his or her daily travelling expenses to and from his or her place of training in cash can have them reimbursed without affecting his or her entitlement to income support; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: In calculating entitlement to income support, the value of any regular payment in kind is ignored. As long as a daily luncheon voucher is not redeemable for cash, there is no limit to the value of such vouchers which can be given without affecting entitlement to income support.

Any contractual payment to reimburse the fares of a person undertaking training on a course supported by the European social fund will be taken fully into account in calculating entitlement to income support. However, any non-contractual, voluntary payment intended and used for fares will be fully disregarded.

Benefit Statistics

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give the total number, and the proportion of (a) single pensioners, (b) pensioner couples and (c) all pensioners who receive (i) income support, (ii) housing benefit, (iii) community charge benefit or (iv) one or more of income support, community charge benefit or housing benefit.

Mr. Burt: The available information is given in the tables:

(i) Income support
Single people 60 or over	1,362	11·72
Couples (at least one aged 60 or over)	213	See Note 3
All cases	1,575	See Note 3
(ii) Housing benefit
Single people 60 or over	1,517	13·06
Couples (at least one aged 60 or over)	493	See Note 3
All cases	2,011	See Note 3
(iii) Community charge benefit
Single people 60 or over	2,296	19·75
Couples (at least one aged 60 or over)	983	See Note 3
All cases	3,278	See Note 3
(iv) Combined IS/HB/CCB (In receipt of one or more benefit)
Single people 60 or over	2,800	24·09
Couples (at least one aged 60 or over)	1,069	See Note 3
All cases	3,869	See Note 3

2. All figures rounded to the nearest thousand.
3. Population figures are not available for the number of couples, one or both of which are aged 60 or over.
4. Population figures relate to 1990 (latest available information).
5. There is considerable overlap within the benefits. Most recipients of IS also receive CCB. Some recipients of IS also receive HB.

Welfare Benefits

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to end the Government's statutory duty to maintain the value of welfare benefits in line with the cost of living; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The plans for the uprating of benefits will be announced to the House in due course.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give the number of (a) claims and (b) successful claims for unemployment benefit made by those paying the special class II national insurance contribution rate for share fishermen in the most convenient available years before and after the introduction of the weekly earnings rule.

Mr. Burt: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what further changes are being considered in the level of unemployment benefits.

Mr. Burt: The level of unemployment benefit, with other benefits, is kept under review. We shall be making a statement to the House in due course on the uprating of social security benefits.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are currently receiving invalidity benefit in each standard planning region of England and in Scotland and Wales; and what is in the expected expenditure for 1992-93 in each such region.

Mr. Scott: Information is not available in the form requested. Available information about the numbers of recipients of invalidity benefit, by standard region, is in the table[1]. Planned expenditure on invalidity benefit for 1992-93 is £5,695[2].

Regions	Numbers
Scotland	181,400
Wales	146,600
England
Northern	126,300
Yorkshire and Humberside	124,500
East Midlands	74,200
East Anglia	28,800
South East	219,200

SCOTLAND

National Testing

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he has taken to implement national testing in schools in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: We consulted widely in May on new proposals for national testing in Scottish schools. Responses have been carefully considered, and the Scottish Office Education Department is today sending to education authorities in Scotland a circular, which sets out how we now intend to proceed.

Testing is a key part of the five to 14 curriculum and assessment development programme for schools in Scotland. In future, national tests are to be given when the class teacher judges that a pupil is ready to move from one stage of the five to 14 curriculum in English and Mathematics to the next—up to five times for each pupil in the nine years of schooling between the ages of five and 14. Pupils will be able to take the tests informally, in small groups; their individual results will be known only to their class teacher and parents. A summary showing how many pupils had been tested, and at which levels, will be included as appropriate in the head teacher's report on attainment to the school board, where this can be achieved without breaching the confidentiality of individual results. The primary assesssment unit of the Scottish Examination Board will sample each year, for moderation purposes, a number of completed but unidentified test papers. There will be no collation or publication of test results by the Scottish Office Education Department or the primary assessment unit.

We are asking education authorities to introduce the new arrangements for testing in primary schools from January 1993 but have accepted in the light of concerns expressed on behalf of secondary schools, which have not hitherto been involved in testing, that testing should be introduced in SI and S2 a year later, that is, in January 1994.

Regulations currently require pupils in primary 4 and primary 7 to be tested. We would like the new testing arrangements to proceed by agreement. To that end, we are asking authorities to confirm by 15 December that they will implement and monitor the new arrangements, in line with the circular, as a prelude to the withdrawal of regulations.

Copies of the circular have been placed in the library of the House.

Development Grants

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what government assistance was provided to Gripparod plc or its predecessors, in respect of the Carpet Systems factory in Glengarnock; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: Carpet Systems Ltd. of Glengarnock, Ayrshire, received assistance in 1986 and 1988 under the now terminated regional development grants scheme.

The conditions attaching to these grants were met. No assistance has been provided to any successor company.

Borders Regional Council

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will approve as a matter of urgency the Borders regional council structure plan, submitted in February, and enable Borders regional council to approve and implement its local plans.

Mr. Lang: The Borders regional council structure plan is currently under consideration and I expect to be able to make known my initial views on it shortly. Allowing for the completion of the statutory procedures, it is unlikely that the final approval stage will be reached before mid-1993. At that stage, it will be for the regional council to ensure that its local plans reflect the policies contained in the approved structure plan before submitting them to me, prior to local adoption.

Euthanasia

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made on the implications for voluntary euthanasia in Scotland of the case of Dr. Cox; and what plans there are for legislative guidelines concerning voluntary euthanasia in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: The Government have no plans to amend the law of Scotland in the light of the case of Dr. Cox. It is a criminal offence to kill another, whether or not that person has consented to the action taken.

Montrose Community Hospital

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is the completion date for the new Montrose community hospital;

(2) how much expenditure has been committed by Tayside health board to the purchase of the Old Bond at Marine avenue;

(3) what budget has been allocated by Tayside health board to the construction of the new Montrose community hospital; and what sums have been legally committed.

Mr. Stewart: Tayside health board has no firm timetable for the development of a replacement community hospital in Montrose. In 1989, when suitable land became available for the site of a new hospital, the board was allocated £170,000 for its acquisition. Further allocations of capital by the Scottish Office are dependent on the board submitting detailed proposals for the development of the new hospital.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what planning guidance he has issued to local authorities regarding renewable energy developments, including windmills; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: No such guidance on this has yet been issued but a draft national planning policy guideline (NPPG) on renewable energy and a planning advice note (PAN) on windpower developments are currently being prepared. These will be issued for consultation to all interested bodies before final guidance is published next year.

European Community

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of civil servants in his Department whose main task is work related wholly or mainly to the European Community.

Mr. Lang: At present, around 98 Scottish Office civil servants are engaged on work related wholly or mainly to the European Community.

Executive Agencies

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list, for the last 12 months, the titles of papers published by the chief executive of each executive agency for which he is responsible.

Mr. Lang: I have passed the hon. Member's question to the chief executives of each of the agencies for which I have responsibility and asked them to reply to him directly.

Letter from J. W. Barron to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 26 October 1992:

PUBLICATION OF PAPERS

The Secretary of State for Scotland has passed to me for my interests your question regarding publication of papers by this Agency.

We have published no papers in the last twelve months within the strict meaning of your question. We have, of course, published our Annual Report for 1991-92 and copies are already available to the Library.

Letter from M. J. Richardson to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 23 October 1992:

I refer to your Question to the Secretary of State for Scotland asking if he will list for the last 12 months, the titles of papers published by the Chief Executive of each executive agency for which he is responsible.

In the Director's absence on leave I list below the papers published by Dr. R. K. M. Hay in the last 12 months.

Hay, R. K. M. and Kemp, D. R. (1992). The prediction of leaf canopy expansion in the leek from a simple model dependent on primordial development. (Ann. appl. Biol., 120, 537-545).

Hay, R. K. M. and Offer, N. W. (in press). Helianthus tuberosus as an Alternative Forage Crop for Cool Maritime Regions: A Preliminary Study of the Yield and Nutritional Quality of Shoot Tissues from Perennial Stands. (J. Sci. Food Agric).

If you require any further information, Dr. Hay will return from leave on Wednesday 28 October.

Letter from G. Munro to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 30 October 1992:

The Secretary of State for Scotland has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question which asked if he would list the titles of papers published by Historic Scotland during the last 12 months.

In that period the agency published its Annual Report and Accounts of 1991-92, and its Corporate Plan for the period 1992-95. Copies are available in the House of Commons Library.

In addition, Historic Scotland published the following papers and reports related to its activities:

(i) "Maintaining Scotland's Archaeological Heritage"
(ii) "Forestry and Archaeology in Scotland"
(iii) "Historic Scotland Education Packs"
(iv) The quarterly magazine "Welcome"
(v) Five volumes of reports relating to research into stonecleaning in Scotland, and the proceedings of a related international conference held in Edinburgh.

A wide range of other leaflets, guidebooks, etc. were also produced and distributed as part of our objectives, and open access was made available to the lists of historic buildings, the schedule of monuments, and the reference information maintained by the Scottish Conservation Bureau.

Letter from A. Macleod to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 27 October 1992:

PUBLICATION OF PAPERS

The Secretary of State for Scotland has passed to me your question regarding publication of papers by this Agency.

The only document which the Agency has published in the last 12 months has been its Annual Report for 1991-92. Copies of this are available in the Library.

Fact-finding Visits

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the fact-finding visits made in the past 12 months by the chief executive of each executive agency for which he is responsible; and what were the findings resulting from each visit.

Mr. Lang: I have asked each of the chief executives of the agencies for which I am responsible to reply the hon. Member directly.

Letter from M. J. Richardson to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 26 October 1992:

I refer to your Question to the Secretary of State for Scotland asking if he will list the fact finding visits made in the last 12 months by the Chief Executive of each executive agency for which he is responsible; and what were the findings resulting from each visit.

In the absence of the Chief Executive of SASA only a provisional answer can be provided. I am not aware of any specific fact finding visits undertaken by Dr. Hay in the last 12 months. Any visits made to other Institutes or Agencies have been in connection with his normal duties as Director of SASA.

If you require any further information, Dr. Hay will return from leave on Wednesday 28 October.

Letter from J. W. Barron to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 26 October 1992:

FACT FINDING VISITS

The Secretary of State for Scotland has passed to me for my interests your question regarding fact finding visits by me during the last twelve months.

While I have paid a number of courtesy calls on professional bodies in Scotland and on others, including the Land Registry in Dublin, I do not think these fall within the catgegory of fact finding visits.

Letter from Mr. A. Macleod to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 27 October 1992:

FACT FINDING VISITS

The Secretary of State for Scotland has passed to me your question regarding fact finding visits during the last 12 months.

I have not over this period undertaken any fact finding visits outside the Agency. I have of course in performing my duties as Chief Executive undertaken regular visits to SFPA ships and offices at fishing ports in Scotland to meet staff and to keep myself informed about the quality of fisheries enforcement and developments within the fishing industry. I do not believe these fall into the category of fact finding visits.

Letter from G. Munro to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 30 October 1992:

The Secretary of State for Scotland has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question which asked if he would list the 'fact finding' visits that I have made in the last 12 months, and my findings.

I have made a number of visits in the last 12 months to monuments, archaeological sites, and historic buildings in Scotland as part of my responsibilities as Director and Chief Executive of Historic Scotland. These have included visits with the Historic Buildings Council and the Ancient Monuments Board, statutory bodies which advise the Secretary of State on matters affecting the built heritage. Information obtained during these visits has been used to further the work of the agency and to establish improved working relationships with others involved in the care and protection of the built heritage in Scotland.

Sheriffs

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the rate of remuneration of temporary sheriffs.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The rate of remuneration is at present under review. The current rate, where applicable, is £230 per day.

Travellers

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each district the number of sites available for travelling people and the pitches on each such site.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The travelling people's sites run by local authorities in Scotland are listed in the table. In addition, it is estimated that around 190 pitches are available privately.

Water

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what response his Department has made to the May 1992 report by County NatWest on privatisation of water services in Scotland; if he will list the dates of all meetings between representatives of his Department and representatives of County NatWest within the last six months, stating for each what subject was discussed and at what level his Department was represented; if he will list the dates of all meetings between representatives of his Department and representatives of County NatWest planned to take place within the next six months, stating for each what subject will be discussed and at what level his Department will be represented; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 29 October 1992]: A meeting was held between a representative of County NatWest, at his request, and senior officials of the Scottish Office on 3 June this year to discuss matters arising out of the report in question. No other response was made to the report and no further meetings are planned at present.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the dates of all meetings between representatives of his Department and representatives of (a) the Office of Water Services, (b) the National Rivers Authority, (c) the drinking water inspectorate, (d) the Water Services Association and (e) the Water Companies Association within the past six months and planned for the next six months, stating for each what subject was discussed and at what level his Department was represented; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 29 October 1992]: There have been no departmental meetings with representatives of the Office of Water Services, the Water Services Association or the Water Companies Association within the past six months nor are there any meetings planned at present with these organisations. Meetings with officials from the National Rivers Authority take place frequently in the course of normal business and will continue to do so. It is not practicable to list dates and locations of all such contacts.

On 18 May 1992 senior officials from the Scottish Office met representatives of the drinking water inspectorate to discuss matters within the inspectorate's competence. No further meetings are planned at present.

TRANSPORT

European Community

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the number of civil servants in his Department whose main task is work related wholly or mainly to the European Community.

Mr. Norris: Due to the diverse nature of their work it is difficult to give a precise figure. I estimate that the main task of about 100 civil servants in my Department is work wholly or mainly related to the European Community.

Coastguard Service

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many sorties were undertaken by Her Majesty's coastguard aircraft stationed at Lee-on-the-Solent in 1991; and how many lives were saved.

Mr. Norris: The coastguard S61N search-and-rescue helicopter currently based at Lee-on-Solent undertook 188 sorties and rescued 106 people during 1991.

Second Severn Crossing

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what contracts in the construction or supply of the second Servern crossing are held by foreign companies; what countries are represented; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The letting of contracts relating to the second Severn crossing is entirely a matter for the concessionaire for the project, Severn River Crossing plc, and its contractor for the design and construction of the new bridge, the John Laing-GTM Entrepose Joint Venture. However, I understand from the latter company that the majority of contracts let to date have been awarded to British companies, and that over 90 per cent. of the construction materials to be used in the bridge is expected to come from the United Kingdom.

Freight

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will instigate a full investigation into ways of shifting freight away from the roads and on to ships.

Mr. Norris: Following a seminar last year, and subsequent discussions with interested organisations, the Department is sponsoring two studies in this area. The first is a general overview designed to identify where potential for a road to water shift of freight traffic might exist and what measures might help to encourage such a shift. The second is looking specifically at the scope for using the planning system to encourage use of water, as an alternative to road, where this is economically and geographically viable. We expect to have reports from both studies early in the new year.

School Buses

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to conclude his consultations regarding (a) the compulsory provision of seat belts for school buses and coaches and (b) a reduction from three to two children allowed to travel on a double seat; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 2 November 1992]: We are continuing to press the European Commission to amend the directives on seat belt and anchorages to allow us to require belts on all seats in minibuses and coaches, irrespective of their use.

There are no plans at present to reduce from three to two the number of children under 14 allowed to travel on a double seat.

Road Improvements

Sir Keith Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the proposed starting dates and estimated costs for road improvements to (a) the A21 trunk road and (b) the Folkestone to Honiton trunk road.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 2 November 1992]: There are currently six schemes in the national programme for improving the A21 trunk road, and 31 schemes for improving the Folkestone to Honiton trunk road. Starting dates for each scheme will depend on the progress that can be made with the design, statutory and other procedures and the availability of funds.

The table shows our current forecast year for the next key stage in each scheme and its estimated cost.

In addition, there are a number of smaller-scale works in the regional programme, mostly aimed at improving safety and traffic flow.

M1

Mr. Fry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the situation on the M1 motorway on the night of 6 to 7 August, and the closure of the northbound lanes, junctions 16 and 18; and what advance publicity was given of this closure.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 2 November 1992]: On the night of 6 to 7 August, traffic using the northbound carriageway of the M1 motorway was reduced to a single lane from 21.30 hours to allow surfacing works to be carried out. Those works, exacerbated by a number of vehicle breakdowns, led to a build-up of traffic after midnight. Once the extent of the problem was recognised, works were halted for the night at 01.30 hours and the road was fully open to traffic by 02·30 hours.

The contract works were well publicised before they began at the end of June; radio announcements and press releases were issued warning of possible delays. Throughout the works, the Department's press office kept in touch with the media.

Motor Cycles (Safety)

Sir Keith Speed: To ask the Secretary of state for Transport (1) if he will publish figures showing how much the Transport research laboratory is budgeting to spend for 1992-93 and the next two years on research into secondary safety systems for motor-cycle riders; and if he will list the topics of research that are currently under way at the Transport Research Laboratory in respect of secondary vehicle safety systems for motor-cycle riders;

(2) if he will publish figures showing his Department's budget for 1992-93 and each of the next two years on the vehicle safety research programme and the components of that programme covering accident investigations and surveys, primary safety vehicle construction standards, motor-cycle safety and injury reduction to vehicle occupants and pedestrians.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 2 November 1992]: The Department's planned expenditure on road safety and environmental research, as reported in the Department of Transport 1992 report, incorporates expenditure on secondary safety systems for motor-cycle riders, as below:

Year	£ million
1993-94	1·2
1994-95	1·0

Current topics being researched by the Transport Research Laboratory are improved helmet design standards; leg protection specifications; air bag restraint systems; and mathematical modelling of motor-cycling impacts.

These figures can be placed in the context of an overall vehicle safety research programme, as follows.

Accident investigations and surveys	0·8	1·1	0·7
Primary safety vehicle construction standards	1·0	0·9	1·3
Motorcycle safety	1·4	1·2	1·0
Injury reduction to vehicle occupants and pedestrians	2·5	2·4	2·8
Total vehicle safety research	5·7	5·6	5·8

In both the tables, the figures for 1993-94 and 1994-95 include the estimated costs of new research proposals.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

European Community

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is the number of civil servants in his Department whose main task is work related wholly or mainly to the European Community.

Mr. Key: The Department of National Heritage has no civil servants whose main task is work wholly related to the European Community. However, five members of staff are occupied on work which is related mainly to the EC. A significant number of other staff are routinely concerned with EC matters in the context of their normal day-to-day work.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

European Community

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Lord President of the Council what is the number of civil servants in his Department whose main task is work related wholly or mainly to the European Community.

Mr. Newton: One.

Appointments

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list all the names of public appointments that he has made, giving the period for which the appointment was made, relevant qualifications of the appointees and what remuneration each currently receives.

Mr. Newton: In my capacity as Lord President, I have appointed Mrs. M. Corsar and Mr. J. Miller to the convocation of Heriot-Watt university; Mr. A Bernstein to the court of the Victoria university of Manchester; Dr. R. Brinley Jones, Mr. J. E. Hugh Rees, and Mr. T. C. Wignall to the court of the university college of Swansea; and Lord Prys Davies to the court of the university of Wales. The provisions under which these appointments have been made do not require the nominees to have particular qualifications. In all cases, the appointments have been made for three years ending in 1995. None of the appointments attracts any remuneration.

WALES

Schools (Vandalism)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what provision is made within the local management of schools system for the cost of repair of damage by vandalism; whether these costs are included within the total budget set for each school or in addition; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Local education authorities may include as part of their local management of schools budget formula a "location factor" which can reflect the incidence of vandalism in particular schools. It is also open to them to draw on their contingency reserves for major costs which a school could not reasonably be expected to meet.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the budget agreed with each TEC in Wales for 1992-93, broken down into the five major expenditure blocks; if he will give comparable information for each TEC for 1991-92; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information requested is shown in the tables. The breakdown is in terms of programmes rather than funding blocks since the former are now the basis for agreeing TEC budgets. The figures for 1991-92 relate to actual expenditure.

Environmental Monitoring

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to introduce regional UV-B monitoring systems; what initiatives he has taken to encourage Welsh industry to switch to non-ozone-depleting substances; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Plans are under way to extend the monitoring network set up by the National Radiological Protection Board in order to provide a more comprehensive picture of the terrestrial solar UV levels over the United Kingdom.

The Welsh Office has a continuing programme encouraging businesses to adopt best environmental practice. This includes information on the main alternative technologies available to reduce industry's dependence on ozone-depleting substances. We have also recently established a new network of environmental managers in Wales which aims, inter alia, to raise awareness among business of the importance of phasing out these substances.

Disabled Children

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many disabled children are currently integrated into mainstream schools in each local education authority in Wales; and how many are granted specialist equipment within each authority.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information on the provision of specialist equipment for disabled pupils in maintained primary and secondary schools is not collected centrally.

The number of disabled children, in maintained primary and secondary schools, for whom the local education authority was maintaining a statement of special needs in January, 1991, is given as follows:

	Number
Clwyd	1,123
Dyfed	562
Gwent	1,459
Gwynedd	514
Mid Glamorgan	2,421
Powys	170
South Glamorgan	715
West Glamorgan	1,894
Wales	8,858

Note: Figures include children in both mainstream classes and special classes/units in maintained primary and secondary schools. Figures for Dyfed, Mid Glamorgan and Powys include a small number of pupils who are receiving education outside of their own authorities.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to prohibit the disposal of toxic ash from waste incineration on landfill sites in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: It is the responsibility of the appropriate waste disposal authority to ensure through appropriate conditions in a waste disposal licence issued under the Control of Pollution Act 1974 that deposits of this kind do not cause water pollution or danger to public health.

Housing Stock

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what action his Department is taking to reduce the level of voids in stock managed by Welsh housing associations;

(2) what action his Department is taking to reduce the level of voids in housing stock managed by Welsh local authorities.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The action which the Department expects both of housing associations and local authorities is featured in the published "Agenda for Action on Housing for Wales". The relevant target is that void rates should be below 2 per cent.: the current average for local authorities and housing associations combined is 1·2 per cent. Progress is subject to examination in the context of annual review and monitoring meetings.

Consultants

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all of the reports his Department has commissioned from external consultants in each of the past three years; for each of the past three years, how many reports from external consultants to his Department led to further consultancy work being commissioned, stating for each of these who were the original and subsequent consultants and briefly describing the subject matter of the consultancy work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: This information is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to advertise the posts of chairman or chairwoman of future national health service trusts.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Present practice is that appointments such as these are not normally advertised.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many respondents were (a) in favour of and (b) against the establishment of the three national health service trusts proposed in Gwent.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information is as follows:

	In support	Opposed	Undeclared
South Gwent Acute Unit	3	17	8
Gwent Community and Mental Health Unit	5	12	8
Powys, Gwent and South Glamorgan Ambulance Services	1	22	11

The views expressed were taken into account alongside other assessments of the applications and their individual merits.

Transport Grant, Clwyd

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he proposes to announce transport supplementary grant allocations to Clwyd county council; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: An announcement on transport grant support in 1993-94 will be made following the 1992 public expenditure survey.

Press Releases

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make available to hon. Members on the day of issue press releases issued by his Department.

Mr. David Hunt: Yes, whenever practicable.

European Community

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the number of civil servants in his Department whose main task is work related wholly or mainly to the European Community.

Mr. David Hunt: There are currently 49 staff in my Department employed wholly or mainly on work related to the European Community. In addition, European Community matters form part of the duties of a wide range of other officials.

Development Board for Rural Wales

Mr. Alan Williams: To as the Secretary of State for Wales on what date he announced the re-appointment of Mr. Glyn Davies as chairman of the Development Board for Rural Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: On 10 March 1992.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what date he was informed that the Comptroller and Auditor General had qualified the accounts of the Development Board for Rural Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: On 12 December, although my Department became aware that the Comptroller and Auditor General was considering qualifying the board's 1991 accounts on 21 August 1991.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what date the National Audit Office report on the retirement settlement to the former chief executive of the Development Board for Rural Wales was available to his Department.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department was sent a copy of the final National Audit Office report in a letter dated 12 December 1991. Although it was first notified of the proposed contents of the National Audit Office report in correspondence dated 1 October 1991.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what account he took of the fact that the Public Accounts Committee report was pending on the qualified accounts of the Development Board for Rural Wales when he re-appointed for three years the chairman of the Development Board for Rural Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: I announced the re-appointment of Mr. Glyn Davies as chairman of the Development Board for Rural Wales for a further term of three years on 10 March 1992, after taking full account of proceedings in the Public Accounts Committee hearing on 15 January 1992. His previous term of appointment was due to end on 31 March 1992, and the Public Accounts Committee report on the qualified accounts of the Development Board for Rural Wales was not published until 24 September 1992. I also took account of the excellent performance of the Development Board for Rural Wales during Mr. Glyn Davies' chairmanship, examples of which are to be found in Cm 1516.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Nuclear Suppliers Group

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which countries are currently members of the Nuclear Suppliers Group; what consideration has been given to expanding its membership; and what consideration has been given to establishing a secretariat for the group.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The following countries are currently members of the Nuclear Suppliers Group (NSG):

Australia
Austria
Belgium
Bulgaria
Canada
Czech and Slovak Republic
Denmark
Finland
France
Germany
Greece
Hungary
Ireland
Italy
Japan
Luxembourg
Netherlands
Norway
Poland
Portugal
Romania
Russian Federation
Spain
Sweden
Switzerland
United Kingdom
United States of America

At its plenary meeting in Warsaw in March this year, the NSG agreed to set up a working group on institutional questions whose terms of reference included a review of the criteria for membership of the NSG. The findings of the working group are likely to be discussed at the next NSG plenary next March. There are no plans at present to establish a secretariat.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the involvement of the United Kingdom in the Nuclear Suppliers Group.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom plays an active part in the workings of the Nuclear Suppliers Groups (NSG). Representatives from the United Kingdom attended the last plenary meeting in Warsaw in March and sit on all NSG working groups.

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Nuclear Suppliers Group working party studying the control of nuclear dual-use items has completed its work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Surrey, East (Mr. Ainsworth) on 15 July 1992 at column 735.

Zangger Committee

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is (a) the current annual expenditure of the Zangger committee and (b) the number of staff in its secretariat.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Zangger committee is an informal body. It has no contributory budget and member states finance their own involvement.

A member of staff of the United Kingdom mission to the International Atomic Energy Agency in Vienna acts as secretary to the committee, which meets twice a year, in additional to his other duties.

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which countries are currently members of the Zangger committee; and what consideration has been given to expanding the membership.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The following countries are currently members of the Zangger committee:

Australia
Austria
Belgium
Bulgaria
Canada
Czech and Slovak Republic
Denmark
Finland
France
Germany
Greece
Hungary
Ireland
Italy
Japan
Luxembourg
Netherlands
Norway
Poland
Portugal
Romania
Russian Federation
Spain
Sweden
Switzerland
United Kingdom
United States of America

The question of which, if any, additional countries should be invited to become members is kept constantly under review.

Bulgaria, France, Portugal and Spain became members at the last meeting of the committee in Vienna on 22 October.

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his assessment of the current policies of confidentiality relating to the work of the Zangger committee and the Nuclear Suppliers Group; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In view of the substance of the work of the Zangger committee and the Nuclear Suppliers Group, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs is satisfied that it is appropriate that they should discuss matters confidentially. The product of the two groups' work—notably, the lists of items which trigger safeguards—is, of course, made public.

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration has been given to merging the Zangger committee and the Nuclear Suppliers Group; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There are at present no plans to merge the Zangger committee and the Nuclear Suppliers Group.

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give details of his proposals to harmonise and improve export controls through the Zangger committee; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Zangger committee is not an export control body as such. It is an informal international forum for interpreting supplier commitments under article III(2) of the treaty on the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons. The United Kingdom will continue to play an active role in its discussions.

Japan

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent communications his Department has had with his counterparts in Japan relating to the non-proliferation treaty and the International Atomic Energy Agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have discussed a wide range of issues with Japanese counterparts in recent meetings. As far as nuclear non-proliferation is concerned, recent contacts have concentrated on formal preparations for the 1995 NPT extension conference. We are also regularly in touch with the Japanese on non-proliferation issues within the auspices of the Nuclear Suppliers Group and the Zangger committee.

Correspondence

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what dates (a) he received and (b) he replied to a letter from the constituents of the hon. Member for Gower residing in Norton Mumbles, Swansea, regarding events in Bosnia and Croatia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We received a letter dated 2 October from Mr. Blank of 4 Castle road, Norton Mumbles, Swansea on 14 October. A reply was sent to Mr. Blank on 22 October.

British Council (Cyprus)

Mr. John D. Taylor : To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, what was the expenditure by the British Council for Cyprus for (a) interchange of people, (b) libraries, books and information, (c) English language and literature, (d) specialist work in science and education and (e) the arts, during 1991-92; and how much under each heading is identified with (i) Greek Southern Cyprus and (ii) Turkish Northern Cyprus.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Total expenditure in Cyprus in 1991-92—including local and headquarters overheads—was £1,949,972, divided as in the table:

	Total	Southern Cyprus		Northern Cyprus
Interchange of people	1,065,207	623,472	59	436,735	41
Libraries, books and information	389,071	298,471	77	90,600	23
English language and literature	135,412	54,744	40	80,668	60
Specialist work in science and education	284,032	278,352	98	5,680	2
Arts	76,250	73,950	97	2,300	3
Total	1,949,972	1,333,989	68	615,983	32

The figures supplied in response to the hon. Member's question on 19 October were based on local programme costs.

International Science and Technology Centre

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to bring to the attention of British commercial organisations the establishment of the international science and technology centre in Russia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The international science and technology centre is intended to channel the skills and talents of the former weapons scientists in Russia and Ukraine towards suitable civil projects. Her Majesty's Government will seek to bring projects proposed for funding by the centre to the attention of the United Kingdom companies.

Non-governmental Organisations

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he plans to hold the next routine meeting with non-governmental organisations on arms control, non-proliferation and security matters; and what actions Her Majesty's Government have taken arising from proposals or questions raised at the most recent NGO meeting on security topics.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no immediate plans to meet non-governmental organisations on arms control, non-proliferation and security matters.

Officials met representatives of the British Atlantic Committee and Peace Through NATO on 22 October for discussion on these issues. The views and questions raised during the meeting have been noted.

Nuclear Materials (Theft)

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he records on incidents overseas of (a) the theft of nuclear materials and (b) the attempted sale of stolen nuclear materials; if he will list recent such incidents; what is his assessment of the risks that these activities present; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We keep records of all incidents which come to our attention involving theft or illegal sales of nuclear materials overseas. The three most recent incidents which have been brought to our attention are as follows: the seizure of a small quantity of low-enriched uranium by the Italian authorities in August; two cases in Germany last month in one of which the authorities seized 4·8 pounds of low-enriched uranium and in the other a small quantity of caesium and strontium. All such incidents so far have involved materials of negligible proliferation concern. But we are not complacent. Clearly the theft or sale of weapons grade material would represent a severe proliferation danger. We are currently following up reports in a Sunday newspaper of a possible attempted illegal sale of plutonium in Bulgaria.

Petitions

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what petitions have been received by the United Kingdom in its role a president of the European Council; and what responses have been made by the presidency on behalf of the European Communities.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We are aware of no formal petitions addressed direct to the United Kingdom as President of the Council of Ministers, although we receive a large number of informal questions and requests as presidency. We have received from the European Parliament one petition addressed to it by the National and Local Government Officers Association on the United Kingdom Local Government and Housing Act; and have taken note.

Correspondence

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish for the last year the average time his Department takes to reply to letters from right hon. and hon. Members.

Mr. Goodlad: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer which my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster gave the hon. Member for Cambridgeshire, South-East (Mr. Paice) on 3 July 1992 at column 771.

The FCO has a target response time of 10 working days for all ministerial correspondence with right hon. and hon. Members. A longer response time may be necessary if there is a heavy volume of correspondence on issues of wide parliamentary and public concern.

Figures for 1992 will appear in the FCO's next annual report, early in 1993. These will show the number of letters received in the course of the year, the number of replies despatched within the target time and the percentage of the total this represents.

European Community

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the number of civil servants in his Department whose main task is work related wholly or mainly to the European Community.

Mr. Garel-Jones: There are approximately 170 officers in my Department, including the aid wing, engaged wholly in EC work. There are no central statistics on the numbers of FCO and DS staff working mainly or partly on EC matters.

Entry Clearance

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the average time it takes an adjudicator to make known his findings to an appellant since the appellant made an appeal against a refusal to permit entry clearance from Pakistan to the United Kingdom for a visit.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: All posts overseas, including those in Pakistan, are under instruction to dispatch explanatory appeal statements within one month of the receipt of an appeal against the refusal of a visit visa. Processing of appeal papers thereafter is a matter for the Lord Chancellor's Department. It advises that the average time between receipt by the appellate authorities of the notice of appeal and explanatory statement and the adjudicator's findings being made known to the appellant is eight months.

Russia

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response Her Majesty's Government have made to the note from the Russian authorities proposing an end to restrictions on British citizens in Russia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The British embassy in Moscow replied formally to the Russian Ministry of Foreign Affairs on 30 October acknowledging the Russian proposal. Our travel notification requirements were originally imposed on Soviet officials in the United Kingdom in response to a corresponding requirement imposed by the authorities of the USSR. In accordance with our policy that this retaliatory measure would be lifted once the Russian measures were abolished, we have ended with effect from 30 October our requirement for resident Russian officials, journalists and business men to give notice of journeys over 25 miles from central London.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Angola

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent election in Angola.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We support the conclusion of the United Nations Special Representatives in Angola that the legislative and presidential elections held there on 29 and 30 September were free and fair. Together with other members of the international community we condemn the recent violence in Angola and we urge UNITA to accept the result of the election and to proceed to the second round of presidential elections rendered necessary by the inconclusive result of the first round.

South Africa

Mr. Donald Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will now join the Commonwealth Committee of Foreign Ministers in South Africa; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: At present, we have no plans to join the Commonwealth Committee of Foreign Ministers in South Africa.

Consultants

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all of the reports the Overseas Development Administration has commissioned from external consultants in each of the past three years; for each of the past three years, how many reports from external consultants to his Department led to further consultancy work being commissioned, stating for each of these who were the original and subsequent consultants and briefly describing the subject matter of the consultancy work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Detailed in the table are those reports commissioned from external consultants by the Overseas Development Administration in connection with its core administrative responsibilities, for each of the past three years. It does not include details of consultants employed under the overseas aid programme. Consultancies are awarded, after competition, to the consultant considered best able to provide value for money in terms of quality of work and price. None of the reports listed led directly to the commissioning of further consultancy work.

Year	Report commissioned	Consultant
1990	Review of personnel management	A. Fowler
1991	Review of Aid Management Overseas in Africa	Sir Terence Streeton
1991	Review of Aid Management Overseas in South East Asia	A. Sutherland

Urban Settlement

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action is currently being undertaken by the Overseas Development Administration to assist developing countries to adopt planning zoning policies to prevent prime agricultural land from being used for urban settlement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Assistance is provided in a number of ways to help achieve good urban planning practice. Eighteen overseas planners received training in 1991-92. We are providing physical planners in Lesotho, the Caribbean and St. Helena. We also contribute to the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) urban management programme and the United Nations Commission on Human Settlements. The ODA executive agency, the Natural Resources Institute, has established an urban unit which is developing the institute's capacity to respond to issues arising from urban encroachment into the natural and agricultural environment.

Disasters

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 16 July, Official Report, column 968, if he will give a breakdown of the £600,000 and £250,000 expenditure on disaster preparedness projects.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The breakdown of the £600,000 expenditure in financial year 1991-92 and the £250,000 commitment in financial year 1992-93 on disaster preparedness projects are provided in the tables:

Expenditure, by project, on disaster preparedness in financial year 1991-92

Environmental Impact Assessments

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will bring the Overseas Development Administration's environmental impact assessment procedures in line with those used by the Commonwealth Development Corporation.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: All projects under consideration for ODA funding are subjected to assessment for environmental impact, guided by ODA's detailed and comprehensive manual of environmental appraisal. The Commonwealth Development Corporation is currently reviewing its own guidelines on environmental policies and procedures. The ODA will ensure through discussion with the CDC that its revised guidelines are consistent with ODA policies and procedures in this area.

World Bank Projects

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to publish his voting position on World bank projects; and what proposals he has to improve the openness of the World bank procedure.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The proceedings of the World bank board's consideration of projects are confidential so as not to inhibit full and frank discussion. Within this constraint, we consider the procedures of the World bank are as open as can reasonably be expected.

Sardar Sarovar Dam

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the World bank proposals for funding for the Sardar Sarovar Dam in India.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The World Bank approved loans amounting to $450 million in 1985 as part of a $3 billion project in the Narmada valley in India. In June this year, the report of an independent review committee established by the bank was published. The design and implementation of the project, including the resettlement and rehabilitation, environmental and other aspects were criticised. On 23 October, the bank's board of directors agreed on balance that the best course of action was to continue with bank support for the project on the basis of an action programme with detailed targets, which has been agreed with the Indian authorities.

A further review will be carried out in April 1993 which will reconsider whether disbursements against the bank's loan can continue. The board welcomed the commitments made by the new Government in India and their considerable efforts to address the problems identified; but we made it clear that disbursements must be suspended in six months' time if real progress on resettlement and rehabilitation and environmental issues have not been made by that time.

Commonwealth Development Corporation

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) when the environmental policies and procedures of the Commonwealth Development Corporation will next be reviewed;

(2) if non-governmental organisations will be involved in the next review of the environmental policies and procedures of the Commonwealth Development Corporation;

(3) what process of review will be employed in considering the adequacy of the environmental policies and procedures employed by the Commonwealth Development Corporation.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 2 November 1992]: The Commonwealth Development Corporation's guidelines on its environmental policies and procedures are currently under review. CDC is willing to hold further meetings with environmental NGOs that have expressed a wish to discuss the corporation's investments overseas. ODA will ensure through discussion with CDC that its revised guidelines are consistent with ODA policies and procedures in this area.

HEALTH

Occupational Therapists

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the estimated percentage difference between the number of occupational therapists available and the number required to meet the demands of care in the community.

Mr. Yeo: It is acknowledged that the national demand for occupational therapists for all purposes exceeds supply. However, this is being addressed in a number of ways.

The number of occupational therapists employed in the national health service in England has increased considerably from 3,183 in 1982 to 5,609 in 1991—an increase of 76 per cent. This is planned to increase further to around 7,000 by 1995. The number employed by local authorities in England has also grown substantially from 697 in 1982 to 1,717 in 1991—an increase of 146 per cent.

There has also been a decline in vacancy rates in the national health service and local authorities. It is anticipated that this decline will continue so that by 1995 the supply and demand for occupational therapists should be approximately in balance.

School Medical Inspections

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many pupils were checked in routine school medical inspections in each year since 1988-89.

Mr. Yeo: This information is not collected centrally.

Dewsbury Health Authority

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the expected relationship between the proposed health authority for west Yorkshire and the existing Dewsbury health authority.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Yorkshire regional health authority is currently considering responses to its consultation document to establish a new health authority for west Yorkshire. This would cover the area of the existing Calderdale, Dewsbury and Huddersfield health authorities, which would be abolished if the proposed new authority were approved. If the regional health authority decides to recommend its proposals to Ministers, we will need to be satisfied that the proposals will secure the best possible health care for the people of Calderdale, Dewsbury and Huddersfield.

Epilepsy

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if training in the management of epilepsy is included in social work training at undergraduate and postgraduate levels.

Mrs. Yeo: In order to qualify for the diploma in social work, students are required to demonstrate knowledge and understanding of health and disability issues. There is no specific requirement that they be trained in the management of epilepsy. The Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work has further work in hand to identify the knowledge and skills required of social workers at post-qualifying level.

NHS Closures

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list each NHS establishment closed in each year since 1974, with the number of beds involved, and the site value on disposal.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally.

Dr. Helen Zeitlin

Mr. Fry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she has yet reached a decision on the appeal made by Dr. Helen Zeitlin under paragraph 190 of the terms and conditions of service of hospital medical and dental staff (England and Wales) against her dismissal on the grounds of redundancy by West Midlands regional health authority.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The parties to the appeal have today been informed of my decision to uphold the appeal and accept the recommendation of the professional committee constituted under the paragraph 190 procedures that Dr. Zeitlin's appointment should continue.

European Community

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number of civil servants in her Department whose main task is work related wholly or mainly to the European Community.

Mr. Sackville: Thirty-three.

NHS Premises (Fire Precautions)

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will ring-fence the funds required to bring national health service premises up to the legal minimum under proposals for fire legislation.

Mr. Sackville: No. Management of national health service premises is devolved to health authorities and trusts. It is for individual authorities and trusts, in the light of their local circumstances, to make the best use of all the resources at their disposal to provide health care services which are cost effective and meet relevant safety requirements.

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate she has made of the total cost of bringing all national health service premises up to the legal minimum required with respect to fire legislation in the absence of Crown immunity from prosecution.

Mr. Sackville: No specific estimate has been made of the cost of bringing national health service premises up to legal minimum standards. The removal of Crown immunity has not changed the standards of fire safety which health authorities and trusts must observe. They are required to agree with local fire authority a programme for any necessary improvements.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Battle) on 18 May, Official Report, column 63, if she will itemise the cost of establishing national health service trusts.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 26 October 1992 at columns 477–80.

In the first three waves of NHS trusts, a sum of £12,000 per trust was paid to regions to help meet statutory consultation costs. On establishment, £15,000 in the first wave and £25,000 in the second, per trust, was allocated to regions towards conveyancing costs. In addition, £190,000 in the first wave and £226,000 in the second was approved for each trust as a non-recurring revenue addition paid to help cover expenditure incurred during their shadow running period—the period immediately prior to their operational date when they have no access to money of their own. This covers shadow board costs, legal expenses connected with the transfer of assets, employment of staff and other miscellaneous expenses. A similar sum will be allocated for the third wave.

Totals of £230,000, £279,000 and £164,000 in the first three waves respectively supported training and development costs for units applying for trust status.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the cost of preparing national health service trust applications in (a) the northern region and (b) each district in the north.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Bristol, South (Ms. Primarolo) on 30 October 1992 at column 940.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the cost of employing management consultants and private agencies to assist in the preparation of national health service trust applications (a) in the northern region and (b) in each district in the north.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not held centrally.

Sexual Offenders (Rehabilitation)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements for access to information and expertise her Department has with the Gracewell clinic for rehabilitating sexual offenders; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: We are aware of the work undertaken by the Gracewell clinic; Government officials have visited the organisation.

Patients Charter

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she intends to make the charter standards under the patients charter applicable to fund-holding practices; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The standards in the patients charter which are appropriate to GP fund holders already apply and this has been made clear in guidance.

Child Abuse

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North of 9 March 1989, Official Report, column 607, how many times the interdepartmental working group on child sexual abuse has met since 9 March 1989; and what has been discussed.

Mr. Yeo: Since March 1989 the interdepartmental group (IDG) on child abuse has met 15 times and made good progress in addressing a wide range of cross-sector policy issues. The IDG has recently issued a strategic statement on working with offenders, setting out strategic and service objectives for social services departments, health services, and Home Office probation and prison services. A copy of the statement is in the Library.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimates he has of the percentage of children who are sexually abused.

Mr. Yeo: Information is not available centrally in the form requested. The information collected centrally relates to the numbers of children who are on the child protection registers. These list all children in the local authority's area who are the subject of an inter-agency protection plan because of the risk of abuse. Child protection registers are therefore not a record of all cases of child abuse. The latest information available relates to the year ending 31 March 1991 and is in the published feedback "Children and Young Persons on Child Protection Registers England 1991". Copies are available in the Library.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what progress has been made on child sexual abuse since the statement by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State on 15 May 1989, Official Report, columns 145-48; if she will provide a table of recent, current and proposed research funded by each Government Department relevant to child sexual abuse in each of the years since 1979, listing (a) projects under consideration, with earmarked funding, (b) projects in progress, (c) projects completed, (d) broad themes indentified for research and the actual and projected cost in each case; and if she will make a statement;

(2) if she will make a statement on the progress which has been made on each of the projects of research on child abuse listed in her predecessor's answer of 27 January 1989, Official Report, column 798;

(3) what investigations her Department is (a) funding and (b) co-operating on in respect of (i) the sexual abuse of children and (ii) the ritual abuse of children;

(4) if she will update her answer of 27 January 1989, Official Report, columns 795-98, showing the total amount spent by her Department on research into the sexual abuse of children in each of the years since 1979, listing the name of each project, its cost and completion date.

Mr. Yeo: Information is not available centrally in the precise form requested. The "Strategic Statement on Working with Abusers", produced by the inter-departmental group on child abuse, a Department of Health paper "Expenditure on Child Care Research Financial Year 1990/91" and a departmental report on "Progress on the 1992 Child Care Research Strategy", contain information on these matters. Copies of these documents are available in the Library.

In addition, the Department is funding a research project into cases of organised abuse where there are alleged ritualistic elements. The project is being carried out in collaboration with an Economic and Science Research Council-funded project by researchers from Manchester university.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will establish a regional centre for the research and treatment of sexual offenders and their child victims.

Mr. Yeo: I have no plans to do so. It is a matter for the local statutory and voluntary organisations concerned to assess the need and provision for such a regional centre.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what contact her Department has with Governments in the United States of America, Australia and the EC regarding their experience in the creation and running of national institutes for research into child sexual abuse.

Mr. Yeo: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by my hon. Friend the then Minister for Health on 14 June 1990 at column 272.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the amount of money being spent by Government Departments on research into the sexual abuse of children (a) at May 1989 and (b) currently; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The following amounts were allocated by Government Departments for research into child sexual abuse.

Department of Health	92,000	493,000
Home Office	72,000	54,000
Social Work Services Group (Scottish Office)	17,000	112,000
Total	181,000	659,000

In addition the Department of Health funds a number of projects covering both sexual and physical abuse of children.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what facilities her Department offers to local government to spread the best practice in suspected cases of sexual abuse of children.

Mr. Yeo: The Department routinely issues guidance to local authorities and is due to host a continuation of the series of annual national conferences for chairmen of area protection committees, the proceedings of which will be disseminated. In addition, several projects in the Department's central training initiative are concerned with child sexual abuse and as part of the training support programme (child care) a special development group has produced guidelines for local authority training officers to assist them with planning their staff training in his area. The Department's social services inspectorate also produces reports which highlight good practice.

A new edition of "Working Together" was issued to coincided with the implementation of the Children Act 1989 and reflected the changes introduced by the Act and the greater emphasis on parental participation.

A centrally funded training initiative was launched in 1986, £689,000 will be given for a range of training projects in 1991-93.

A training support programme (Child Care and Children Act) was started in 1989-90 to enhance the quality of social services provided for children and their families by increasing and improving training provision for staff who work in this field.

Guidelines for SSD trainers and managers on child sexual abuse were issued in conjuction with "Working Together". The guidelines provide local authority trainers and managers with overall principles and a framework within which child sexual abuse training should be organised.

A centrally funded treatment initiative began in 1990-91; £400,000 will be given for a range of projects in 1992-93.

West Midlands Regional Health Authority

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what discussions she has had with Sir Roy Griffiths on the subject of the National Audit Office report HC 197-IX; and if she will make a statement;

(2) pursuant to her answer of 22 October, Official Report, column 369, to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett), what will be the form of Sir Roy Griffiths' investigations into West Midlands regional health authority; and if she will make his findings public;

(3) what discussions she has had on the future of the chair and other senior offices of West Midlands regional health authority with Sir Roy Griffiths.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett) on 22 October 1992 at column 369. Sir Roy Griffiths has been asked to work with West Midlands regional health authority in looking at its management systems in order to allow the authority to discharge its role more effectively in the future. The emphasis of this work is on the procedures adopted by the authority which gave rise to the problems identified by the National Audit Office rather than a specific examination of the competence of individuals. Sir Roy will be keeping the Department in touch with progress and there are no plans for a formal report to be published at the conclusion of his work.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what will be the effect of West Midlands regional health authority's moratorium on capital spending on the time scale for (a) completion of the "Building a Healthy Birmingham" plan generally (b) the rebuilding of the Birmingham women's hospital, (c) the rebuilding of the Birmingham children's hospital and (d) the rebuilding of the elderly service block at Selly Oak hospital.

Dr. Mawhinney: A temporary moratorium on capital spending has been imposed by West Midlands regional health authority to enable them to take stock of their capital programme. I understand the region will be discussing the position at the regional health authority meeting on 19 November.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what investigations she has made into the collapse of QA Business Services, the former management services division of West Midlands regional health authority;

(2) what investigations she has made into the Healthtrac supplies system in West Midlands regional health authority; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Both Healthtrac and QA Business Services are currently the subject of a review by the Audit Commission. We shall consider the conclusions most carefully as soon as they are available.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions she has had with Sir James Ackers or other representatives of West Midlands regional health authority on the subject of National Audit Office report HC 197-IX; and what were the results of these discussions.

Dr. Mawhinney: Discussions about the National Audit report are continuing between the Department and the West Midlands regional health authority.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to intervene in the proposed closure of Birmingham's royal orthopaedic and accident hospitals, or the transfer of services from the general hospital, following the publication of National Audit Office report HC 197-IX.

Dr. Mawhinney: None. Responsibility for the public consultation on the proposed closures of the royal orthopaedic and accident hospitals and transfer of services to the general hospital rests with South Birmingham district health authority. They are due to discuss the proposal at their district health authority meeting on 4 November when I would hope that general agreement can be reached.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions took place at her meeting with Sir James Ackers of 28 October on his future as chair of West Midlands regional health authority; and what other matters were discussed.

Dr. Mawhinney: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health did not meet Sir James Ackers on 28 October.

Dentists

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has on the number of dentists in the Birmingham family health services authority withdrawing national health service treatment from their existing patients; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: One dentist out of a total of 355 in the Birmingham family health services authority area has notified his decision to discontinue national health service treatment for 26 adult patients. No dentist has de-registered child patients.

Anybody who needs help in obtaining NHS dental treatment should contact his or her local family health services authority for advice.

Nurses Pay Review Body

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has for the future status of the nurses pay review body and the role it will have in the current year's pay round negotiations.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett) on 29 October 1992 at column 846.

Yugoslav Children

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children have been admitted into the United Kingdom in the current year, as refugees from the former Yugoslavia; what additional resources the Government have made available to local authorities and voluntary organisations to help with the cost of caring for those children; and whether she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The Home Office is responsible for policy and information on asylum issues. Detailed information could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, I understand that between 2 August and 31 October 1992 a total of 901 dependants—mainly children—arrived in the United Kingdom as dependants accompanying asylum applicants from the former Yugoslavia and have been temporarily admitted. No additional resources have been made available by the Government to local authorities or voluntary organisations.

South Birmingham Health Authority

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what disciplinary action has been taken against managers in South Birmingham health authority in respect of the deficit facing that authority; and what were the results.

Dr. Mawhinney: Disciplinary action is a matter for the South Birmingham district and West Midlands regional health authority.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how widely the KPMG Peat Marwick report into South Birmingham health authority has been circulated; and if she will place a copy in the Library.

Dr. Mawhinney: The KPMG Peat Marwick report has been formally circulated to the national health service management executive, to directors of West Midlands regional health authority and the directors of South Birmingham health authority. Its circulation is a matter for the regional health authority.

EMPLOYMENT

Homeworkers

13. Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what estimates she has of the numbers of homeworkers in the United Kingdom.

Mr. McLoughlin: It is estimated that some 667,000 people work at home in the United Kingdom as their main job, including those who are self-employed.

Earnings

14. Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people in the north are earning half or less than half of male average earnings.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Around 90,000 men, including those working part time.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information she has for the currrent year on the number and proportion of (a) male, (b) female and (c) all full-time adult employees in each standard region who earn less than two thirds of median male earnings.

Mr. McLoughlin: Two thirds of median gross hourly earnings for full-time male adult employees was £4·65 in April 1992. The estimated numbers and proportions of employees earning less than this amount are given in the table.

Mr. McLoughlin: Due to the considerable amount of information requested, I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is her estimate of the number and proportion of (a) male, (b) female and (c) all full-time adult employees who earn less than 68 per cent. of average earnings in each standard region.

Mr. McLoughlin: In April 1992, 68 per cent. of average gross hourly earnings for all full-time adult employees was £5·10. The estimated numbers and proportions of employees earning less than this amount are given in the table.

Unemployment

15. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the latest unemployment figures at the latest possible date; and if she will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The figure is 2,843,300; this is some 280,700 less than at its peak in July 1986.

16. Mr. Mathew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what change there has been in male unemployment in Cornwall over the past 12 months.

Mr. McLoughlin: On the unadjusted basis, the number of male unemployed claimants in the county of Cornwall increased by 2,897 between September 1991 and September 1992.

17. Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make a statement about the current levels of unemployment in London.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In September 1992 the seasonally adjusted figure for people unemployed and claiming benefit in Greater London was 444,600.

19. Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people in Yorkshire and Humberside are registered unemployed; and what percentage this is of the local work force.

Mr. McLoughlin: In September 1992, seasonally adjusted claimant unemployment in Yorkshire and Humberside was 240,100 or 10·1 per cent., of the work force.

24. Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action is being taken at a European Community level under the British presidency to help combat unemployment.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. Friends are fighting to complete the single market and secure a conclusion of the general agreement on tariffs and trade round which is vital for jobs in Europe. We will also continue to oppose job destroying measures like the working time directive.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make a statement on the levels of unemployment within Wakefield metropolitan district.

Mr. McLoughlin: In September 1992, claimant unemployment on the unadjusted basis in Wakefield local authority district stood at 14,639.

Youth Training

18. Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of those leaving youth training in the latest convenient period have found full-time employment within six months.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Forty-five per cent. of young people leaving youth training in 1991 in Great Britain were in full-time employment six months later. A further 20 per cent. were in part-time work or further education or training.

Qualifications

20. Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what measures she is taking to produce a better qualified work force.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Erith and Crayford (Mr. Evennett) earlier today.

22. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress she can report towards a national system of vocational qualifications.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The National Council for Vocational Qualifications (NCVQ) is undertaking the lead role in the reform of the vocational qualifications system in England, Wales and Northern Ireland. The Scottish Vocational Education Council (SCOTVEC) is undertaking parallel work in Scotland.

NCVQ and SCOTVEC are on target to have accredited by the end of 1992 national vocational qualifications (NVQs) and Scottish vocational qualifications (SVQs) covering 80 per cent. of the employed population at levels 1 to 4 of the national framework. These cover all the most economically significant occupations.

SVQs are based on the same standards of competence as NVQs and both sets of qualifications are therefore fully compatible. For the first time we will have a genuinely United Kingdom-wide system of vocational qualifications.

Coal Mining Communities

21. Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the latest steps she has taken to ensure continuing employment for mineworkers and school leavers in mining areas; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: A substantial package of employment and training measures to assist areas affected by colliery closures is set out in my right hon. Friend's letter of 19 October to the Chairman of the Employment Select Committee, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Training and Enterprise Councils

23. Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make a statement on the funding of training and enterprise councils in 1992-93.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Training and enterprise councils have a key role in working with other bodies towards achieving the Government's strategic priorities for training, enterprise and vocational education. We have made £2·2 billion available for TEC delivered programmes.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will publish the budget agreed with each training and enterprise council in England for 1992-93, broken down into the five major expenditure blocks; if she will give comparable information for each TEC for 1991-92; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information is not available in the precise form requested as expenditure blocks are no longer the basis for agreeing TEC budgets. Information about TEC programme budgets is available and details are shown on the tables. The £2·1 billion planned expenditure for programmes operated by TECs/LECs for 1992-93, is over £100 million more than was spent last year.

Manufacturing Employment

25. Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what measures she intends to introduce in order to arrest the decline in manufacturing jobs in the north-west region.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Employment Service and training and enterprise councils deliver a wide range of employment, enterprise and training programmes to help unemployed people find the best and quickest route back to employment, whether in the manufacturing or other sectors.

Labour Statistics

26. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will give the latest available figure for (a) registered jobs vacancies and (b) unemployment in the Houghton and Washington constituency; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: In September 1992 there were 166 unfilled vacancies registered in jobcentres serving the Houghton and Washington parliamentary constituency. The number of unemployed claimants in the constituency, on the unadjusted basis, was 5,226.

Jobcentre vacancies represent only a minor proportion of the number available in the economy.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will publish a table showing the proportions of (a) men and (b) women, broken down by ethnic origin and employment by occupational group—standard occupational classification—for (i) Great Britain and (ii) the west midlands region in 1992.

Mr. McLoughlin: Information from the labour force survey is given in the table:

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is her estimate of the number of male and female part-time workers in Great Britain in April.

Mr. McLoughlin: Estimates of part-time workers are derived from quarterly employment surveys. These are carried out in March, June, September and December of each year, so April figures are not available. Latest figures are as follows:

Part-time work force in employment in Great Britain
Seasonally adjusted

Wages Councils

27. Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many workers in the northern region are currently covered by wages councils orders.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is estimated that some 140,000 workers, aged 21 or over, are covered by the wages councils in the wages inspectorate's northern division.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list the number of employees covered by each wages council, indicating the proportion of women in each case.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 2 November 1992]: The estimated number of workers covered by each wages council in March 1992 is detailed in the table. Approximately two thirds of all wages council workers are women, but I regret that there are no estimates of the number of women covered by individual councils.

Estimated number of workers covered by wages councils: March 1992

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the ratio of wages inspectors to wages council establishments and employees covered by wages councils respectively in 1979 and each succeeding year.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 2 November 1992]: The information requested is in the table:

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the present establishment of wages inspectors.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 2 November 1992]: The present complement of wages inspectors is 71 posts.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of employees covered by wages councils are estimated by her Department as being paid (a) less than the wages council pay rate, (b) at the wages council pay rate and (c) more than the wages council pay rate.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 2 November 1992]: Estimates, based on an analysis of employers' wage records checked by the wages inspectorate, show that only 3 per cent. to 4 per cent. of workers are underpaid. Of the remainder, about one third are paid on, or only just above, the council minimum rate, with two thirds paid significantly above the minimum.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many wages inspectors are at present in post.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 2 November 1992]: There are 55 wages inspectors in post.

Mineworkers

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make a statement on the work of the Health and Safety Executive in relation to mineworkers.

Dr. Mawhinney: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) on 30 October at columns 936-37. Health authorities are responsible for monitoring and assessing the health needs of the populations they serve, and responding to special needs as they arise.

Disabled People (Grants)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much is currently allocated by her Department to publicise grants established to assist trainees and employees with disabilities; and if she will list the publicity material produced by her Department relating to such grants during 1991 and, to date, in 1992.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is not possible to provide the information on expenditure in the form requested.

The Department provides a variety of grants, free loans and similar financial assistance which were established to assist trainees and employees generally, including any with disabilities. Expenditure on publicising that financial help cannot be broken down to identify an element relating to people with disabilities.

In addition, there is a range of material which publicises financial assistance aimed specifically at people with disabilities but also publicises other schemes and services. The element relating to grants or other financial assistance cannot be identified separately.

Information on the resources devoted by training and enterprise councils to publicising grants or similar financial assistance for which they are responsible is not collected centrally.

The following publicity material relates to grants, free loans and similar financial assistance established to assist only people with disabilities (including employees) and was all available (in this or a slightly different form) in 1991 and, to date, in 1992:

—Travel of work grants leaflet (PWD1)
—Personal reader service leaflet (PWD2)
—Special aids to employment (PWD3)
—Adaptations to premises and equipment leaflet (PWD4)
—Working at home with technology (PWD6)
—Job introduction scheme leaflet (EPWD7)
—Personal reader service leaflet (EPWD8)
—Special aids to employment (EPWD9)
—Adaptations to premises and equipment leaflet (EPWD10)
—Working at home with technology (EPWD13)
—Sheltered placement scheme leaflet (SPSL1)
—Sheltered placement scheme leaflet (SPSL2)

There is a wide range of other publicity material which mentions financial assistance that can assist trainees and employees with disabilities, including:

—Just the job booklet (EMPL45)
—Job hunting for people with disabilities handbook (PWD16) and tape version
—Employing people with disabilities sources of help leaflet (PEL2)
—Employing people with disabilities, multiple sclerosis leaflet (EPWD17)
—Employing people with disabilities, mental illness leaflet (EPWD18)
—Employing people with disabilities, mental handicap leaflet (EPWD19)
—Employing people with disabilities, deaf and hearing impaired leaflet (EPWD20)
—Employing people with disabilities, epilepsy leaflet (EPWD21)
—Employing pepole with disabilities, blind and visually impaired leaflet (EPWD22)
—Employing people with disabilities, haemophilia leaflet (EPWD25)
—Disabled persons register leaflet (PWD5)
—Sheltered placement scheme video

Career Development Scheme

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment for each region, and for Great Britain as a whole, how many applications for loans under the career development scheme have been made in 1992 and how many have been rejected; how many women have been awarded loans; how many employment training participants have been awarded loans; what have been the successful course completion rates in each region; how much has been awarded in total for each region and how much has been recovered; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Information by region on the number of loans approved under the career development loan scheme, numbers of applications rejected, number of loans approved for women, the value of loans approved and the successful course completion rate are shown in the tables. The information given is for the period October 1991 to the end of September 1992.

Details of the number of ET participants and of the amount of money repaid are not available.

Further information on career development loans can be found in the 1991-92 annual report. This will be published in mid-November and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what is the latest information she has on the percentage of men and women in each occupational group for (a) youth training and (b) employment training; what is the comparable information for one year previously; and if she will make a statement;

(2) for each region and for Great Britain as a whole, how many and what proportion of all employment training participants were within (a) the guarantee group and (b) the aim group for each year since 1989, and for 1992-93; and if she will make a statement;

(3) if she will list the qualifications that were achieved by participants for each six-month period of employment training since September 1990.

Mr. McLoughlin: As the information is contained in a considerable number of tables, I will write to the hon. Member.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what arrangements have been made to ensure that unemployed claimants who join a place on employment training do not lose payments and coverage from conditions in mortgage protection insurance policies which require them to obtain regular confirmation from the Employment Service that they are available for and actively seeking work; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. Fogden to Ms. Clare Short, dated 3 November 1992:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question about what arrangements have been made to ensure that unemployed claimants who join a place on Employment Training (ET) do not lose payments and coverage from conditions in mortgage protection insurance policies which require them to obtain regular confirmation from the Employment Service that they are available for and actively seeking work. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

It is our policy to provide factual information to insurance companies, or other organisations, providing the request is accompanied by the consent of the client concerned. After recent meetings between my people and representatives from the Association of British Insurers, a standardised insurance form has been designed which will be used in all my offices to ensure that information about clients is supplied swiftly and accurately. This should help insurance companies to reach quick and appropriate decisions on what payments may be due under the terms of the client's policy. The information that we supply to the insurance companies includes the dates that a client has been "signing on" as unemployed, the benefits in payment, whether the client is in part-time employment and whether the claim is suspended or disallowed for any reason, such as a doubt that a client is available for or actively seeking work.

It may be helpful if I explain the ET payment system. Participation on the programme is voluntary and the general principle governing the entitlement to training allowance is that every trainee should be £10 per week better off than they would be if they remained (or became) unemployed. Training allowance is therefore paid at a level equal to their previous benefit rate but with the addition of a £10 training premium. People on ET cannot simply continue to receive the benefits that they were getting before, for example, unemployment benefit, because by joining ET they cease to satisfy the eligibility conditions for those benefits.

Whether payments under insurance policies can be made to people who are participating in Employment Training is a matter for the insurance companies, depending on the detailed terms of the policy taken out by the client. In general these require people to be unemployed, available for and actively seeking work in order for payments to be made.

If however, payments under insurance policies cannot be made, clients may, if they have not already done so, wish to seek help with housing costs through Income Support (IS).

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Employment Service

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list by grade and number employed the staffing costs for the year 1991-92 and the estimate for 1992-93 for the Employment Service.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. Fogden to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 3 November 1992:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question asking for a list by grade and number employed, the staffing costs for the year 1991/92 and the estimate for 1992-93 for the Employment Service. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as the Chief Executive of the Agency.

The number of staff employed by the Employment Service has increased steadily over the last eighteen months. Whilst the overall staff usage is monitored monthly average figures by grade are not produced. A detailed count of staff is carried out annually on 1 April and I am enclosing two sets of tables showing the Employment Service staff in post by grade at the 1 April 1991 and the 1 April 1992.

During the 1991-92 financial year the Employment Service spent just over £525 million on salaries. The salary allocation for 1992/93 is £624 million.

As decided by the Administrative Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Coal Industry

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were employed in the coal industry (a) in 1987 and (b) at the latest available date.

Mr. McLoughlin: There were 62,000 employees in employment in coal extraction and solid fuels in Great Britain in August 1992, the latest date for which information is available. This compares with 142,000 people in August 1987.

Unemployed Graduates

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is her estimate of the number of graduates in (a) engineering and (b) the social sciences who are currently unemployed.

Mr. McLoughlin: I regret that this information is not available.

Occupational Disease

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will give the figures for deaths in the United Kingdom from occupational disease and the numbers of doctors employed in the employment medical advisory service for each year since 1980.

Mr. McLoughlin: The available figures for deaths due to asbestosis, mesothelioma and other industrial diseases, and for doctors in the Health and Safety Executive's (HSE) employment medical advisory service, are given in the table:

Deaths from occupational diseases, and doctors employed in HSE's employment medical advisory service in Great Britain

Year	Asbestosis	Mesothelioma	Other diseases	Doctors
1980	102	458	697	71·5
1981	137	472	633	75·0
1982	128	504	624	64·0
1983	121	573	655	65·0
1984	129	624	531	62·5
1985	140	615	587	62·0
1986	166	702	524	60·0
1987	144	808	484	55·5
1988	152	862	—	46·5
1989	157	900	—	45·0
1990	163	882	—	46·0
1991	—	—	—	47·0
1992	—	—	—	52·0

Note: as at 1 April.

For asbestosis and mesothelioma, the numbers are of death certificates mentioning these conditions. An estimated 100 mesotheliomas annually are not asbestos related. For other diseases, the numbers are for awards of death benefit under the industrial injuries scheme up to the discontinuation of this benefit in April 1988. These figures exclude asbestos-related lung cancers, which are estimated to be about twice as numerous as mesotheliomas.

Health and Safety Conference

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how her Department will be represented at the health and safety enforcement in Europe conference to be held at the Queen Elizabeth II centre between 9 and 11 November.

Mr. McLoughlin: The conference is being organised jointly by the Health and Safety Executive and the Institution of Environmental Health Officers; it is a presidency special event which is aimed at those concerned with the enforcement of health and safety legislation in member states of the European Community. I will be giving the keynote speech at the conference. A number of Health and Safety Executive officials will be speaking.

Redundancies

Dr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total number of redundancies in the south-west in the last quarter for which figures are available.

Mr. McLoughlin: Data on redundancies are obtained from the labour force survey, the confirmed redundancy series having been discontinued. Estimates from the spring 1992 labour force survey show that, in the three months prior to the survey, 25,000 people were made redundant in the south-west.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total number of redundancies in Greater London in the last quarter for which figures are available.

Mr. McLoughlin: Data on redundancies are obtained from the labour force survey, the confirmed redundancy series having been discontinued. Estimates from the spring 1992 labour force survey show that, in the three months prior to the survey, 37,000 people were made redundant in Greater London.

European Community

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the number of civil servants in her Department whose main task is work related wholly or mainly to the European Community.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The number of civil servants in the Employment Department whose main task is work wholly or mainly related to the European Community is 158, including clerical and secretarial staff. Of these, 62 staff are concerned with applications for grants from the European social fund. Of course the total number of staff who spend a proportion of their time on European Community business is much larger.

Pharmaceutical Industry

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were employed in the pharmaceutical industry in each standard region in (a) 1979 and (b) currently.

Mr. McLoughlin: The earliest and most recent consistent estimates of employees in employment in the pharmaceutical industry, by standard region, are from the 1981 and 1989 censuses of employment. Data can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

European Community

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the number of civil servants in his Department whose main task is work related wholly or mainly to the European Community.

Mr. Curry: Records are not kept to distinguish between staff in my Department who are engaged wholly or mainly on European Community related work and those who are not, and therefore it is not possible to provide an accurate breakdown of numbers. However, estimates given previously and still holding good are that between one quarter and one third of the Department's staff, including common services and support staff, are engaged directly or indirectly on work arising from EC membership. On 1 October 1992 this was between 2,550 and 3,400 people.

In addition the 1,066 staff of the Intervention Board executive agency are wholly engaged on EC-related work.

Organic Agriculture

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his intentions with respect to implementing his commitment to seek agreement in the Agriculture Council to provide financial encouragement for organic agriculture.

Mr. Gummer: The agri-environment regulation agreed in July provides a framework within which financial aid to encourage organic farming could be provided. Proposals for such a scheme would need to be considered in the context of our agri-environment measures to be presented to the Commission.

Agri-environment

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what new schemes he intends to implement in order to maximise the benefits to the United Kingdom environment and agriculture under the agri-environment regulation.

Mr. Gummer: This will have to be considered in the context of the agri-environment measures to be presented to the Commission. We have until July 1993 to present these and will consult widely before taking final decisions.

Mink

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current number of representations he has received opposing the abolition of the Mink Keeping Order.

Mr. Soames: Of the responses received in direct response to the consultation exercise inviting views on the future arrangements for the secure keeping of mink, 21 organisations supported the option of renewing the order instead of letting it lapse. Support for renewal has also been received from two hon. Members.

Famine Relief

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the charging basis for the use of EC food surpluses for famine relief purposes.

Mr. Curry: Community food aid for famine relief purposes is normally supplied free of charge. Member states are reimbursed the full value from the Community budget.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what effect the use of EC food surpluses for famine relief purposes has on the accounting cost of the common agricultural policy.

Mr. Curry: Normally, none, because the cost reflecting world market prices is charged to the Community food aid budget, with the difference between the world prices and the EC price—the EC support cost—being charged as CAP expenditure. Exceptionally, however, the full cost of some emergency food aid measures to eastern European countries has been charged to the CAP budget. The 1992 budget contains provisions for 385 mecu—£279 million—for such exceptional measures.

Trade Deficits

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what is the projected trade deficit for flowers and ornamental plants in the year 1992-93; and what it was for each of the years from 1987-88 to 1991-92, shown for EC countries and non-EC countries and displayed as a percentage of the total food deficit;

(2) what is the projected trade deficit for sheep and goats in the year 1992-93; and what it was for each of the years from 1987-88 to 1991-92, shown for EC countries and non-EC countries and displayed as a percentage of the total food deficit;

(3) what is the projected trade deficit for rye and maslin in the year 1992-93; and what it was for each of the years from 1987-88 to 1991-92, shown for EC countries and non-EC countries and displayed as a percentage of the total food deficit;

(4) what is the projected trade deficit for barley in the year 1992-93; and what it was for each of the years from 1987-88 to 1991-92, shown for EC countries and non-EC countries and displayed as a percentage of the total food deficit;

(5) what is the projected trade deficit for sugarbeet in the year 1992-93; and what it was for each of the years from 1987-88 to 1991-92, shown for EC countries and non-EC countries and displayed as a percentage of the total food deficit;

(6) what is the projected trade deficit for cattle including calves in the year 1992-93; and what it was for each of the years from 1987-88 to 1991-92, shown for EC countries and non-EC countries and displayed as a percentage of the total food deficit;

(7) what is the projected trade deficit for milk in the year 1992-93; and what it was for each of the years from 1987-88 to 1991-92, shown for EC countries and non-EC countries and displayed as a percentage of the total food deficit;

(8) what is the projected trade deficit for wool in the year 1992-93; and what it was for each of the years from 1987-88 to 1991-92, shown for EC countries and non-EC countries and displayed as a percentage of the total food deficit;

(9) what is the projected trade deficit for pulses in the year 1992-93; and what it was for each of the years from 1987-88 to 1991-92, shown for EC countries and non-EC countries and displayed as a percentage of the total food deficit;

(10) what is the projected trade deficit for wheat and spelt in the year 1992-93; and what it was for each of the years from 1987-88 to 1991-92, respectively shown for EC countries and non-EC countries and displayed as a percentage of the total food deficit;

(11) what is the projected trade deficit for fresh vegetables in the year 1992-93; and what it was for each of the years from 1987-88 to 1991-92, shown for EC countries and non-EC countries and displayed as a percentage of the total food deficit;

(12) what is the projected trade deficit for seeds in the year 1992-93; and what it was for each of the years from 1987-88 to 1991-92, shown for EC countries and non-EC countries and displayed as a percentage of the total food deficit;

(13) what is the projected trade deficit for poultry in the year 1992-93; and what it was for each of the years from 1987-88 to 1991-92, shown for EC countries and non-EC countries and displayed as a percentage of the total food deficit;

(14) what is the projected trade deficit for nursery plants in the year 1992-93; and what it was for each of the years from 1987-88 to 1991-92, shown for EC countries and non-EC countries and displayed as a percentage of the total food deficit;

(15) what is the projected trade deficit for oats and summer cereal mixture in the year 1992-93; and what it was for each of the years from 1987-88 to 1991-92, shown for EC countries and non-EC countries and displayed as a percentage of the total food deficit;

(16) what is the projected trade deficit for oil seeds and oleaginous fruit except olives in the year 1992-93; and what it was for each of the years from 1987-88 to 1991-92, shown for EC countries and non-EC countries and displayed as a percentage of the total food deficit;

(17) what is the projected trade deficit for potatoes in the year 1992-93; and what it was for each of the years from 1987-88 to 1991-92, shown for EC countries and non-EC countries and displayed as a percentage of the total food deficit;

(18) what is the projected trade deficit for fresh fruit in the year 1992-93; and what it was for each of the years from 1987-88 to 1991-92, shown for EC countries and non-EC countries and displayed as a percentage of the total food deficit;

(19) what is the projected trade deficit for equines in the year 1992-93; and what it was for each of the years from 1987-88 to 1991-92, shown for EC countries and non-EC countries and displayed as a percentage of the total food deficit;

(20) what is the projected trade deficit for pigs in the year 1992-93; and what it was for each of the years from 1987-88 to 1991-92, shown for EC countries and non-EC countries and displayed as a percentage of the total food deficit;

(21) what is the projected trade deficit for eggs in the year 1992-93; and what it was for each of the years from 1987-88 to 1991-92, shown for EC countries and non-EC countries and displayed as a percentage of the total food deficit;

(22) what is the projected trade deficit for hops in the year 1992-93; and what it was for each of the years from 1987-88 to 1991-92, shown for EC countries and non-EC countries and displayed as a percentage of the total food deficit.

Mr. Curry: The table shows figures for the United Kingdom trade balance for the commodity groups requested. However, there is no official information available on trade in "summer cereal mixture" and maslin is only recorded with wheat in the overseas trade statistics. The figures are on a calendar year basis, the form in which they are most readily available. Figures are also given for trade in "Food, Feed and Drink", the Ministry's standard aggregate, but comparisons with this aggregate in percentage terms would not be meaningful. There is no readily available aggregate dealing only with food items.

Ostriches

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what guidelines he has issued to local authorities on dealing with planning applications and welfare issues of commercial ostrich farms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The Government have issued planning guidance to local authorities on the agricultural implications of planning applications and development plans, but this does not include specific guidance on ostrich farming.

The welfare of farmed animals is the responsibility of the state veterinary service which is monitoring ostrich farms. Local authorities have been asked to inform the SVS of any applications for licences to keep ostriches under the Dangerous Wild Animals Act 1976 as amended so that their welfare can be monitored.

Abattoirs

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many abattoirs are currently operational in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) England, (c) Wales, (d) Humberside and (e) south Humberside; and how many in each section currently meet latest EC hygiene regulations.

Mr. Soames: At present all abattoirs in Great Britain operate under licences granted by local authorities. Records are not routinely maintained centrally on the operational status of individual abattoirs, other than those which are approved for intra-Community trade. However, annual statistics derived from state veterinary service visits indicate the following approximate figures for the areas in question:

(a) United Kingdom—686 abattoirs of which 98 are EC export approved.

(b) England—554 abattoirs of which 54 are EC export approved.

(c) Wales—52 abattoirs of which 4 are EC export approved.

(d) Humberside—13 abattoirs of which 1 is EC export approved.

(e) South Humberside—1 abattoir which is EC export approved.

With effect from 1 January 1993 Agriculture Departments will be responsible for licensing all abattoirs. Staff of the state veterinary service are in the process of visiting all abattoirs wishing to continue trading after this date in order to assess their compliance with the Fresh Meat (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1992, which implement the single market hygiene requirements.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Asylum

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what statistics he keeps on the reasons for refusal of asylum cases; and if he will publish these, including the number of refusals on the ground of multiple applications.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The main statistics available are of refusals after determination of the claim to refugee status, those on safe third country grounds and those under paragraph 101 of the immigration rules. For these statistics I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 20 October 1992, Official Report, columns 261-62. Figures for refusals of multiple applications are not identifiable separately.

Immigration

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with EC counterparts to harmonise the primary purpose rule with practices in other EC countries.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Discussions have been held at official level in the ad hoc group on immigration with a view to agreeing a set of principles and a resolution on the harmonisation of family reunification policies in the member states. The existence in the United Kingdom of the primary purpose rule has been taken into account in those discussions.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken since June to reduce levels of secrecy in the work of the ad hoc group on immigration.

Mr. Charles Wardle: A public statement on the decisions and conclusions adopted will be made in the normal way following the meeting of EC Ministers concerned with immigration on 30 November.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of how many individuals are in the United Kingdom (a) illegally, (b) in breach of their entry conditions and (c) otherwise in the United Kingdom unofficially.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Comprehensive information on the number of immigration offenders resident in the United Kingdom is not available, and it is not possible to make a reliable estimate. In many cases it is not possible to determine whether a person is an immigration offender until he/she has been traced and interviewed. In the 12 months up to the end of June 1992, some 8,800 immigration offenders were detected and served with illegal entry notices or with notices of intention to deport for being in breach of their conditions to enter or remain.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the topics and proposals on immigration, asylum and other matters that Her Majesty's Government are putting before the Edinburgh summit.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Immigration and asylum matters will be discussed by immigration Ministers of EC member states on 30 November. It is too early to say whether any of these matters will need to be referred to the Edinburgh European Council.

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the meeting of the ad hoc European group on immigration held on 10 and 11 September giving details of its conclusions, of how Parliament will be kept informed about the group's proceedings, of what matters are currently under consideration by the group, when the group will meet again, what sub-groups have been formed and for which subjects.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer the hon. Member to the answers that I gave on 19 October 1992, Official Report, cols 50-52, to his previous questions on this matter.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to establish a system to compensate individuals who have suffered damage, loss, inconvenience or general disadvantages as a result of poor quality of service from the immigration and nationality department.

Mr. Charles Wardle: There are arrangements in place for making ex gratia compensation payments in certain circumstances where a person has suffered financial loss as a direct result of negligence, error or delay by an officer of the Home Office.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) in each year since 1988 that evidence from DNA testing has been available to immigration appeals against refusing entry to children, what percentage of original refusals by entry clearance officers were (a) correct and (b) incorrect;

(2) how many individuals initially refused entry because of not being related as claimed and subsequently accepted as related after DNA testing have (a) subsequently reapplied for entry and (b) been refused, giving as a percentage the grounds of the refusal in each category.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information is not available in the form requested. I will write to the hon. Member setting out such figures on cases involving DNA evidence as can be obtained at reasonable cost.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for the latest year for which figures are available, of those persons refused entry under the primary purpose rule how many were married to (a) British citizens, (b) citizens of another nation, but settled in the United Kingdom and (c) other categories as totals and as a percentage of the whole.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the subjective and the objective criteria used in each of the EC countries which are comparable to the primary purpose rule in the United Kingdom in respect of applications from a spouse to join his or her partner.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is not available. It is a matter for each member state to decide, in accordance with its national immigration legislation, what criteria to apply in relation to the admission of spouses.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to the current situation of the Zairean national who was returned to Zaire in May 1991 whose case subsequently gave rise to contempt of court proceedings involving the Minister's predecessor.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Treasury Solicitor was informed on 18 July 1991 that the person concerned had contacted his legal representatives from Nigeria. We have heard nothing more as to his whereabouts since then.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many members of staff have been employed by the immigration and nationality department to deal specifically with applications for asylum in each of the past five years; and if he will make it his policy to ensure a regular review of staffing levels in the department.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The number of staff employed in the asylum division to deal specifically with applications for asylum on 1 October in each of the last five years was as follows:

Year	Number
1988	52
1989	62
1990	86
1991	200
1992	435

Staffing levels are kept under constant review.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many additional individuals have joined their spouse in the United Kingdom as a result of the change in guidance in June to no longer use primary purpose as a reason to refuse in cases where a marriage has existed for five years or where there is a child of the marriage with the right of abode in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement on the trends emerging from this change.

Mr. Charles Wardle: It is not possible to make an estimate of the effect of this change. The available information on decisions on entry clearance applications in respect of spouses relates only to those made in the Indian sub-continent; the latest statistics for which are published in tables 8 and 9 of the Home Office Statistical Bulletin "Control of Immigration: Statistics—First and Second Quarters of 1992". A copy of this bulletin is in the Library.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will issue guidelines setting out the type of questions to be asked at entry clearance interviews of non-EC nationals at United Kingdom ports.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Existing instructions to immigration officers are to the effect that questioning should be confined to what is relevant to the decisions the officer will have to make. Cases vary greatly, and I see no need for more detailed guidelines.

Procedures at entry clearance interviews overseas are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary, but similar principles are followed.

Refugees

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has for burden sharing with other EC countries in respect of refugees from non-EC countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Member states of the European Community provide assistance in different ways in response to refugee problems, but no plans are under consideration for burden-sharing in the sense of distributing refugees or asylum seekers within the territory of the Community in accordance with quotas for each member state.

Primates (Experiments)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many primates were used for research and testing in the United Kingdom in 1991.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information on the number of procedures on primates started in 1991 and the number of primates used during 1991 is contained in table 2a and 2b respectively of the Command Paper "Statistics of Scientific Procedures on Living Animals, Great Britain, 1991", a copy of which is in the Library.

Safer Cities

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out the timetable and procedure relating to the submissions for additional safer cities status.

Mr. Jack: The safer cities programme was originally intended to create 20 local projects, all of which have now been established. We remain committed to doubling the number of safer cities projects to 40, when circumstances and resources enable us to do so. At that time I will advise the hon. Member of the timetable and procedures which will be followed.

Prisons Inspectorate

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the dates on which he received the last 25 reports of inspections by Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons; and on what dates the reports were published by his Department.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The dates on which the 25 most recent inspection reports by Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons were submitted to me and on which they were published by the Inspectorate are as follows:

Inspection	Submission—1992	Publication—1992
HMP Styal	26 February	16 July

Electoral Registers

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total number of adults in the city of Southampton on the electoral register in use at the time of the general election on 9 April.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There were 146,499 parliamentary electors registered in the constituencies of Southampton, Itchen and Southampton, Test at the time of the general election on 9 April; 1,634 of these were young people (attainers) reaching 18 years of age during the currency of the 1992-93 register. Information about the number of young attainers who had reached voting age by 9 April is not held centrally.

Suicide

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many suicides by teenagers were attempted either while held in custody or in prison in Wales in the years 1981 to 1990; how many occurred in 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The number of acts of deliberate self-harm by teenagers in prison service establishments in Wales was 21 in 1990 and 24 in 1991. No distinction is made between attempted suicides and other acts of deliberate self-harm. Information for earlier years is not available. No deaths occurred as a result of acts of deliberate self-harm by teenagers in Welsh prisons in 1991.

Information about attempted suicides in police custody is not recorded centrally by the Home Office or by police forces in Wales. Questions relating to local authority secure accommodation in Wales are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Wolds Remand Centre

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the numbers and grades of staff employed at the Wolds remand centre.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There are 196 people working at Wolds prison. They include prisoner custody officers and supervisors; management, administrative and maintenance staff; full and part-time chaplains; subcontracted catering, medical and education staff and seconded probation officers.

Probation Service

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he intends to market test all or any of the work of the probation service in England and Wales.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 28 October 1992]: The Government's intention to apply market testing principles to aspects of the work undertaken by the probation service was set out in the "Competing for Quality" White Paper, including the encouragement of competition within both the public and independent sectors in the development and management of hostels.

Passports

Ms. Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many passports are lost each year when submitted for revision of name or other details to the Passport Agency.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the chief executive of the United Kingdom Passport Agency. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from J. Hayzelden to Ms. Tessa Jowell, dated 30 October 1992:

PASSPORTS

The Home Secretary has asked me to write to you in response to your Parliamentary Question about passports submitted to the Passport Agency for revision of name or other details.

The UK Passport Agency issues over 3 million new or replacement passports each year. In addition, over 250,000 passports are submitted for a change of name or the addition of children's names. Most of these new, replacement or amended passports are sent out by post, although there is a facility for customers to collect their completed passports in person if this is more convenient.

It is very rare for a passport that has been submitted for a name change to be lost in the Passport Office, though some do go astray in the post. For that reason, we do not keep separate statistics. I am aware of a particular problem that arose in relation to one of your constituents on which you are in correspondence with the London Passport Office. We are naturally keen to ensure that such problems do not arise in future. We have impressed on all staff the importance of document security, both from the point of view of customer service and the prevention of passport fraud.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Turks and Caicos Islands

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has to give greater autonomy to the Turks and Caicos islands.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: A constitutional commissioner visited the Turks and Caicos Islands in February 1992 and his report was placed in the libraries of the House of Commons and House of Lords on 27 July. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs will decide what action to take about the commissioner's recommendations once consultation with the Turks and Caicos Islands is complete.

European Community Law

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Stafford (Mr. Cash) of 2 July, Official Report, column 696, if he will make a statement on the principal duties of citizens which flow from the direct effect of EC law.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Mostly EC laws concern Governments, public bodies and companies. However, some do affect individuals directly, especially if they are traders, eg the Directive on Toy Safety. Another example, binding on all, is the duty to inform the authorities of the transfer of a firearm under the Weapons Directive. Nowhere is there any duty of the kind normally regarded as deriving from national citizenship, eg military service.

Albania

Sir Geoffrey Pattie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the level of consular representation in Albania; whether he will extend that representation to full embassy status; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There is a British chargé d'affaires in Tirana. He undertakes a limited range of consular functions. There are no immediate plans to change this arrangement.

Maastricht Treaty

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Heads of State of Community member states hold any different status under article 8 of the treaty of Rome proposed under the Maastricht treaty from that held by other citizens of the union.

Mr. Garel-Jones: No. Heads of Community member states will be entitled to the same rights as other citizens of the European union.

Baltic States

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made by Her Majesty's Government concerning the decision by the Russian Government to slow, or cease, the withdrawal of troops from the Baltic countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are in frequent contact with the Russian Government about the withdrawal of former Soviet troops from the Baltic states and will, of course, be expressing our concern about the latest developments. We were encouraged by the Russian/Lithuanian agreement of 8 September on the withdrawal of troops by 31 August 1993, and look to Russia to agree to, and implement, similar timetables with Estonia and Latvia, in accordance with the terms of the Helsinki declaration of July 1992.

Council of Ministers

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a statement of forthcoming business in the European Community's Council of Ministers.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The information is as follows:

3. The Consumer Affairs Council will meet on 3 November where Ministers will seek to achieve a common position on the proposed 6th Council amendment to the cosmetics directive. The Council will also discuss the following: time-share and distance selling; comparative advertising; consumer aspects of the Sutherland report on operation of the Internal market; the enforcement of consumer protection law; the rapid information exchange system on consumer products and the European Home and Leisure Accident Surveillance System (EHLASS).

4. The Foreign Affairs Council will meet on 9 November. Items for consideration by Ministers will include follow up to the Birmingham European Council; further discussion on the Commission's proposals for the future financing of the Community (the "Delors II package") and progress on the current applications for EC membership. Ministers will also discuss the former Yugoslavia and the Community's response to the latest developments, including the humanitarian crisis. The Council will approve draft conclusions outlining the Commission approach to the second phase of the PHARE programme. A Cooperation Council with Turkey will also be held in the margins.

5. The Internal Market Council will meet on 10 November and will discuss the abolition of frontier controls; the 2nd company law directive; European company statute; making the Single Market work Post 1992; the Community trademark regulation; proposals for regulation and directives on the future system for the free movement of medicinal products; harmonisation of copyright term; a proposal for a Council regulation on the export of cultural goods, and standardisation and intellectual property. The Council may also consider the 2nd amendment of the machinery directive; external projections on certain goods vehicles; vehicle noise; rental and lending rights; an amendment to the public works directive; the food hygiene directive and the sweeteners directive.

6. The Culture Council will meet on 12 November. The Council will consider a Commission communication on new perspectives for the European City of Culture programme; a public awareness campaign for books and reading and a proposal for a regulation on the export of cultural goods.

7. The Health Council will meet on 13 November and will discuss a framework for future action in the field of public health. The Council is also expected to agree a draft resolution on the monitoring and surveillance of communicable diseases. Other items for discussion by Ministers include: a report on health education in schools; draft conclusions on the 2nd report on drug demand reduction; information on the European Drug Prevention Week; the draft directive on tobacco advertising and an evaluation of the 1991 report on "Europe against Cancer".

8. The Agriculture Council will meet on 16 and 17 November. Ministers will discuss bananas; the agrimonetary system; milk codification; Italian milk quotas; Spanish and Portuguese transitional arrangements, and the agriculture aspects of GATT. Discussion may also focus on: integrated administrative controls; New Zealand butter; sheep voluntary restraint agreements; animal identification; exotic diseases and general welfare.

9. The Budget Council will meet on 17 November to discuss the European Parliament's amendments and modifications as a result of their first reading of the draft budget for 1993.

10. The Development Council will meet on 18 November and will agree common objectives for the Community and member states for the 90s including a work programme and mechanisms for improving coordination and collaboration. Ministers will endorse priorities and objectives for the community in family planning in cooperation with developing countries. A review of the November 1991 resolution on human rights, democracy and development in the light of a Commission report on its implementation; how the Community's research and technology programmes might benefit developing countries, and details of the 3 becu promised by the Community in support of Agenda 21 at the Rio Conference will also be considered. The Council will discuss various aspects of the Community's response to disasters, including the Community and member states action in Somalia and their participation in the UN 100-day plan for Somalia, and ways of increasing flexibility of funding the Community response to disasters. An oral report on Community plans for Mozambique will also be heard. Other items for discussion include: an oral report on progress made in drafting a proposal on untying aid at Community level and a Commission paper which describes follow-up to the May 1991 Council resolution on NGOs.

11. The Telecommunications Council will meet on 19 November. Discussion will concentrate on the ONP directive on voice telephony; the Council resolution on frequencies, a review of the Article 90 services directive and the ONP framework directive; the HDTV action plan; the postal services green paper and the telecoms manufacturing industry. Trans-European networks, ETSI and intellectual property rights may also be discussed.

12. The Economic and Finance Council will meet on 23 November to consider further the Commission's proposals for the future financing of the Community (Delors II). Ministers will also discuss the Belgian convergence programme; aid to Romania and the Baltic States, and the abolition of fiscal frontiers. The Council will continue in its efforts to achieve a common position on the Investment Services Directive. The draft 7th Directive on the sale of second-hand goods, works of art, antiques and collector's items; the United Kingdom Presidency's paper on increases in the current Third Country travellers' allowances; matters concerning the Community action to combat fraud against the EC budget, and a request from Italy for a balance of payments loan may also be discussed. Further items for discussion may include: the draft simplification directives for VAT and excise, and the signing of the Customs Information system Convention by EC Finance Ministers.

13. The Fisheries Council will meet on 23 November. Ministers may discuss: annual price fixing on fish; tariff suspension/quotas; the new basic regulation that will replace 170/83; amendment of the structures regulation 4028/83 orientation debate on structural policy; new control regulations; the Commission report on industrial fishing and the Commission report on discards.

14. The Industrial Affairs Council will meet on 24 November. The Council hope to discuss resolutions on the strengthening of the Community's commitment to minimizing the administrative burdens placed on business by Community legislation and on the proper integration of environmental and industrial policies. Ministers are also expected to discuss the phasing out of the ECSC Treaty; the future direction of Community policy on small and medium sized enterprises; competition policy and the Commission proposal to allow Spain to give restructuring aid to its steel industry. Other items include: communications on maritime industries and Community non-energy mining.

15. The Education Council will meet on 27 November and will have an orientation debate on the proposal for a second phase of the TEMPUS programme, which offers support to the higher education systems of Central and Eastern Europe. Ministers will also discuss conclusions on measures for developing of the European dimension in higher education, and on criteria for the Community action on open and distance learning. The Council will consider a report on Health education in schools and the Commission's proposal for a programme of EC/US Cooperation in Education and Training. Amendment to the convention defining the statute of the European Schools, and a presentation from the Commission on the outcomes of the consultations on their memorandum on higher education in the EC is also likely to be discussed.

16. The Energy Council will meet on 30 November. Ministers will discuss proposals for the promotion of new and renewable energies (ALTENER); oil crisis measures; Community accession to the IEA, and harmonisation of hydrocarbon licensing regimes. The Council will also consider proposals for liberalisation of the gas and electricity markets; improved energy efficiency as well as progress in relation to the rest of the Community's strategy to limit CO_2 emissions, and the European Energy Charter. Discussion may further focus on a new Community regime for state aids to the coal industry.

North Atlantic Assembly

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the United Kingdom delegation to the North Atlantic Assembly.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The following will represent the United Kingdom at the North Atlantic Assembly:

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith, MP (Leader)
Mr. Robert Banks, MP
Mr. Winston Churchill, MP
Sir Peter Emery, MP
Mr. Michael Jopling, MP
Mr. Patrick Nicholls, MP
Mr. Peter Viggers, MP
Mr. Jerry Wiggin, MP
The Earl of Kimberley
Lord Lucas of Chilworth
Dr. David Clark, MP
Mr. Donald Anderson, MP
Mr. Harry Cohen, MP
Mr. Frank Cook, MP
Mr. Bruce George, MP
Mrs. Alice Mahon, MP
Lord Howell
Mr. Menzies Campbell, MP

Colombian Coal

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assurances he has been given by the Colombian authorities that coal being imported into the United Kingdom from Colombia does not come from mines which are exploiting child labour.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Government-owned Colombian coal company, Carbocol, has assured the British Government that no coal exported to the United Kingdom is produced using child labour.

International Atomic Energy Agency

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will provide details of the outcome of the meeting of the International Atomic Energy Agency board of governors in June.

Mr. Eggar: I have been asked to reply.

A copy of the International Atomic Energy Agency newsbrief for June-July 1992, containing details of the meetings of the June board of governors, has been deposited in the Library of the House.

Israel

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what restrictions remain in place on the export of nuclear materials or equipment to Israel.

Mr. Needham: I have been asked to reply.

Exports of nuclear materials or equipment to Israel as set out in the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1991, as amended, require a licence issued by the Department of Trade and Industry. Applications for export licences are considered on their individual merits and take account of advice received from other Government Departments which will reflect the United Kingdom's obligations in respect of nuclear non-proliferation.

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much has been spent by the International Atomic Energy Agency in each of the last five years on monitoring work in relation to the non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Eggar: I have been asked to reply.

The published accounts show that International Atomic Energy Agency expenditure on nuclear safeguards in each of the last five years has been as follows:

	United States $ million
1987	43·8
1988	47·5
1989	48·3
1990	58·6
1991	58·0

DEFENCE

Indonesian Armed Forces

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will discontinue the training of members of the Indonesian armed forces by the United Kingdom armed forces and in his Ministry's establishments.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Naval Bases

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide the most recent figures for the annual running costs of (a) Portland naval base, excluding the naval air station, (b) Portsmouth naval base and (c) Devonport naval base.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In 1991-92 the annual running costs of the three naval bases were:

Naval Base	£ million
(a) Portland (excluding air station)	12·1
(b) Portsmouth	99·7
(c) Devonport (excluding royal dockyard)	86·7

These totals exclude major expenditure on capital works and the cost of lodger units accommodated in all naval bases.

Defence Support Agency

Dr. Liam Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what performance targets have been set for the Director General of the Defence Accounts Defence Support Agency for the financial year 1992-93.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The director general of defence accounts has been set a range of revised targets for 1992-93 that will ensure continuing improvement in the quality of service he provides to Defence and other customers.

The targets set for the period 1992-93 are:

—To achieve the agreed Headquarters Staff reductions arising from Options for Change by 31 March 1993.

—To carry out agreed tasks to time and standard within budget.

—To seek to achieve, in co-operation with his customers, higher standards in the delivery of services.

—To establish a training policy and training plan by 31 March 1993.

—To seek further efficiencies in the use of resources, including the use of new technology, to the advantage of the Agency and its customers, thereby making efficiency savings of at least 0·5 per cent. of the total Cash Budget.

—To complete the feasibility stage of the mainframe replacement study by 30 September 1992.

—To take on new bill payment business from the Property Services Agency in respect of defence works by 31 March 1993.

—To continue to develop improved management and financial information systems which will meet the needs of internal management and satisfy requirements for reports from the Secretary of State.

—To ensure the successful implementation of the amendment of the MOD central ledger system for a revised vote structure to meet the needs of the new management strategy by 31 March 1993.

Performance against these key targets will be published in the director general's report and accounts in April next year, a copy of which will be placed in the Library of the House.

ENVIRONMENT

Council Housing

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received regarding the forthcoming local authority housing investment programme bids.

Mr. Baldry: As is customary, the relevant local authority associations have made representations at national level through the consultative mechanism under the Housing Consultative Council, and individual local housing authorities have submitted housing investment programme strategy statements and bids to my Department's regional offices. These will all be considered before decisions are announced in December.

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has for improving the right-to-repair scheme for council tenants.

Mr. Baldry: Provisions for a new right to repair are included in the Housing and Urban Development Bill introduced on 22 October. The new scheme will replace the existing right to repair and will enable secure tenants of local authorities to have qualifying urgent repairs carried out by a second contractor when the first has not done the work by a target date. Details of the scheme, including the qualifying repairs, will be set out in regulations which may also require landlords to pay compensation if the first contractor fails to do a repair within the target time.

Housing (Multiple Occupation)

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has received expressing objections to chapter 7 of the draft housing in multiple occupancy management guide; and if what is his policy toward that chapter.

Mr. Baldry: The Department received 22 representations which expressed objections to chapter 7 of the draft Houses in Multiple Occupation Management Guide; 48 responses to the consultation were received in total. All comments received will be taken into consideration when the final version of the management guide is to be produced in due course.

Homelessness

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to allow an automatic right of appeal to county courts for homeless applicants who are refused provision by a local authority.

Mr. Baldry: The Government have no immediate plans for further legislative change.

Private Rented Sector

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will issue guidelines requesting that each property within the private rented sector should be issued a minimum and maximum controlled rent level within the maximum rent payable when the property is proven to be of a set standard.

Mr. Baldry: No. Years of rent controls have contributed to the decline in the private rented sector. We removed these from most new lettings as part of the package of deregulation measures introduced by the Housing Act 1988 designed to revive the sector.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to ensure that tenants are enabled to take effective legal action against private rented sector landlords who default on repair obligations.

Mr. Baldry: Tenants can already take action against private landlords who fail to carry out repairs either by taking the landlord to court themselves or by bringing the matter to the attention of their local authority. Local authorities have powers to require private landlords to carry out repairs or if necessary to do the work themselves and charge the landlord. These powers were considerably strengthened by the Housing Act 1988. We therefore have no plans to make any further amendments to the legislation.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to encourage the establishment of rental deposit boards to monitor the return to private rented sector tenants of deposits against damage.

Mr. Baldry: Although we do not consider the compulsory use of rent deposit boards to be desirable, we would welcome any proposals to set up such schemes on a voluntary basis.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will issue guidelines to local authorities to encourage the setting up of licensing and monitoring systems for the private rented sector.

Mr. Baldry: No. We would not wish to introduce further regulation into the private rented sector.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will establish a committee of inquiry into private rented accommodation.

Mr. Baldry: No.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to establish a new form of protected tenancy within the private rented sector, with limited grounds granted for early repossession.

Mr. Baldry: We have no plans to introduce such a tenancy.

Domestic Water Supplies

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state by region the number of water disconnections for non-payment in 1991-92 and 1990-91 (a) for domestic properties and (b) for commercial properties.

Mr. Maclean: Water companies are obliged to report disconnections every six months to OFWAT's customer service committees. This information is collated and published by the Director General of Water Services in a press release twice a year. The following table contains the Director General's information on disconnection of domestic customers and non-domestic disconnections in the form requested.

(a) Disconnections by area (domestic)

Region	1991-92	1990-91
Central	4,797	462
Eastern	1,889	971
North West	2,074	889
Northumbria	1,009	662
South West	381	210
Southern	3,064	429

Yorkshire	217	143
All areas	2,391	1,551

Source: OFWAT 26 October 1992.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce proposals to ensure that public authorities are notified of any domestic water disconnections on grounds of health and safety.

Mr. Maclean: Section 63 of the Water Industry Act 1991 already requires a water undertaker who disconnects, or otherwise cuts off, a supply of water to any inhabited house and does so without restoring the supply to that house within 24 hours, to serve notice informing the local authority in whose area the house is situated no later than 48 hours after the supply is cut off.

Charities (Water Payments)

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will act to ensure that properties used for charitable or community use such as churches have concessionary standing charges for their water payments.

Mr. Maclean: No. Water companies are private companies and their charges must cover their costs and it is for them to decide their tariffs subject to the Director General of Water Services' duty under section 2(3)(a) of the Water Industry Act 1991, to ensure that their pricing is not discriminatory. The Director General recognises that standing charges may represent a large proportion of water charges for some customers and has asked water companies to consider their tariff structures to ensure that they reflect the true costs of supply in different cases.

Industrial Development, Merseyside

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he will make to further industrial development in the area of the Merseyside development corporation.

Mr. Robin Squire: MDC has a substantial programme of encouraging industrial development, through the creation of business parks, formation of industrial associations and strategy to secure inward investment. MDC's policies are discussed with the Department regularly, at the ministerial meeting on the corporate plan and with officials at the Merseyside task force throughout the year.

House Building

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration his Department has given to the access committee for England's publication, "Building Homes for Successive Generations: Criteria for Accessible General Housing"; what action he will be taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: I have seen a copy of this publication and will consider it together with other information, in order to establish how best to improve access for disabled people in new housing.

Home Energy Efficiency Scheme

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many houses in the network installer area which contains the constituency of East Edinburgh have been improved under the home energy efficiency scheme since the scheme's inception.

Mr. Maclean: Within the network installer area which contains the hon. Member's constituency, 3,534 homes have benefited from HEES grant since 1 January 1991.

Poll Tax

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total number of adults in the city of Southampton registered for the poll tax for the financial year 1992-93.

Mr. Robin Squire: The latest information available to the Department relates to the financial year 1991-92 when there were 156,600 people registered as subject to a personal community charge in Southampton.

Fraud

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many pregnant single women were prosecuted for fraud related to obtaining council house accommodation in each of the last five years and in the current year to the most recent practicable date.

Mr. Baldry: Such information is not held centrally.

Somerset House

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress he has made in opening up Somerset house to wider public access.

Mr. Channon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress he has made in opening up Somerset house to wider public access.

Mr. Howard: I have invited Mr. Trevor Osbourne, chairman of Speyhawk, in conjunction with the Prince of Wales' Institute of Architecture and with Kings college, to prepare within six months detailed proposals for possible future uses for Somerset house, involving, amongst others, the organisations and individuals, who have written to me and my Department with their ideas. I have stressed that the proposal should not incur any extra public expenditure.

Methane

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what the contributions to the United Kingdom total methane emissions from landfills in Scotland and Northern Ireland will be.

Mr. Maclean: Direct estimates of total methane production from landfills in Scotland and Northern Ireland have not been made. An estimate based on population and waste arising statistics suggests that the figure is likely to be between 10 per cent. and 15 per cent. of the total for England and Wales, or between 100,000 and 150,000 tonnes per annum.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Judges' Pensions

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will bring forward proposals to enable judges to purchase additional years for pension purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor announced during the Report stage of the Judicial Pensions and Retirement Bill in another place that it is his intention to bring forward further amendments to that Bill in order that members of either the present judicial pension schemes, or of the new scheme, may make voluntary contributions within Revenue limits toward the cost of benefits in addition to those otherwise obtainable under those schemes.

Consumer Credit Act 1974

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the number of orders granted under the Consumer Credit Act 1974 for all London courts.

Mr. John M. Taylor: This information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mortgage Arrears

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, (1) if he will publish for each of the county courts in London the usual length of the reasonable period in the allowance of time for mortgage borrowers to pay arrears;

(2) how many possession orders have been suspended but have not yet been enforced in each of London's county courts.

Mr. John M. Taylor: This information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what steps he will take, as part of his civil justice system review, to ensure that all county courts in London have a duty adviser scheme for home owners facing repossession.

Mr. John M. Taylor: There are no plans to ensure that all county courts in London have a duty adviser scheme for home owners facing repossession. From early next year, courts will send out a list of sources of free advice with each possession summons.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the county courts in London which have duty adviser schemes for home owners.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The London county courts which have duty adviser schemes for home owners provided by advice agencies are Lambeth, Bow, Clerkenwell and West London.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list, for each county court in London, the percentage figure that suspended possession orders represent as a total of the number of actions issued in each county court for home owners, the percentage figure for adjournments as part of the total number of actions entered for home owners, and the percentage figures as part of the total of absolute possession orders issued.

Mr. John M. Taylor: This information is not available and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what guidance he gives county court judges in defining the reasonable period and in the issue of time orders for payment of arrears of mortgage.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The guidance given is that there is no set period. Sometimes a period of 24 months should be considered; often a longer period will be appropriate, particularly where the equity is substantial or the remaining life of the mortgage long.

TRANSPORT

Public Service Vehicles

Mr. Alnger: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce legislation to tighten up the driving hours regulations for public service vehicles.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Both the current EC regulations and our domestic legislation on drivers' hours were designed to give drivers and operators flexibility, whilst retaining proper regard for road safety. We have no plans at present to propose changes.

Investment

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to stimulate new investments by British vessel owners.

Mr. Norris: Proposals for fiscal measures to stimulate investment are for the Chancellor of the Exchequer. The Department is considering with the Chamber of Shipping and within the EC what other measures might be taken to encourage the growth of the British and other European fleets. We have also been taking forward action on the recommendations of the report of the joint working party, "British Shipping: Challenges and Opportunities", which will help the general climate for investment.

Cyclists

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, as part of his quality of service objectives, he will require the publication of all reports relating to the safety of cyclists commissioned using public money.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: It is our general policy to publish all road safety research reports commissioned by the Department unless there is a particular reason for not doing so—for example, the need to respect commercial confidentiality.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on (a) the degree of concentration and (b) the likely effect of poisonous gases if Halon 1301 is used in the channel tunnel to suppress fire.

Mr. Freeman: The use of halon gas in the channel tunnel was reviewed by the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority in its paper "Non-segregation of drivers and passengers from their vehicles", a copy of which is in the Library of the House. In agreeing to the use of Halon 1301 the authority accepted evidence showing that halon is not harmful at the concentrations used to extinguish fires. Studies also show that the decomposition products of halon do not reach harmful concentrations if it is released before the fire has attained large proportions. But in view of possible irritant effects, the authority concluded that halon should not be released in the compartment of a tunnel shuttle wagon unless it had been evacuated or as a last resort if the lives of passengers were threatened.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will require the channel tunnel safety authority to publish information about the safety tests conducted on the channel tunnel.

Mr. Freeman: The safety authority propose to publish a commentary on the fire safety and evacuation tests being undertaken by Eurotunnel.

Shipping

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to meet the chairman of British Shipping to discuss the future of the British merchant fleet.

Mr. Norris: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and my right hon. and noble Friend Lord Caithness meet the president of the Chamber of Shipping and other industry representatives periodically to discuss a wide range of shipping issues.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of international shipping was carried by British-owned ships in 1991; what were the comparable figures for 1971 and 1981; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The information requested is not available. However, figures showing the proportion of United Kingdom international seaborne trade carried in United Kingdom registered vessels are published annually. The latest is a Department of Transport Statistics Report, "Seaborne Trade Statistics of the United Kingdom 1991", available in the Library.

Emergency Vessels

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what provision has been made for fire protection legislation for those vessels which have been converted to emergency standby vessels operating in offshore oil and gas fields, whose keels were laid between September 1984 and October 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The legislative provisions for fire protection on standby vessels as described are contained in the Merchant Shipping (Fire Protection) Regulations 1984 (Statutory Instrument 1984 No. 1218) as amended by Statutory Instruments 1985 No. 1193 and 1986 No. 1070. Further measures are contained in the joint Health and Safety Executive/Department of Transport publication "Assessment of the suitability of standby vessels attending offshore installations" (ISBN 0-11-551024-9).

Orange Badge Scheme

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to extend the orange badge scheme to include the profoundly deaf.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 3 November 1992]: I have no plans to extend the orange badge scheme to include the profoundly deaf.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Voluntary Schools

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress he has made in his consideration of the level of capital grant rate for voluntary schools in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The question of an increased capital grant rate to voluntary schools in Northern Ireland was raised during consultations on the Education Reform (Northern Ireland) Order 1989 and, as my hon. Friend the Member for Peterborough (Dr. Mawhinney) told the House in December 1989, our view has been that an increase in capital grants could be considered but would have to be accompanied by significant changes in management structure. Subsequently, in its sixteenth annual report presented to the House in July 1991, the Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights recommended a review of the grant rate and accompanying administrative arrangements.

Discussions have taken place with the voluntary school authorities and it is clear from these that there are some voluntary schools which are having difficulty in meeting their share of the capital cost of necessary school developments. They have told me that these schools would welcome an opportunity for 100 per cent. capital funding; and that they would be content to operate under different management structures. I have also been mindful of the facts that the education reform process has in many cases increased the need for capital expenditure, and that grant-maintained status is not available in Northern Ireland.

At the same time, it is equally clear that parents, teachers, and the voluntary school authorities themselves would not wish to see any change in the distinctive ethos of the existing schools, including the denominational nature of many of these schools, and that any changes in grant rates and management structures would therefore have to be without prejudice to that distinctive ethos. It has been common ground throughout the discussions that parental rights of conscience in matters of education should not be affected or diminished in any way.

Against this background, I am pleased to say that we have identified in discussion an approach which I believe will meet the legitimate concerns both of the voluntary school authorities and of the Government. This will be to allow maintained schools and voluntary grammar schools to opt for designation as a new category of voluntary school which will be eligible for 100 per cent. capital grant. Such schools would, however, be managed by a board of governors on which no single interest group will command a majority of nominees. Similar management principles apply to controlled schools, and grant-maintained integrated schools which already have their capital costs met in full from public funds.

For example, in the case of a voluntary maintained school or voluntary grammar school with nine governors, only four would be appointed by the school trustees or foundation governors. The balance would be composed of representatives of parents, teachers, the relevant area education and library board, and the Department of Education for Northern Ireland. In the case of Catholic maintained schools, the DENI nominee would be chosen after consultation with the Council for Catholic maintained schools, which has a statutory duty to advise DENI on matters relating to Catholic maintained schools. I should emphasise that this would create a new additional category of voluntary school and existing schools will be able to decide to retain their present management structure and remain eligible for capital grant rate of 85 per cent.

Legislation proposals to give effect to these arrangements will be contained in a proposal for a draft Education (Northern Ireland) Order which I hope to publish early in 1993. The detail of the proposed new arrangements will be the subject of consultation in the normal way.

Agencies

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list by grade the numbers of staff and their cost for 1991-92 and the estimated figures for 1992-93 for each executive agency for which he is responsible.

Mr. Mates: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the following Agencies under their respective Chief Executives.

Agency	Chief Executive
Training and Employment Agency	Mr. J. Crozier
Rates Collection Agency	Mr. D. Gallagher
Social Security Agency	Mr. A. Wylie
Ordnance Survey Agency	Mr. M. Brand
Driver and Vehicle Testing Agency	Mr. B. Watson
Compensation Agency	Mr. J. Robinson

I have asked them to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from J. Crozier to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 2 November 1992:

You asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he would list by grade the numbers of staff and their costs for 1991-92 and the estimated figures for 1992-93 for each Executive Agency for which he is responsible.

As Chief Executive of the Training and Employment Agency (T and EA) (Northern Ireland), I provide at attached Table 1, the figures for 1991-92 and at Table 2 the estimated figures for 1992-93 for the T and EA.

Letter from D. Gallagher to Mr. Martin Redmond dated 2 November 1992:

As I am responsible for the Northern Ireland Rate Collection Agency (RCA), the Secretary of State has asked me to reply to a Parliamentary Question recently put down by you. This related to the numbers of staff, by grade, and their cost for 1991-92 and estimated figures for 1992-93.

I attach a table summarising the numbers of RCA staff by grade for 1991-92 and a corresponding estimate for 1992-93. Salary costs (excluding superannuation) for 1991-92 totalled £3,399,372 and the estimated salary costs for 1992-93 are £3·6 million.

Your recent Parliamentary Question asking for the numbers of staff by grade and their cost for 1991-92 and the estimated figures for 1992-93 for each Executive Agency in Northern Ireland has been passed to me for reply as regards the Social Security Agency as I am its Chief Executive.

I enclose the information you request but there are some points I should bring to your attention. Firstly, the figures cover not only work related to payment of social security benefits in Northern Ireland but also work undertaken on behalf of the Benefits Agency in Great Britain at our Paid Order Unit and Belfast Benefits Centre and work in connection with the collection and enforcement of National Insurance contributions.

Secondly, I should also explain that, inevitably, the numbers of staff in the Agency fluctuate throughout the year so I have provided figures as at 31 March 1992 and the estimated figures for 31 March 1993.

I hope you find this information helpful.

Letter from J. Robinson to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 2 November 1992:

I refer to your recent Parliamentary Question about the numbers and cost of staff in executive agencies in Northern Ireland. The Secretary of State has asked me to provide the information in respect of the Compensation Agency.

The Compensation Agency was launched on 1 April 1992. The current number of staff in post listed by grade is:

Grade	Number in post
Chief Executive	1
Principal	2
Deputy Principal	4
Chief Law Clerk	1
Staff Officer	6
Executive Officer I	16
Law Clerk I	2
Executive Officer II	29

Messenger	3
Receptionist	1
Senior Accountant	1
Accountant	1
Senior Quantity Surveyor	1
Quantity Surveyor	1
Assistant Solicitor	1
Senior Legal Assistant	7½
Legal Assistant	2½
Total	152

The estimated salary costs for 1992-93 are £2·7 million [running costs £3·4 million].

Holding Centres

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he will appoint an independent commissioner for holding centres.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I shall make an announcement on the appointment of a commissioner shortly and place his terms of reference in the Library.

Iraq (Beef)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions have taken place between the Northern Ireland Department of Agriculture and companies in the Province relating to the export of non-intervention beef to Iraq; and whether the question of health certificates has been resolved to the satisfaction of the Iraqi importers.

Mr. Hanley: The Department of Agriculture has discussions from time to time with companies in the Province about the health certification required for exporting beef to countries outside the European Community, including Iraq. The terms of a health certificate for Iraq has not yet been resolved to the satisfaction of Iraqi importers.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Power Generation

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what undertakings in power generation have been partly or wholly financed from the overseas aid budget during the last 10 years.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Details of ODA's power sector financing over the 10 years 1981-1991 on an annual expenditure basis have been placed in the Libraries of the House. ODA does not directly finance undertakings, i.e. utility organisations, other than through the funding of capital projects or the provision of technical co-operation.

Debt

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps have been taken by Her Majesty's Government to reduce debt burdens incurred by the poorest countries; and what progress has been made since the Earth Summit in Brazil to implement the financial and structural commitments made there.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In 1990, in Trinidad, my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister put forward proposals to reduce significantly the debts of the poorest, most heavily indebted countries. The Paris Club of Government creditors began implementing Trinidad terms in December 1991. The terms currently reduce eligible payments due to governments by up to 50 per cent. Creditors also undertake to consider reducing the whole stock of a country's bilateral official debt after three to four years of economic reform. Ten countries have already benefitted, and we expect more to do so over coming months. We will continue to press for even greater relief to be made available to those low-income, heavily indebted countries that need it.

More than 150 countries signed the conventions on climate change and biological diversity at the Earth Summit. The interim funding mechanism for these two conventions is the global environment facility (GEF). We want to see the GEF established as the permanent funding mechanism for both conventions. We shall make a further contribution to the GEF once the level of its replenishment is agreed, and shall take part in discussions on its restructuring at the participants assembly in December.

Sustainable development is the central aim of our aid programme. We shall continue to focus our aid activities on the priorities set out in "Agenda 21", which lays out a comprehensive strategy for action on environment and development issues into the next century. The current United Nations General Assembly will establish the Sustainable Development Commission, which will have a key role in ensuring effective implementation of "Agenda 21".

EC Development Aid Budget

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 28 October, Official Report, column 708, what is the draft 1993 EC development aid budget; what was the 1992 budget; and what is the change in constant price terms.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Commission established the preliminary draft budget for 1993 on 15 June 1992. This has a commitments provision for development assistance of 2,037 mecu. This was an increase of 15·11 per cent. over the 1992 approved budget aid commitment provision of 1,770 mecu. Subsequent amendments have raised the commitments provision further to 2,095 mecu, although a final figure is not expected until towards the end of the year. It is not yet possible to calculate a deflator for 1993 to allow a comparison in constant prices.

WALES

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will publish figures showing the number of instances in each local education authority in Wales where (a) services mentioned within statements have been withdrawn by the local education authority and (b) parents were informed by their local education authority that obligations outlined in a statement could not be fulfilled due to lack of resources;

(2) what is the estimated cost within each local education authority in Wales for providing specialist equipment in schools for disabled children who are integrated into mainstream education; and what is the average level per disabled pupil integrated into mainstream education of specialist equipment provided by each local education authority;

(3) how many children with special educational needs are currently being withheld from school within each local education authority area in Wales due specifically to disputes over statementing.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information requested is not available centrally. Local education authorities have a duty to arrange that the special educational provision specified in a child's statement is made available.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will make it his policy to issue guidelines to local education authorities to ensure that all special educational needs statements contain a clear definition of resource levels;

(2) if he will make it his policy to issue guidelines to local education authorities to ensure that speech therapist and physiotherapist reports conducted as part of an individual's special educational needs statementing procedure are fully taken into account within the final statement;

(3) if he will make it his policy to issue guidelines to local education authorities in Wales to simplify the current special educational needs statementing procedures.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Welsh Office circular 54/89 and its addendum, issued in March 1992, give detailed advice to local education authorities on assessment and statementing procedures. These make it clear that, in considering an assessment, a local education authority has to take into account all the advice it has received as part of the statutory process, including medical advice, and, if a statement is warranted, it has to refer to all special educational needs identified during the assessment.

Our new Education Bill contains proposals which will improve the current procedures and make them more responsive to the views of parents. These include the issue of further guidance for local education authorities on the criteria to be used for making assessments and issuing statements. This will be subject to consultation.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many applications have been made for special educational needs statements in each local authority area in Wales; and how many such applications have been successful;

(2) how many pupils with special educational needs there are between the ages of five and 18 years in each local education authority area in Wales; and how many such pupils have received a statement from their local education authority.

Sir Wyn Roberts: There is no specific system of applications for statements of special educational needs. Local education authorities do, however, have a duty to make and maintain statements if, following a formal assessment, they are of the opinion that they should determine the provision to be made for a child.

Information on the number of pupils between five and 18 in school with statements of special educational need for January 1992 is shown in the following table:

	Number
Clwyd	2,072
Dyfed	1,041
Gwent	1,890
Gwynedd	818
Mid Glamorgan	5,300
Powys	518
South Glamorgan	1,333
West Glamorgan	2,295
Wales	15,267

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average length of time taken between actual application and the granting of special educational needs statements within each local education authority area in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information requested is not available. The Welsh Office has issued guidance to local education authorities that the period of time from the initial notification to the authority that an assessment might be necessary to the production of a draft statement should not exceed six months. Our Education Bill proposes legislation to ensure that the assessment procedures are conducted within prescribed time scales.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what efforts are currently undertaken by his Department to monitor the administration of special educational needs statementing procedures by local education authorities in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The statutory responsibility for identifying, assessing and making appropriate provision for children with special educational needs rests with local education authorities. If parents are dissatisfied with the decision or actions of the authority, or the special educational provision it has specified, there are rights of complaint and of appeal to my right hon. Friend, or a local appeals committee, as appropriate.

Cadw

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list by grade and number employed, the staffing costs for the year 1991-92 and the estimate for 1992-93, for Cadw (Welsh Historic Monuments).

Sir Wyn Roberts: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to Cadw: Welsh Historic Monuments Executive Agency under its chief executive, Mr. E. A. J. Carr. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from E. Carr to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 4 November 1992:

As Cadw: Welsh Historic Monuments is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State for Wales has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to him about the grade and number employed and the staffing costs for the year 1991-92 and the estimate for 1992-93 for Cadw: Welsh Historic Monuments. This is something which falls within the responsibilities he has delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

The information you have requested is shown in the table below in which specialist grades have been assimilated into the equivalent administrative grade:

Grade	1991-92 Actual Number	Cost £	1992-93 Estimate Number	Cost £
Chief Executive	1	48,907	1	53,510
Grade 6	4	131,929	4	158,520
Grade 7	8	225,278	8	233,720
Senior Executive	13	298,568	13	327,947
Higher Executive	14	282,603	15	333,404
Executive	31	376,484	30	421,976
Administrative	32	347,583	38	449,136
Custodial	50	651,599	51	649,063
Industrial	99	920,535	95	1,009,845
	252	3,283,486	255	3,637,121

Education Authorities

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what measures are being taken to ensure that education authorities in Wales spend all of their capital allocation for the purpose for which it was intended;

(2) which Welsh education authorities did not spend their capital allocation during each of the past three years; and if he will give details of the underspend.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Welsh local education authorities do not receive specific capital allocations for education services. County councils receive resources within their annual basic credit approvals which are unhypothecated to particular services. Spending priorities are a matter for them.

Opencast Mining

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to announce his decision concerning the opencast mining application at Bannell Bridge, Buckley, Clwyd.

Mr. David Hunt: As soon as possible.

Research and Development

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total amount spent on research and development by his Department in each of the last five years; and how much research and development money has been allocated to health and social care research in each instance.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information is shown in the following table:

	Total Welsh Office expenditure on research and development £ million	Of which: expenditure on health and social care research £ million
1988-89	1·9	0·4
1989-90	2·4	0·5
1990-91	3·0	0·5
[1]1991-92	3·6	0·5

The figures do not include NHS monies spent on research and development as an integral part of policy evaluation and service development, which are not separately identifiable; nor do they include research and development supported under the joint England and Wales programme managed by the Department of Health.

River Dee

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he proposes to eliminate pollution of River Dee waters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This is a matter for the National Rivers Authority. The River Dee is a class 1 good quality river, and the authority regularly reviews discharge consent conditions to achieve higher standards where practicable. In addition, it is undertaking a catchment management plan for the Dee estuary to identify existing problems and propose solutions.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make an additional transport supplementary grant allocation to Clwyd county council to enable them to build the new River Dee crossing.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Some £2·75 million has so far been provided towards the cost of the scheme. Clwyd county council's application for further transport grant support is being considered as part of the 1992 public expenditure survey.

Housing

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the availability of housing to rent in Alyn and Deeside; and if he will make a supplementary housing capital allocation to Alyn and Deeside council for the current year.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Such an assessment is principally a matter for the local authority acting as enabler, and working in partnership with Housing for Wales, voluntary groups and the private sector. We have no plans to supplement the substantial resources made available to Alyn and Deeside in the current financial year.

Head Injuries

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what is the average annual cost of referrals for psychiatric/psychological counselling for patients referred as a result of head injuries sustained in serious road traffic accidents;

(2) what was the average annual cost of community care for people disabled due to severe head injuries (a) resulting from road traffic accidents and (b) from all causes.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is not collected centrally.

National Parks

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures will be taken to safeguard the national parks from over-exploitation by commercial enterprises.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Planning policy guidance note 7, "The Countryside and the Rural Economy", stipulates that conservation of the natural beauty of the countryside should be given great weight in planning policies and decisions in the national parks. Moreover, major development in the national parks should not take place save in exceptional circumstances and must be subject to the "most vigorous examination".

Planning Consents

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will issue guidelines to local authorities encouraging the review of all current planning consents.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: No.

Epilepsy

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much was spent on medical care and supervision from sufferers from epilepsy in Wales annually between 1989 and 1991.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Seven-year-olds Test

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the percentage of seven-year-olds in Powys reaching level 2 in the compulsory tests; what was the comparable average percentage in England; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information on the achievements of seven-year-olds in the 1992 national curriculum assessments is published by local education authority in table 4 (Aggregated Subject Outcome Scores by LEA), in the Welsh Office publication "National Curriculum Monitor: Key Stage 1 1992 Assessments". A copy is available in the Library of the House. Information on the achievement of pupils in England is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education.

Student Assessment

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what evaluation he has made of the results of the national curriculum key stage 3 assessment of students in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The key stage 3 assessment results arising from this summer's voluntary national pilot exercise in mathematics and science were published at the all-Wales level by the Minister of State on 20 October. Copies of the results were sent to all LEAs in Wales. The results were not published from the much smaller number of schools included in trials of test material in English, Welsh, Welsh second language and technology.

The 1992 pilot and trial assessment arrangements are being evaluated by the School Examinations and Assessment Council in preparation for the introduction of the first statutory assessment of pupils in all these subjects during the summer term 1993.

Hazardous Sites

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many sites in Powys are considered serious environmental or health hazards; what was the comparable number of sites in 1971 and 1981; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Surveys of possibly contaminated land in Wales were undertaken on behalf of the Welsh Office in 1982-83 and 1987-88. The 1982-83 survey assessed two sites in Powys as posing a potentially serious environmental or health hazard. The later survey downgraded the risk assessment of both sites and identified no other sites. The Department holds no comparable information for 1971.

TECs

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what element in the last full year's budget for training and enterprise councils in Wales was top-sliced before the balance was negotiated between individual training and enterprise councils.

Sir Wyn Roberts: For 1992-93, a total of £700,000 was retained for contributions towards developments, systems and initiatives on an England and Wales basis, before negotiations were conducted with TECs in Wales.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much the private sector currently contributes to the funding of training and enterprise councils in each training and enterprise council area in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The financial arrangements in the contracting chain between Welsh Office, training and enterprise councils, training providers and employers do not facilitate estimates of the private sector contribution towards training activities. Direct contributions to TECs are not centrally recorded.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of training and enterprise councils' budgets in Wales is allocated for purposes other than direct youth and adult training.

Sir Wyn Roberts: One third of the training and enterprise councils' budgets in 1992-93 is allocated for other purposes, including employment action, enterprise support, local initiatives and TEC administration costs.

Education and Business Partnerships

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many education and business partnership schemes there are in each training and enterprise council area in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: There is one in each training and enterprise council area except for that covered by the West Wales TEC which has two schemes covering Dyfed and West Glamorgan local education authorities.

Health and Safety

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) prosecutions and (b) enforcement notices occured under the Health and Safety at Work Etc. Act 1974 in Wales in each of the last five years.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have been asked to reply.

The available information is provided in the tables:

Prosecution action taken by the Health and Safety Executive's (HSE) factory and agricultural inspectorates[1] for breaches of Health and Safety at Work Legislation[2] in Wales 1986-87 to 1990-91

Date of hearing[3]	Number of informations laid[4]
1986-87	156
1987-88	167
1988-89	100
1989-90	113
[5]1990-91	137

Enforcement notices issued by HSE's factory and agricultural inspectorates[1] for breaches of Health and Safety at Work Legislation[2] in Wales, 1986-87 to 1990-91

		Type of notice
Date of issue[3]	Improvement	Deferred prohibition	Immediate prohibition	Total
1986-87	626	24	150	800
1987-88	695	26	159	880
1988-89	661	14	220	895
1989-90	659	14	262	935
[5]1990-91	624	31	234	889

[1] Regional analysis of enforcement action taken by other enforcement authorities is not generally available (but see note (5) below).

[2] All action taken under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 and subordinate regulations and other legislation.

[3] Years commencing 1 April.

[5] Includes action taken by HSE's quarries inspectorate.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many full-time equivalent staff specialised in health and safety at work in Wales in each of the last five years; and what was the ratio of premises per member of staff in each year.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have been asked to reply.

The number of inspectors medical staff and scientists employed by the Health and Safety Executive in Wales was:

	Number
1 April 1988	67
1 April 1989	66
1 April 1990	68
1 April 1991	70
1 April 1992	78

Available information about the ratio of premises to full-time equivalent staff is:

	Factory	Agricultural	Quarries
1989-90	910:1	3,110:1	229:1
1990-91	784:1	3,228:1	192:1

[1] Injuries at work to employers, self-employed persons and members of the public injured as a result of someone else's work activity reported under the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations, 1985 (RIDDOR).

[2] As defined by Standard Industrial Classification 1980 divisions 6-9.

[3] Years commencing 1 April.

[4] As defined under RIDDOR.

[5] An injury causing incapacity for normal work for more than three days and reportable for employed persons only.

[6] Includes reports made to the HSE's quarries inspectorate.

EDUCATION

Education Expenditure

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what is the expenditure per pupil on primary education for each local education authority in England; (2) what is the expenditure per pupil on nursery education for each local education authority in England.

Mr. Forth: Information on nursery and primary pupils is not collected separately. The latest year for which information on actual expenditure is available is 1990-91. In that year, school-based funding per full-time equivalent pupil in nursery and primary education for each local education authority in England was as given in the table. These figures include unspent balances held by schools at the year end under local management schemes. They do not include the costs of services provided centrally by local education authorities such as home to school transport, school meals, local education authority central administration and financing costs of capital expenditure.

Note to table

Direct expenditure covers the costs of salaries and wages, recurrent premises costs, books, equipment and other supplies and services. Figures are derived from LEA's returns of their spending to the Department of the Environment and of their pupil numbers to the Department of Education.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what proposals he has to provide funds to continue to allow appropriate pupils to be referred to non-maintained special schools such as those which offer secondary and further education to the hearing impaired.

Mr. Forth: Under the proposals in the Education Bill, local education authorities will retain their responsibilities for identifying and assessing pupils with special educational needs and issuing and maintaining statements as required. They will continue to be funded to meet their statutory duty to make school placements appropriate to individual pupils' special educational needs, including placements in non-maintained special schools.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is his policy in respect of an application for grant-maintained status by a school which has balloted in favour of becoming grant-maintained to commence on 1 April 1993, but which has subsequently been found to have overspent its budget under local management of schools so as to be unable to meet its financial commitments.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend takes account of a number of factors when considering an application for grant-maintained status: ability to manage an LMS budget effectively is one. However, we expect local education authorities to monitor their schools' expenditure and to assist their schools to manage their resources in such a way as to ensure that they do not overspend their budget share. Under LMS, governing bodies must live within their means and may not plan on the basis of a deficit budget.

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what percentage of schools are grant-maintained in (a) the north-west of England and (b) the whole of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Forth: As of 3 November, 1·9 per cent. of secondary schools and 0·1 per cent. of primary schools in the north-west have been approved for grant-maintained status. In England as a whole, 7 per cent. of secondary schools, 1·2 per cent. of middle schools and 0·3 per cent. of primary schools have been approved.

My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Wales and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland have responsibility for grant-maintained schools in those countries.

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what guidelines he has given to the Education Assets Board with regard to the funding and control of facilities that are treated as the responsibility of the school once it becomes grant-maintained.

Mr. Forth: The Education Assets Board does not deal with matters of funding for facilities. Every grant-maintained school's articles of government state that the occupation and use of school premises shall be under the control of the governing body.

GCSE

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what criteria he used in devising the new compulsory code of practice for the General Certificate of Secondary Education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has asked the School Examinations and Assessment Council (SEAC) to prepare the code in consultation with the Joint Council for the GCSE. Its purpose will be to increase the transparency of the examining process in order to secure standards and maintain public confidence in the GCSE. It will cover the matters identified in SEAC's advice on quality and standards in the GCSE, published on 20 October.

Student Assessment

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what evaluation he has made of the results of the national curriculum key stage three assessment of students in Britain; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: A national analysis of the results of those schools which participated in the national pilot of the national curriculum assessments of 14-year-olds in England will be published shortly.

Administrative Expenditure

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list, in table form, the percentage of each local education authority's budget spent on administration.

Mr. Forth: The latest year for which information on actual spending is available is 1990-91. The table shows, for each local education authority in England, expenditure on administration expressed as a percentage of its total net recurrent spending on education.

Net recurrent expenditure includes total expenditure other than capital financing charges, less income other than from Government grants. Information is taken from local authorities' returns of their actual spending to the Department of the Environment.

PRIME MINISTER

Civil Servants

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 23 October, Official Report, column 389, how many members of the civil service have retired early since the beginning of 1992, on terms comparable to those mentioned in his answer.

The Prime Minister: These terms are payable to civil servants who are retired early by reason of redundancy or in the public interest. The number shown in Civil Service Statistics (1991 edition, table 7) as leaving for these causes in 1990-91 was 1,582. Figures for 1991-92 will be published on 27 November.

Coal Industry

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister what is his response to the petition presented on 23 October to No. 10 Downing street by the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey on behalf of Liberal Democrats calling for a fully independent review of the coal industry before any pits are closed.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 29 October 1992]: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has announced a moratorium until early in the new year on the closure of 21 of the pits proposed for closure by British Coal, unless the work force at a pit concerned agrees otherwise, and a full and wide ranging review of the prospects for these pits. The Government will publish a White Paper early in the new year setting out the results of the review in the context of our energy policy. There will be a full debate in the House of Commons.

British Coal is carrying out the statutory consultation process in relation to the other 10 pits before any closure takes place.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

HIV Infection

Dr. Strang: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the EC-approved network of co-operation agreements between the Imperial Cancer Research Fund, the Medical Research Council, University College, London, and the United States research foundation Southwest, for research and development of a vaccine to combat HIV infections.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Medical Research Council, University College, London, the Imperial Cancer Research Fund and the Southwest Foundation for Biomedical Research are all shareholders of HIVER Limited which is a research driven healthcare company located in the United Kingdom. HIVER Limited focuses on developing vaccines, therapies and diagnostics for AIDS and other immunological disorders.

Since 1987, more than £4 million has been committed to the research programme. Research is currently underway at The MRC clinical research centre, University College London, The London hospital medical school and St. Georges hospital medical school. The research is coordinated from the HIVER executive office.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Lloyd's

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much tax he expects to repay in the current year and 1993 for losses at Lloyd's.

Mr. Dorrell: In 1992-93, to the end of September, repayments to Lloyd's underwriters have amounted to £143 million. These relate almost entirely to losses incurred in 1988-89.

The Lloyd's market declared net trading losses of £509 million for the 1988-89 tax year. Lloyd's underwriters are entitled to set their shares of these losses against their other income which has been subject to tax.

No separate forecasts are made of the eventual amount of such repayments.

Cross-border Shopping

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what study has been made of the opportunities for cross-border shopping for people living in coastal areas following the abolition of EC frontier controls; and what steps he proposes to take to ensure that people in inland areas are able to take advantage of the lower prices for goods on which duty will no longer be paid available in other member states of the Community.

Sir John Cope: Agreement has been reached for intra-EC duty free sales to continue after 1992, but all other purchases by private individuals for their personnel use will be subject to VAT and excise duty in the member state where they are sold. It is difficult to anticipate the extent to which these opportunities will be taken up.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what forecast has been made of the increase in each country in the amount of cross-border shopping between the United Kingdom and France, in respect of goods which will be free of duty from January 1993.

Sir John Cope: No increases are expected in cross-border shopping from the continuation of intra-EC duty free sales after 1992. All other purchases by private individuals for their personal use will be subject to VAT and excise duty in the member state in which they are sold.

Housing Loans

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will bring forward proposals for a code of practice for all lenders of house purchase loans covering the regulation of (a) interest rates on all loans, (b) lending practices and (c) recovery and repossession practices and proceedings.

Mr. Dorrell: We have no plans to do so.

Appointments

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all the names of public appointments that he has made, giving the period for which the appointment was made, relevant qualifications of the appointees and what remuneration each currently receives.

Sir John Cope: The following provides the information requested for all current appointments to public bodies for which the Chancellor is responsible except for VAT tribunals on which, because of the numbers involved, I will write separately to the hon. Member.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will introduce legislation to ensure that housing loans lenders should not have the automatic right of repossession in arrears cases.

Mr. Dorrell: We have no plans to do so.

House Renovations

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to ensure that house renovation costs are not liable to value added tax charges.

Sir John Cope: VAT at the standard rate has been applied to house renovation costs since 1973 when the tax was first introduced. Our obligations under the EC Sixth VAT Directive prevent us extending the scope of our present zero rating.

Auditors

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has for legislation under which the auditors of banks would be required to detect and report fraud to the regulators.

Mr. Dorrell: On 22 October, the Chancellor announced that the Government accepted all the recommendations of Lord Justice Bingham's inquiry into the supervision of the Bank of Credit and Commerce International, including the recommendation that there should be a statutory duty on auditors of banks to report to the Bank of England. A similar recommendation had been made in the Treasury and Civil Service Committee's fourth report for 1991-92. Consultation with the accounting profession and with the banks on the formulation of such a duty and its enforcement will begin shortly.

Housing Loans

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to amend the Building Societies Act 1986 to enable mortgage lenders to transfer shortfall suffered when redeeming the mortgages from sale proceeds to new mortgage accounts.

Mr. Dorrell: We have no plans to do so.

We recently announced two new measures which will help borrowers with a shortfall to move house (Official Report, 20 October 1992, column 243).

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will introduce legislation to require housing loan lenders to explore alternative legal remedies for debt recovery before repossession is considered.

Mr. Dorrell: We have no plans to do so.

Business Expansion Scheme

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to extend the business expansion scheme to include assured shorthold tenancies.

Mr. Dorrell: We have no plans to do so; the business expansion scheme will not be available for new investment after the end of 1993.

Cohesion Funds

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how the United Kingdom will benefit from the cohesion funds of the Maastricht agreement; what was the gross domestic product per capita in the United Kingdom, expressed in ecus, at 15 September; and what it is now.

Mr. Lamont: The cohesion fund envisaged in the Maastricht treaty will be a structural fund; and the usual method of calculating relative wealth for these funds is to use purchasing power parities. On that basis the United Kingdom would not qualify for any assistance from the cohesion fund.

The latest forecast of money GDP at market prices for financial year 1992-93 is £619·2 billion, or £10,721 per head. This would be equivalent to 14,810 ecus per head at the exchange rates on 15 September; and 13,191 ecus per head at the exchange rates on 29 October.

Visual Handicap

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consultation took place with organisations representing visually handicapped people before the design of the new £10 and £20 notes was approved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lamont: The Bank of England's consultations with organisations representing the visually handicapped, regarding the new series of banks notes, began in March 1984. Regular meetings, approximately annually, have taken place since then with the Royal National Institute for the Blind, which co-ordinates communication between the bank and other organisations representing the visually handicapped.

Unemployment

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what have been the additional costs to the Exchequer of benefit payments and lost income tax and national insurance contributions arising from the increase in unemployment since April 1990.

Mr. Dorrell: Figures for benefit expenditure on the unemployed are set out in figure 9 on page 8 of the DSS departmental report (Cm. 1914). The effect of the increase in unemployment on tax revenues and national insurance contributions cannot be estimated reliably.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated annual cost of maintaining the current number of people on the unemployment register in each region in terms of benefits payments and lost tax and national insurance contributions.

Mr. Dorrell: Figures for benefit expenditure on the unemployed people are set out in figure 9 on page 8 of the DSS departmental report (Cm. 1914). A regional breakdown for this expenditure is not available. The effects on tax revenues and national insurance contributions cannot be calculated reliably.

European Community

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the number of civil servants in his Department whose main task is work related wholly or mainly to the European Community.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 3 November 1992]: There are currently 35 civil servants in the Treasury whose main task is work related wholly or mainly to the European Community.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Football

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what discussions he has had with the Football Association regarding unfair practices in football; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: None. But I deplore unfair practices in all sports. The United Kingdom has taken the lead in developing the Council of Europe's code of sports ethics, the basic principle of which is that ethical considerations and fair play are integral elements of all sports activities. The enforcement of discipline is a matter for the governing bodies of sport.

National Lottery

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Eltham of 28 October, Official Report, column 690, whether the national lottery and football pools are to be regarded as equivalent forms of gambling; and whether controls will be the same.

Mr. Brooke: No. Lotteries are a game of chance, while football pools are a game of skill and judgment which depend on the outcome of a sporting event. The national lottery will need its own system of regulation. Details of the control regime for the national lottery will be announced when the Bill is published.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many households in the Lancashire, West constituency qualify for payments under the cold weather payments scheme.

Mr. Scott: The administration of social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. Colin Pickthall, dated 3 November 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking how many households in the West Lancashire constituency qualify for payments under the cold weather payments scheme.

Lancashire West constituency is covered by the Agency's South West Lancashire District. It is not possible to give an exact figure of how many customers would qualify for a Cold Weather Payment except at disproportionate cost. However, based on figures for those claiming Income Support in November 1991, it is estimated that approximately 15,000 customers in the South West Lancashire District may qualify for a Cold Weather Payment should the area be triggered. The constituency and District boundaries do not, however, correspond and a proportion of these will live outside the constituency.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on what dates cold weather payments were made in Lancashire, West in response to a forecast of a qualifying period; and what was the period taken for payments to be made once the system had been triggered.

Mr. Scott: The administration of social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. Colin Pickthall, dated 3 November 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking on what dates cold weather payments were made in West Lancashire in response to a forecast of a qualifying period; and what was the period taken for payments to be made once the system had been triggered.

Neither of the weather stations which give information for the area covered by the constituency declared a forecast period of cold weather from 1 November 1991 to date. Details of dates where payments were made in response to a recorded period of cold weather are available in the Library.

It is not possible to give the exact time taken for payments to be made. However, the average time taken to identify all eligible customers is 6·5 days. The preparation of payments starts immediately after identification, but it may take a few days further before they are posted depending on the volumes.

A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report.

Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many households in the Meirionnydd Nant Conwy constituency qualify for payments under the cold weather payments scheme.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. Elfyn Llwyd, dated 3 November 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking how many households in the Meirionnydd Nant Conwy constituency qualify for payments under the cold weather payments scheme.

The Meirionnydd Nant Conwy constituency is covered by Gwyneddigion, Mid Wales and Maelor, and North Wales Coast Districts. It is not possible to give an exact figure of how many customers would qualify for a Cold Weather Payment except at disproportionate cost. However, based on figures for those claiming Income Support in November 1991, it is estimated that approximately 36,200 customers claiming from those Districts may qualify for a Cold Weather Payment, should the area be triggered. Parliamentary constituencies and District boundaries do not correspond however and therefore a proportion of these will live outside the constituency boundaries.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. Copies are being placed in the Library.

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many households in the Falkirk, East constituency qualify for payments under the cold weather payments scheme.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. Michael Connarty, dated 3 November 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking how many households in the Falkirk East constituency qualify for payments under the cold weather payments scheme.

Falkirk East constituency is covered by the Forth Valley District. It is not possible to give an exact figure of how many customers would qualify for a Cold Weather Payment except at disproportionate cost. However, based on figures for those claiming Income Support in November 1991 it is estimated that approximately 11,900 customers in the Forth Valley District may qualify for a Cold Weather Payment should the area be triggered. The constituency and District boundaries do not correspond, however, and a proportion of these will live outside the constituency boundaries.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Benefits Agency

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) when the chief executive of the Benefits Agency acknowledged case MOB/172/8898 pursued by the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East (ref. DB102919); when a reply was received; and what was the reason for the time taken;

(2) when the chief executive of the Benefits Agency will send an acknowledgement and reply to the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East to a letter sent on 14 September concerning the case of the person with the national insurance number JE 54 08 98 C;

(3) when the chief executive of the Benefits Agency will send acknowledgements and replies to the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East for letters sent on 7 August, 14 and 16 September concerning the case of the person with the national insurance number ZT 349 447A;

(4) when the chief executive of the Benefits Agency will reply to the letter sent to him by the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East on 6 July concerning case NM 139 765A and acknowledged by the Benefits Agency on 27 July under its reference DB 103229; when there will be a follow up to his Department's reference 86/3193/5 of 5 August on this case; and what record he holds of the number of telephone calls that have been made by the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East in connection with this matter.

Mr. Scott: Correspondence about operational matters is the responsibility of Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. Harry Barnes, dated 3 November 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security relating to the replies to letters you had sent about individual constituents.

All four letters relate to disability benefits processed at the Fylde Benefits Directorate. Regrettably because of the heavy workload at the Directorate following the introduction of Disability Living Allowance (DLA) and the volume of correspondence this has generated there have been some delays in replying to Members' letters about these benefits. I can assure you that all the cases are receiving urgent attention but replies are sometimes delayed whilst the individual case is resolved. Once the backlog of claims has been cleared it will be possible to respond to correspondence much more promptly. In the meantime I apologise for the delays on the cases referred to in your questions.

Case MOB/172/8898

An acknowledgement is not normally sent by the Benefits Agency when a Minister has written to the Member confirming a letter has been passed to me to reply. In this case an interim reply was sent on 10 June explaining that a full reply was not yet possible. A final reply was sent on 19 August. The delay in replying was due to the heavy workload at the DLA Unit.

Case JE540898C

I apologise that your letter to me of 14 September was not acknowledged. I replied to you on 28 October with full details of the award made to this customer.

Case ZT349447A

Again I am sorry that your letters were not acknowledged. This was a mistake on the part of my correspondence section. I replied to your letter on 2 November.

Case NM139765A

I replied to your letter on 2 November with full details of the award made to this customer. The DLA Unit has a record of five telephone calls from your office about this case.

I hope you will find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Earnings

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish estimates of the number of part-time and full-time employees earning (a) below the PAYE threshold and (b) below the national insurance lower earnings limit, in (i) 1989, (ii) 1990, (iii) 1991 and (iv) the current year, respectively.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is given in the table.

	Estimated numbers (millions) earnings less than
	PAYE threshold	National insurance lower earnings limit
1989	3·50	3·00
1990	3·50	3·00
1991	3·50	3·25
1992	3·75	3·25

Notes:

1. Figures are broad estimates based on the annual New Earnings Survey and estimates of the number of employees in employment.

2. It is estimated that around one tenth of these employees are full-time, most of whom fell below the thresholds because their earnings were affected by absence in the survey period.

Retirement Pensions

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if it is his policy that retirement pensions shall continue to be uprated annually in line with the retail prices index.

Miss Widdecombe: The plans for the uprating of benefits will be announced to the House in due course.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if it is his policy that retirement pensions shall continue to be free of a means test.

Miss Widdecombe: Yes.

Drug and Alcohol Problems

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the expected total expenditure on allowances towards the cost of residential rehabilitation services for persons with drug or alcohol problems during the current financial year.

Mr. Burt: The estimated income support payable in the current financial year to people in independent residential care and nursing homes claiming the drug or alcohol abuse limit is about £20 million.

Benefit Fraud

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total amount of money discovered to have been fraudulently claimed from his Department by benefit claimants in 1991 and the current year to the most recent practicable date.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 27 October 1992, at column 640. The Benefits Agency's estimated fraud savings for 1991-92 were £427 million. For the first half of 1992-93 the estimated savings were £268 million.

Contributors Charter

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if, as part of his quality service objectives, he will require the publication of the responses of all bodies consulted in the preparation of the contributors charter and the employers charter.

Miss Widdecombe: The responses received from organisations during consultations with service users in the course of production of the contributor's and employer's charters is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive of the Contributions Agency. She will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Miss A. Chant to Ms. Marjorie Mowlam, dated 4 November 1992.

As Chief Executive of the Contributions Agency, Miss Ann Chant is responsible for answering questions about relevant operational matters. However, in her absence I, as Deputy Chief Executive, have been asked to reply to the points raised in your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State about the publication of responses from service users following consultations undertaken during the course of preparation of the Charters.

You will recall from the answer to your previous question on our consultations about the proposed Contributor's Charter and Employer's Charter that we approached 36 organisations with whom we are in regular contact for their comments, advice and assistance. Nineteen of them replied some in writing.

They were very helpful and constructive in their responses, but it had never been suggested to them that our exchanges would be publicised. I think it would be quite inappropriate for me to do so now.

I do not see any connection between publicising all the details of this consultation exercise and quality service objectives. But if you have any specific concern in mind, or would like to know the gist of some of the suggestions that were made, please let me know and I will be pleased to try and help.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Office Costs

Mr. Steen: To ask the Lord President of the Council what assessment he has made of the effect of the increase in office costs allowance on the working practices of hon. Members.

Mr. Newton: No such assessment has been made.

SCOTLAND

Retirement Flats

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from owners of retirement flats concerning uncontrolled increases in service charges imposed by development companies after sale; and what response he has made.

Mr. Lang: The Scottish Office has received a number of representations, particularly in recent months, from owners, and persons or bodies representing owners, about the management of private sheltered housing, including increases in service charges. Our general view has been that it would be inappropriate for the Government to intervene in contracts freely entered into between buyers and sellers of retirement flats. However, the Scottish Law Commission is engaged in a comprehensive review of property law in Scotland and we shall shall study carefully any recommendations that the commission makes for legislative or other action in this area.

Scottish Borders Enterprise

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the reasons for the £15,000 reduction in the grant to Scottish Borders

Enterprise for employment training and youth training programmes in the region; and what has been the subsequent reduction in available training places.

Mr. Lang: In Scotland, responsibility for management of youth training and employment training and for allocation of funds to the local enterprise companies for their delivery lies with Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise. I have asked the chairman of Scottish Enterprise to write to the right hon. Member with the information he has requested.

Consultants

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all of the reports his Department has commissioned from external consultants in each of the last three years; for each of the last three years, how many reports from external consultants to his Department led to further consultancy work being commissioned, stating for each of these who were the original, stating for each of these who were the original and subsequent consultants and briefly describing the subject matter of the consultancy work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Fishermen

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of (a) the number of professional fishermen who will have to conform to the regulations contained in the Salmon (Definition of Methods of Net Fishing and Construction of Nets) (Scotland) Regulations 1992 and (b) in which rivers and estuaries they fish; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: I have made no estimate of the number of professional fishermen who will be required to conform to the new regulations. Salmon net fisheries are, or could be, operated on most of Scotland's rivers and estuaries, and on the open sea coast. The regulations will apply to all salmon nets, except landing nets; every person who fishes for salmon by net will have to conform to them.

UV-B Monitoring Systems

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to introduce regional UV-B monitoring systems; what initiative he has undertaken to encourage Scottish industry to switch to non-ozone depleting substances; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 3 November 1992]: Plans are under way to extend the monitoring network set up by the National Radiological Protection Board in order to provide a more comprehensive picture of the terrestrial solar UV levels over United Kingdom latitudes.

As part of an awareness-raising strategy, a series of booklets entitled "Protecting the Ozone Layer and Safeguarding your Business" has been produced. These urge industry to take immediate action to reduce dependency on ozone-depleting substances and provide information about the main alternative technologies currently available. Regular meetings with representatives of United Kingdom producers and users of ozone-depleting substances are also held to ensure that the implications of international negotiations on the phase-out of ozone-depleting substances and the options for switching to alternatives are as widely understood as possible.

Timber (Tariff Rebates)

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from the forestry or paper and pulp industry concerning the reinstatement of the tariff rebate which was withdrawn from the movement of goods by ship in July 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 2 November 1992]: Consideration is at present being given to a proposal for support, under the tariff rebate subsidy scheme, of a new project for the shipment of timber from remote and relatively inaccessible locations. An announcement will be made in due course once a decision has been reached.

Mentally Ill Patients

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many mentally ill patients are in secure institutions referred there by the courts; and how many were released in each of the past five years back into the community;

(2) how many female mentally ill patients are in secure institutions referred there by the courts; and how many were released in each of the past five years back into the community.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 2 November 1992]: There are currently 115 patients—eight of them female—in the state hospital at Carstairs who have been referred by the criminal courts and a further 30 patients, all male, who have been transferred from Scottish prisons for treatment.

At any given time, there will also be individuals in prison suffering from various forms of mental disorder but not requiring treatment in hospital. Numbers are not recorded centrally.

Most detained patients moving from state hospital are transferred first to local mental illness hospitals for further rehabilitation and, if appropriate, discharge. However, the numbers discharged direct to the community with appropriate support and supervision were as follows:

1989	5	1
1990	4	3
1991	3	3

Prisoners

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many women are serving life sentences in Scottish prisons.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 2 November 1992]: As at Thursday 29 October 1992, there were six women, all adult prisoners, serving life sentences in Scottish prisons.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the average time spent in prison of (a) male and (b) female prisoners convicted of the crime of murder and all other serious offences giving details of the offence and the time served in each category.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 2 November 1992]: I regret that the information is not readily available in the form requested, but the average time spent in prison by prisoners serving life sentences who were released from prison in the five years 1987 to 1991 was as in the table:

	Years detained in custody
Year of release	6-7	7-8	8-9	9-10	10-11	11-12	12-13	13-14	Over 14
1987	—	—	1	4	6	2	—	1	1
1988	—	—	—	—	5	3	1	1	1
1989	—	—		2	2	4	8	5	4
1990	—	—	—	3	7	6	4	2	4
1991	—	—	—	1	5	4	2	1	10

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fact-finding Visits

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the fact-finding visits made in the last 12 months by the chief executive of each executive agency for which he is responsible; and what were the findings resulting from each visit.

Mr. Gummer: Responsibility for this matter is delegated to ADAS, the Central Science Laboratory, the Central Veterinary Laboratory, the Intervention Board Executive Agency and the Veterinary Medicines Directorate. I have asked their respective chief executives to write to the hon. Gentleman direct.

As Chief Executive of the Central Science Laboratory (CSL) I confirm that during the last 12 months I have carried out fact finding visits to the Universities of Reading, Leeds, Lancaster and York, to explore their scientific capabilities and to establish whether CSL should develop longer-term relationships with these Universities. The outcome is that CSL will continue to be associated with all four Universities and will seek to develop closer links with Leeds, Lancaster and York in relation to the move of CSL to York in 1996/97.

In addition, I have carried out fact finding visits to other agencies, including the Scottish Agricultural Science Agency, Central Veterinary Laboratory, Laboratory of the Government Chemist, and the Defence Research Agency, to identify how they are progressing and to gather information about the services offered by other research-based agencies. My findings were that CSL has a clearly identified role in providing statutory support and R & D to MAFF, but needs to be competitive in terms of cost, quality and delivery of services.

Letter from B. Mills to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 28 October 1992:

As you know the Minister has asked that Chief Executives of executive agencies for which he is responsible write to you direct with their answer to your question.

Dr. Little our Chief Executive is away at the moment. I know that he has made visits to a number of organisations during this period, but in particular to offices of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, who are our parent Department, and for whom about 85 per cent. of our work is undertaken.

To ask the Minister of Agriculture Fisheries and Food, if he will list the fact finding visits made in the last 12 months by the chief executive of each executive agency for which he is responsible; and what were the findings resulting from each visit.

In his reply to the above question about Executive Agencies in MAFF, the Minister said that as this was a matter which was the direct responsibility of Chief Executives, he would ask them to write to you direct. I am doing so as Chief Executive of the Veterinary Medicines Directorate (VMD).

I maintain frequent contact throughout the year with representatives of the animal health industry, the veterinary profession and the veterinary pharmaceutical companies. During the last 12 months I have also spoken at national and international meetings on matters related to veterinary medicines, held regular meetings with the National Office of Animal Health and the British Veterinary Association, and initiated meetings with consumer representatives to discuss matters of common interest.

These visits and meetings are particularly useful in increasing the transparency and understanding of the licensing arrangements for veterinary medicines in the UK. They help maintain good relations with our customers and provide valuable feedback on the work of the Directorate to help improve the quality of service we offer to our customers.

Letter from J. Walsh to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 27 October 1992:

The Chief Executive of ADAS, Dr. Julia Walsh, makes on average two fact finding visits to customers and staff per month. It is considered by Dr. Walsh essential to conduct these visits to ensure the provision of quality services to ADAS customers and to transmit ideas from staff through the organisation to Director level.

You asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, if he would list the fact finding visits made in the last 12 months by the chief executive of each executive agency for which he was responsible; and what were the findings resulting from each visit. Although the Intervention Board is a separate Government Department, I am responsible to the four Agriculture Ministers, and as this matter falls within the operational responsibility of this Agency, he has asked me to reply.

Between October 1991 and September 1992 I had a considerable number of discussions with the Agency's customers and with organisations with whom we work, both on and off the Agency's premises. The only ones which might be described as fact-finding visits were two I made in May, to a scientific establishment providing services to the Agency and to a firm deboning beef for intervention storage. In each case the visit enabled me to familiarise myself with the processes involved.

I am sending a copy of this letter to the Library of the House.

Executive Agencies

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list, for the last 12 months, the titles of papers published by the chief executive of each executive agency for which he is responsible.

Mr. Gummer: Responsibility for this matter is delegated to ADAS, the Central Science Laboratory, the Central Veterinary Laboratory, the Intervention Board Executive Agency and the Veterinary Medicines Directorate. I have asked their respective chief executives to write to the hon. Gentleman direct.

Letter from G. Stapleton to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 30 October 1992:

You asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he would list, for the last 12 months, the titles of papers published by the chief executive of each executive agency for which he is responsible. Although the Intervention Board is a separate Government Department, I am responsible to the four Agriculture Ministers, and as this is a matter within the operational responsibility of this Agency, he has asked me to reply.

As a layman, I have published no scientific papers. The Intervention Board, however, published the following material between October 1991 and September 1992:

Corporate Plan 1992-93 to 1996-97		July 1992
Annual Report 1991-92		July 1992
Scheme Leaflets:
CD 2	Flax Subsidies (revise)	March 1992
CD 15	Support Buying of Cereals (revise)	October 1991
ET 11	Fresh Fruit and Vegetables (revise)	December 1991
ET 12	Processed Fruit and Vegetables (revise)	November 1991
ET 15	Wine (revise)	November 1991
ET 17	Processed Goods (revise)	December 1991
ET 19	Community Victualling (revise)	December 1991
FD 2	Securities and Guarantees	October 1991
LP 12	Aid for the Private Storage of Butter (revise)	February 1992
LP 18	Subsidy on Butter Supplied to Non-Profit-Making Organisations	November 1991
LP 43	Milk Coresponsibility Levy Disbursement	November 1991
LP 46	Surplus Food Scheme	May 1992

I am sending a copy of this letter to the Library of the House.

Letter from J. M. Rutter to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 26 October 1992:

To ask the Minister of Agriculture Fisheries and Food, if he will list, for the last 12 months, the titles of papers published by the Chief Executive of each executive agency for which he is responsible.

In his reply to the above question about Executive Agencies in MAFF, the Minister said that as this was a matter which was the direct responsibility of Chief Executives, he would ask them to write to you direct. I am doing so as Chief Executive of the Veterinary Medicines Directorate (VMD).

All papers published by the staff of the VMD, including myself, are recorded in the Annual Report and Accounts of the Directorate. That for the financial year 1991-92 was published on 29 July 1992 as House of Commons paper 174 and a copy placed in the Library. I enclose a further copy for your information. Details of publications are given in Appendix IX, with those by staff listed on pages 64 and 65.

In the period since 1 April 1992, I have had two further letters published in the Veterinary Record:

Rutter, J. M. (1992) Availability of medicines. Veterinary Record, 130, 335.

Letter from J. Walsh to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 27 October 1992

The Chief Executive of ADAS, Dr. Julia M. Walsh was appointed in June 1991. Dr. Walsh has not personally published any papers in the ensuing period. However, the nationally and internationally recognised Research and Development branch of the ADAS Executive Agency regularly publishes scientific papers and could supply specific details if required.

Letter from T. Little to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 3 November 1992:

As you know the Minister has asked that Chief Executives of executive agencies for which he is responsible write to you direct with their answer to your question.

During the period in question I have published only one paper and that is:

Little, T. W. A., Hathaway, S. C., Broughton, E. S., Seawright, D. Control of Leptospira hardjo infection in beef cattle by whole herd vaccination.

As Chief Executive of the Central Science Laboratory, I confirm that I have not personally had any paper published during the past 12 month period. The Central Science Laboratory, however, has published a number of papers and I enclose for your information a copy of CSL's listing of Scientific Publications 1985-91, together with an update covering publications since the launch of the Agency in April 1992.

Food Labelling

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to complete his consideration of the need for comprehensive food labelling.

Mr. Soames: The Government issued on 4 August 1992 their final response to the recommendations arising from the Food Advisory Committee's report of its comprehensive review of food labelling legislation and practices. Most of the recommendations were accepted and most will require action at EC level. Proposals to amend the EC Food Labelling Directive are currently before the Council of Ministers and would introduce requirements concerning quantitative declaration of ingredients, ingredient listing of alcoholic drinks and revised provisions on the name of the food. We expect the Commission shortly to make proposals to control claims made in food labelling and advertising. On nutrition labelling, the Government have recently issued for consultation draft regulations implementing the EC Nutrition Labelling Directive. These are due to take effect in October 1993.

Consultants

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all of the reports his Department has commissioned from external consultants in each of the last three years; for each of the last three years, how many reports from external consultants to his Department led to further consultancy work being commissioned, stating for each of these who were the original and subsequent consultants and what was the subject matter of the consultancy work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: This information is not readily available and can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Food Premises

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action is currently undertaken by his Department to monitor the quality of inspections carried out by local enforcement authorities to food premises under the Food Safety Act 1990 code of practice.

Mr. Curry: I obtain quarterly returns from local enforcement authorities of the inspections and other actions that they have undertaken in connection with their responsibilities under the Food Safety Act. My officials examine those returns to see whether the requirements set out in the codes of practice issued under section 40 of the Act are being met.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the most recent research available to him on the possibility of vertical transmission of BSE.

Mr. Gummer: A formal study comparing the incidence of BSE in over 300 offspring of confirmed BSE cases with an equal number of controls has not yet produced any results. All the evidence continues to suggest that feed is the mechanism of infection.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) of 11 May, Official Report, columns 29-30, if he will list the number of confirmed cases of bovine spongiform encephalopathy in each county, in each month from January to May.

Mr. Gummer: The number of cases confirmed for England, Wales and Scotland for the periods requested is as follows. Many of these cases will have a date of clinical onset of disease and date of report before 4 January (18 January for Northern Ireland).

Country/Region	January (4 January to 31 January)	February (1 February to 28 February)	March (29 February to 27 March)	April (28 March to 1 May)	May (2 May to 29 May)

Beef Premiums

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food further to his answer of 28 October, Official Report, column 684, by what date he expects to announce the transitional arrangements for payment of beef premiums.

Mr. Curry: I will announce the transitional arrangements for the new beef special premium scheme when they have been agreed by the European Commission.

HEALTH

Abortion

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made in the inquiry into the events surrounding the illegal obtaining and export of RU486 from this country to the United States of America about which the hon. Member for Congleton wrote to her; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The alleged RU486 tablets illegally imported into the USA and purporting to come from the United Kingdom are not the strength licensed for use in the United Kingdom. Nor are they the tablets used for clinical trials in the United Kingdom. It is unlikely these tablets originated from the United Kingdom but investigations are continuing in collaboration with the US Food and Drug Administration.

Consultants

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list all of the reports her Department has commissioned from external consultants in each of the past three years; for each of the past three years, how many reports from external consultants to her Department led to further consultancy work being commissioned, stating for each of these who were the original and subsequent consultants and briefly describing the subject matter of the consultancy work; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The Department let 229 contracts for external management consultancies in 1990-91, 174 in 1991-92 and 82 so far in the current year. We do not keep a record centrally of which consultancies resulted in reports and which led to further consultancy work being commissioned. The Department's purchasing and supply manual, which has been issued to all who commission consultants, stated that goods and services should be acquired by competition unless there are convincing reasons to the contrary. Details of the consultancy contracts have been placed in the Library.

Patients' Records (Carers)

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration is being given to encouraging general practitioners to ensure that patients' records indicate whether a patient is also a carer.

Dr. Mawhinney: Every general practitioner needs to use professional judgement to decide what his or her patient's medical records need to contain to help with diagnosis, treatment and health care. We have no plans to intervene in these professional decisions.

AIDS/HIV

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the total sums spent on publicity and information to combat the spread of AIDS/HIV in the national health service every year since 1984 and the percentage of the total budget for health promotion that these figures represent.

Mr. Sackville: Between 1985-86 and 1992-93 the Government have allocated over £73 million to the development of the national AIDS public education campaign.

The table shows the Department of Health and Health Education Authority spend for the development of the national HIV and AIDS public education work including the running costs of the national AIDS helpline and related telephone information services. Not shown in the table are the sums spent by other Government Departments on HIV prevention work within their own spheres of interest.

HIV/AIDS public education

Year	Department of Health £ million	Health Education Authority £ million
1984-85	Nil	—
1985-86	0·52	—
1986-87	7·60	—
1987-88	6·74	4·47
1988-89	—	10·00
1989-90	—	12·00
1990-91	—	10·00
1991-92	—	11·00
1992-93	—	11·225

Since 1989-90 contributions have also been made towards the costs incurred by regional and district health authorities in the development of local HIV prevention initiatives. Regional AIDS (Control) Act reports since 1989-90 record expenditure on local HIV prevention initiatives as follows:

1989-90—£13·4 million
1990-91—£23·4 million
1991-92—£27·95 million

Figures for 1992-93 are not yet available though they are expected to reflect a steady increase in the development of district based HIV prevention work.

Figures recording the total spend on all aspects of health promotion are not collected centrally. However, the Government continue to spend more on HIV and AIDS education than on any other single health promotion programme.

Private Hospital Beds

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the expenditure by each London health authority per year on private hospital beds since 1983.

Mr. Sackville: The annual accounts of health authorities do not separately identify expenditure incurred specifically with private hospitals and the information is not otherwise collected centrally.

Ambulance Response Time

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish the list of ambulance response times over the past six months; and on what occasions they have breached Orcon standards.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is collected on a financial year basis. The latest figures, covering the year 1991-92, are currently being assembled for publication. I will arrange for a copy of the summary tables to be sent to the hon. Member and placed in the Library as soon as these are available.

Air Ambulance Services

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 19 October, Official Report, column 71, who is evaluating the air ambulance services; what account is being taken of local fund raising in the terms of reference; and when she expects the evaluation to be completed.

Mr. Sackville: The long-term evaluation of the costs, performance and benefits of air ambulances is being undertaken by Professor Williams of the university of Sheffield medical school. An interim report is expected towards the end of this year, with the final report following in early 1994. The source of funding for air ambulance services does not form part of the study.

Dentistry

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many family health services authorities have now given direct employment to dentists, and how many individual dentists are involved.

Dr. Mawhinney: There are currently 66 salaried dentists employed in 14 family health services authorities.

Community Care

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Health, what steps she is taking to strengthen the process of consultation on community care plans and to ensure that the independent sector providers of community care services are fully consulted.

Mr. Yeo: Independent sector providers, voluntary sector organisations and users and carers have a great deal of knowledge and experience to contribute to the development of community care. Authorities must form strong partnerships with all three if they are to develop services which are best suited to meeting people's needs and which provide a real choice. Community care planning is an important part of that process.

We have today issued for consultation with local authorities and other interested parties a draft statutory direction under the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 and accompanying guidance. Copies are available in the Library. Local authorities are already required to consult a wide range of people including voluntary sector organisations representing the interests of users and carers as well as statutory bodies in preparing their community care plans. The proposed direction extends that requirement to include representatives of independent sector providers. It will also require authorities to include in their plans a statement on how they intend to conduct the process of consultation in the next round.

The direction and guidance are intended to ensure that the consultation process allows all concerned to make their views known as effectively as possible and in a way which is helpful both to the authority and those being consulted. They will also ensure that independent sector providers are properly involved in community care planning. There are obvious problems for authorities in seeking to consult many separate individual providers. To have an effective voice independent sector providers must make their views known collectively through representatives rather than individually. The direction encourages them to do this.

Information Technology

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many members of regional authorities who were appointed between 1 January 1980 and 31 December 1991 were employees or directors engaged in the supply of, or consultancy related to, information technology; and if she will list them.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she will reply to the letters she has received, dated 7 May and 12 August, from Mr. F. Wilcox, consultant gynaecologist, regarding the purchase of computer systems in the national health service; and if she will place a copy of her reply in the Library.

Mr. Sackville: I have no record of receiving the letters to which the hon. Member refers. If he will furnish me with copies, I shall arrange for a full reply.

Free Treatment

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will outline the criteria for who is eligible for free treatment under the national health service;

(2) if she will estimate how much money is lost each year through treating patients who are not eligible for free national health service treatment;

(3) if she will make a statement on the safeguards to minimise the number of people using the national health service who are not eligible for free national health service treatment.

Mr. Sackville: Eligibility for free national health service hospital treatment is based on United Kingdom residence. Patients who are not ordinarily resident are liable for payment unless exempted, for example, by reciprocal arrangements. In 1990-91 non payment of £765,000 (England) was written-off. Comprehensive guidance on entitlement to free national health service treatment makes it clear that where there is doubt, subject to immediate clinical need, evidence to support eligibility or a full deposit should be sought.

Alcohol and Drug Services

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what estimate she has made of the implications of the decision not to ring fence specific funding for residential alcohol and drug services within the community care funding available from next April;

(2) what advice she proposes to give to local authorities concerning the priority to be given to the funding of residential alcohol and drug services within the ring fenced community care funding available from next April.

Mr. Yeo: My right hon. Friend announced on 2 October that we are proposing to make available to local authorities next year a special transitional grant for their new responsibilities for community care. This will give them the freedom to determine the appropriate level of funding for all services, including residential care for alcohol and drugs misusers. Guidance to local authorities reminding them of the need to give proper weight to the provision of alcohol and drug services is being prepared and will be issued shortly.

NHS Management Guidance

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether she will place in the Library a copy of the guidance issued to the NHS by the NHS management executive on 9 September regarding the standards of management and conduct.

Dr. Mawhinney: The letter issued on 9 September advised the national health service that revised guidelines on standards of business conduct for national health service staff would follow. This guidance will be issued shortly and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Population Statistics

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total number of adults in the city of Southampton identified in the census return for 1991.

Mr. Sackville: The number of people aged 18 or over recorded by the census on 21 April 1991 as usually resident in Southampton was 152,921. The number of residents meeting the definition of adult used in census statistics (people aged 16 or over who are not dependent children) was 151,947.

Tomlinson Report

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she intends to visit Bart's hospital as part of her follow-up to the Tomlinson report; and what proposals she has to give Bart's hospital time and facilities to prepare their case before making her visit.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will ensure that at least two ministerial visits are made to the Smithfield site of St. Bartholomew's hospital during the period of consultation on the Tomlinson report.

Dr. Mawhinney: I shall be visiting St. Bartholomew's hospital shortly including the Homerton Hospital and St. Mark's hospital, which form part of the Bart's acute unit. There will be ample opportunity for St. Bartholomew's and other hospitals to make known their views on Sir Bernard Tomlinson's recommendations before we bring forward detailed proposals.

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how the 10 minutes isochrone for Bart's hospital was calculated by Professor Tomlinson; who calculated it; and at what time of the day it was calculated.

Dr. Mawhinney: I understand that this analysis was undertaken by Sir Bernard Tomlinson by a firm of consultants, Centre for Analysis and Modelling Ltd., that it was based upon standard computerised geographical and transport data, and that it assumed road transport at Monday to Friday daytime off-peak road speeds. I have asked Sir Bernard to write directly to the hon. Member giving a more detailed explanation of the methodology, and shall ensure that a copy of his letter is placed in the Library.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the dates so far arranged for ministerial visits to hospitals proposed for closure or merger in the Tomlinson report.

Dr. Mawhinney: I shall ensure that hon. Members are informed in the normal way prior to any ministerial visits to hospitals in their constituencies.

Sex Offenders

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the recent case in Nottingham where a child sex offender was unable to continue treatment at Gracewell clinic because of lack of funds; and what proposals he has to fund such treatment in future.

Mr. Yeo: The funding of such services is a matter of local determination and I understand that local arrangements have been made to fund the person concerned at the Gracewell clinic.

EMPLOYMENT

Work Noise

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list the visits to Wales by the Health and Safety Executive's roadshow on noise at work.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Health and Safety Executive's roadshow on noise at work has yet to visit Wales. However, a number of visits are scheduled for November. The roadshow will be in the city centre, Cardiff from 2 to 7 November; in St. John's Street, Newport from 9 to 11 November; and in St. John's Forest square, Ebbw Vale from 12 to 14 November. It will also visit Wrexham in March 1993.

Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether trainees on European social fund training courses are treated as employees for the purposes of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974; what statutory health and safety obligations ESF providers have with respect to their trainees; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: For the purposes of health and safety legislation, trainees—including those on courses funded by the European social fund—are treated as employees if they engage in relevant training, as defined by the Health and Safety (Training for Employment) Regulations 1990. Relevant training is defined as work experience provided as part of a training course or programme, or training for employment, or both.

Where instruction is provided to trainees in an educational establishment or technical institute, employers have responsibilities towards this group as laid down under sections 3 and 4 of the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974.

These arrangements apply irrespective of whether the course in question is in receipt of support from the European social fund.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether trainees on European social fund training courses are covered by her Department's analogous industrial injuries compensation scheme; what statutory benefits a trainee who suffered an industrial injury whilst participating in an ESF course may claim; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Unemployed people on Government-sponsored training courses such as youth training and employment training are covered by the analogous industrial injuries scheme.

Trainees on other courses are covered by statutory arrangements. Their entitlement to statutory industrial injury benefit depends upon their status and in particular on whether the trainees are classed as "employed earners".

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what estimate she has made of the likely increased demand for training programmes over the next six months; and if she will make a statement on the proposals for meeting this demand.

Mr. McLoughlin: The provision of training programmes and demand for them are kept under constant review. Potential colliery closures may lead to increased demand. Up to £75 million will be made available to the areas affected. The training and enterprise councils concerned have been asked to co-ordinate action plans for new measures to alleviate the effects of the closures.

A statement about overall resources for training from April 1993 will be made when my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announces this year's public expenditure settlement.

Mr. Booth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans she has to extend the use of training credits.

Mr. McLoughlin: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Broxtowe (Mr. Lester) on the Floor of the House on 3 November 1992, Official Report, columns 130-31.

Wages Councils

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the lowest legal rates of pay for adults in wages councils covering more than 10,000 people and what are the lowest agreed rates of pay in (a) the civil service, (b) in local government service, (c) in nationalised industries and (d) in military service.

Mr. McLoughlin: The lowest legal rates of pay in wages councils covering more than 10,000 people are shown in the table:

Clothing manufacture	2·6375
General waste materials reclamation	2·60
Hairdressing undertakings	2·78
Laundry	2·91
Licensed non-residential	2·91
Licensed residential and licensed restaurant	2·92
Retail food and allied trades	3·08
Retail trades non-food	3·06
Toy manufacturing	2·63
Unlicensed place of refreshment	2·92

An administrative assistant in the civil service on adult rates is paid £6,483 a year. In the military service, a private committed to less than six years service is paid £7,774·50 a year.

The lowest agreed rates of pay in local government and nationalised industries is not readily available. There is no agreement covering all local authorities and each nationalised industry negotiates its own agreements.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to her answer of 29 October, Official Report, column 825, if she will list the studies or other evidence that illustrate or quantify the link asserted between pay and jobs at statutory minimum rates.

Mr. McLoughlin: Among the studies considered are the following:

(i) United Kingdom studies on the link between pay and jobs at national level.

Toxic Substances

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will bring forward proposals to ensure in relation to industrial major accident hazard sites situated within 25 km of international airports (a) that all vessels containing scheduled toxic substances stored under pressure are constructed so as to prevent rupture in the event of direct impact by a large aircraft and (b) that off-site emergency plans fully address the consequences of catastrophic failure of pressure vessels consequent on direct impact by large aircraft.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no plans to introduce requirements for such pressure vessels to withstand this kind of impact. Installations which are assessed by the Health and Safety Executive as representing a potential major hazard are constructed and operated within a strict legislative regime. The probability of such impacts is assessed as being very small.

Local authorities with installations governed by the Control of Major Accident Hazards (CIMAH) Regulations 1984 within their boundaries are required to prepare detailed emergency off-site plans which would take account of the catastrophic failure of pressure vessels.

Departmental Staff (Wages)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the minimum equivalent rate of hourly pay for her Department's staff aged 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 and 21 years; and the numbers employed at each age.

Mr. McLoughlin: The table shows minimum basic hourly rates of pay for industrial and non-industrial staff in the Employment Department group:

	Non-industrial National Rate	Non-industrial London Rate	Industrial National Rate
Age 16	2·39	2·63	2·00
Age 17	2·56	2·82	2·66
Age 18	3·14	3·45	3·33
Age 19	3·36	3·69	3·55
Age 20	3·36	3·69	3·89
Age 21	3·36	3·69	4·00

The number of ED group staff in post at 1 October 1992, at ages 21 and below, is in the table.

Age	All staff	Permanent staff only
16	10	2
17	114	54
18	389	230
19	1,078	732
20	1,481	1,091
21	1,560	1,222

Pit Closures

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list the amounts being given to each training and enterprise council as part of the recently announced pit closure programme.

Mr. McLoughlin: An additional sum of up to £75 million will be made available in areas affected by potential colliery closures depending on the scale of the job losses in prospect. The TECs concerned have been asked to coordinate action plans for new measures to alleviate the effects of closures. The actual amount available to each TEC will depend on the action plan that is finally agreed.

Work Sites (Tap Water)

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what provisions are laid down regarding requirements of access to tap water at work sites under health and safety regulations.

Mr. McLoughlin: There are no requirements for tap water as such in health and safety legislation. The Factories Act 1961 and the Offices, Shops and Railway Premises Act 1963 require drinking water and running water for washing to be provided at conveniently accessible places in premises subject to those Acts. Separate legislation covering construction work, mines and quarries, agriculture, and work with asbestos, lead and ionising radiations contains similar provisions.

Vehicle Building

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make a statement on the number of jobs lost in the vehicle building industry in the current year.

Mr. McLoughlin: Between August 1991 and August 1992, the number of employees in the manufacture of motor vehicles and parts in Great Britain fell by 1,000.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make a statement about the change in the number of people employed in manufacturing industry, by standard planning region, in the past 13 years.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information is shown in the table.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many training and enterprise councils have sought and been granted dispensation from the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Tony Lloyd, dated 4 November 1992:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question, about Training and Enterprise Councils and the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944. The day to day administration of the procedures which flow from the 1944 Act is something which falls within the responsibility delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

You asked how many training and Enterprise Councils (TECs) have been granted dispensations from the Act. I regret that data is not collected centrally on the extent to which permits are issued, in accordance with the provisions of the Act, to particular kinds of employer.

As you may know, the 1944 Act established the Quota Scheme for the employment of registered disabled people, under which employees who have twenty or more workers have a duty to employ a quota of registered disabled people. The standard quota is currently 3 per cent. of an employer's total workforce. Employers not meeting the quota have a further duty under the Act, to engage suitable registered disabled people, if any are available, to fill vacancies which arise. A below quota employer must not engage anyone other than a registered disabled person without first obtaining a permit to do so, and must not discharge a registered disabled worker without reasonable cause. The issue of a permit does not grant the employer exemption from their duties and obligations under the Act.

My placing Assessment and Counselling Teams (PACTs) do monitor the extent to which employers in their areas are complying with the requirements, including keeping details of permits issued by my Disability Employment Advisers to below quota employers. Each year PACTs provide a statistical return on quota compliance in their areas. These, in turn, are used by my Head Office to produce national data. However this geographical information does not enable data to be extracted centrally in respect of particular sectors or types of employer. Therefore, I am not able to provide the information you have asked for in relation to TECs.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Radiation Emergencies

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has in regard to the number and source of comments submitted to the Health and Safety Commission in response to the HSC draft on proposed United Kingdom regulations developed pursuant to EC directive 89/618/EEC on public information and radiation emergencies.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have been asked to reply.

The Health and Safety Executive is in the process of producing a publication entitled "A Guide to the Public Information for Radiation Emergencies Regulations". The draft guidance was sent out to approximately 180 organisations and individuals inviting comments. There were some 36 replies received of which 13 said that they had no comments to offer. The majority of replies came from nuclear operators, local authorities or their associations, organisations representing emergency service personnel and Government Departments.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Assisted Areas

12. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to complete his review of the assisted areas map.

23. Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals he has to alter the assisted area boundaries.

28. Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to complete his review of the map of assisted areas.

Mr. Sainsbury: The consultation paper on the assisted areas review stated that the Government's aim was to implement a revised map early in 1993, following the necessary clearance with the European Commission. This remains our intention.

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what will be the effect upon the current review of assisted area status of his announcement that certain coal mining areas will receive assisted area status; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Government have made a specific commitment that Barnsley, Doncaster and Mansfield will be given enhanced status. This will not affect the careful consideration that will be given to other areas in the light of the extensive process of consultation.

National Energy Strategy

13. Mr. Colvin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to respond to the call for a national energy strategy in the Energy Committee's fifth report of Session 1990-91 on clean coal technology and the coal market after 1993, HC 208.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. Friend announced on 26 October the scope of the review which we will be conducting of the proposed closure of 21 pits, within the context of the Government's energy policy.

Single European Act

14. Mr. Gapes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects all of the directives relative to the European Single Act to be completed.

Mr. Needham: A total of 257 out of the 282 measures in the Commission's White Paper "Completing the Internal Market" have been agreed. The Single European Act will continue in force as a basis for legislation.

Investment

15. Mr. Viggers: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his estimate of the percentage of investment by Japanese companies in the European Community which has been made in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Sainsbury: Information published by the Japanese Ministry of Finance, indicates that the United Kingdom has almost 41 per cent. of the stock of Japanese foreign direct investment in the European Community.

20. Mr. Wareing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he has had with international companies on the subject of inward investment into the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Officials of my Department, and of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, are in constant contact with a large number of companies in all the major investing countries.

Firework Safety

16. Mr. Cohen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the current year's firework safety campaign.

Mr. Leigh: This year's firework safety campaign was launched on 15 October. The aim of the campaign is to make sure that all those handling fireworks, whether as retailers or as users, are aware of their legal obligations and of the precautions that they should take to make sure of an accident-free Guy Fawkes night.

21. Mr. Spellar: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the effect that a European standard for fireworks will have on British safety standards.

Mr. Leigh: It is not certain at this stage what effect a European standard for fireworks will have on British safety standards. Negotiations will continue for some considerable time as our aim is to ensure that any European standard for fireworks is consistent with standards of safety in the United Kingdom.

Coal

17. Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent inquiries he has received from the private sector about buying coal waste.

Mr. Heseltine: None. This is a matter for the owners of coal waste, including British Coal.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his statement of 19 October, if he will set out a disaggregated breakdown of the £18 billion investment he stated has been made in the British coal industry since 1979.

Mr. Eggar: Financial assistance made available to the coal industry from 1979-80 to 1991-92 inclusive was as follows:

	£ million
Deficit grant	4,748
Deficiency grant	6,153
Operating grant	95
Social and restructuring grants	4,414
Redundant Mineworkers Payments Scheme	2,477
Total	17,887

The Government have approved capital expenditure by British Coal of nearly £8 billion over this period.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many tonnes of coal were sold by British Coal to customers other than the Central Electricity Generating Board, National Power and PowerGen in each of the last five years, giving a separate figure for exports in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Figures for sales to the United Kingdom market, excluding power stations and exports are as follows:

	United Kingdom Consumption, excluding Power Stations	Exports
1987-88	29·3	2·2
1988-89	28·3	1·8
1989-90	26·7	2·6
1990-91	26·8	2·1
1991-92	24·5	1·4

Requirements for coal in United Kingdom sectors other than electricity generation have been declining steadily for many years and have fallen by 16 per cent. in the past five years alone.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what tonnages of coal were imported by (a) the electricity authorities and (b) private generators in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Eggar: The amount of coal imported by the major electricity generators in the United Kingdom in 1991 was 7,260,000 tonnes. Figures for coal imports by small, private, industrial generators are not available.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what amounts of coal, and from which countries, have been imported into the United Kingdom in each of the last five years.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 3 November 1992]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden) on 30 October 1992, Official Report, column 956.

Fuel Prices

18. Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the current prices of coal, gas and nuclear-generated electricity; and what are the projected costs of these fuels over the next 10 years.

Mr. Eggar: My Department will be assessing the relative costs of coal-fired and other sources of generation as part of the Government's coal review.

As far as electricity purchased by the regional electricity companies is concerned, it is for the Director General of Electricity Supply to ensure that the companies comply with their economic purchasing obligations.

Pit Closures

Mr. Fisher: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received on the financial viability of Trentham colliery and the other nine pits marked for closure.

Mr. Eggar: I have received a number of representations of that kind. Such representations are, however, best made to British Coal since it is currently engaged in the statutory consultation process relating to the 10 pits.

27. Mr. Hanson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the considerations which led to the Point of Ayr colliery being added to the original closure list of 31 pits at a late stage; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. Friend and I accepted British Coal's advice that, in order to meet its estimate of its potential market economically, it needed to reduce its present levels of production urgently and substantially. We also accepted British Coal's advice as to the particular pits that should be closed.

29. Mr. Winnick: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the latest position over pit closures.

Mr. Eggar: Subject to the outcome of the statutory consultation process, British Coal is proceeding with the closure of the 10 pits which it told my right hon. Friend are currently loss making and have no prospect of viability in the foreseeable future.

The other 21 pits originally proposed for closure by British Coal remain the subject of a moratorium until early in the New Year, during which time we shall be carrying out a full and wide-ranging review of its prospects.

Civilian Aircraft

22. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what incentives he is providing to the British civilian aircraft industry.

Mr. Sainsbury: Since 1979, the Department of Trade and Industry has provided over £1·5 billion in support to the United Kingdom aerospace industry.

Business Failures

24. Mr. Raynsford: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the number of business failures in 1992 to date.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The number of company and individual insolvencies in England and Wales in the first six months of 1992 totalled 29,204—on a seasonally adjusted basis. This represents a 12 per cent. increase over the previous six months. These figures should be considered in the context of some 3 million United Kingdom businesses in total and the large number of business start-ups and closures each year.

Petrochemical Industry

25. Mr. Connarty: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps his Department is taking to assist the petrochemical industry through the present recession; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Government are committed to helping British industry to succeed in world markets. They are doing this by creating a climate within which industry can thrive and by ensuring that the policies of both DTI and the rest of Government take the needs of business into account. Our chemicals and biotechnology division, which was set up in July, is in close touch with the petrochemical industry.

Swan Hunter

Mr. Byers: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will agree to intervention funding from the European Commission being made available to Swan Hunter Shipbuilders to enable it to diversify into the merchant shipbuilding sector.

Mr. Sainsbury: Our agreement with the Commission prevents us from providing a subsidy to those companies which were privatised as warship builders.

Parcelforce

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the programme for Parcelforce privatisation.

Mr. Heseltine: I am discussing with consultants' their advice on the best method and timing for the sale of Parcelforce. I look forward to seeing Parcelforce in the private sector at the earliest possible opportunity.

Manufacturing

Mrs. Roche: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to announce new proposals to improve manufacturing output; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine: We will continue to announce new proposals as and when we reach appropriate decisions.

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what measures he is taking to support the supply side of the economy with particular regard to manufacturing and the drive for exports.

Mr. Needham: The Government are committed to strengthening the supply side of the economy by the control of inflation, by tax rates that provide real incentives, by reducing the burden of Government, by providing high-class advisory services, and by keeping markets, both at home and abroad, fair and competitive.

Private Industry (Secondees)

33. Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many secondees to his Department from private industry have been appointed; how many applied; and when he expects to have 100 secondees in place.

Mr. Eggar: There are 37 inward secondees from the private sector currently working in the DTI. My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has announced his intention to increase substantially that number by recruiting additional secondees to help in the Department's new industry sector divisions and a further 100 secondees to assist with the promotion of United Kingdom exports.

My right hon. Friend is inviting companies to identify suitable people for these secondments and his aim is to have them in place quickly.

Electricity

34. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the electricity prices charged to heavy industry bulk users of electric power.

Mr. Eggar: My Department is in dialogue with large electricity users concerning electricity prices.

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what percentage of electricity consumption was produced by sources other than (a) gas, (b) coal, (c) oil and (d) nuclear power, in the United Kingdom in each of the last three years.

Mr. Eggar: The proportion of electricity consumption in the United Kingdom that was produced by sources other than gas, coal, oil and nuclear power was about 2 per cent. in each of the last three years. This figure includes generation by hydro-electric power, wind power and other renewable energy sources.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what study has been made of the relationship between fuel prices and the price of electricity supplied to British industry; and if he will publish a table, for each of the past 10 years, of the average price charged by the United Kingdom and the German electricity supply industries to major users.

Mr. Eggar: It is for the Director General of Electricity Supply to ensure the proper functioning of the market for electricity. In addition, my Department is in dialogue with large electricity users concerning electricity prices.

The information requested is as follows:

Industrial electricity prices

Nuclear Reprocessing

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what quantities of uranium and plutonium would be produced by reprocessing spent fuel from United Kingdom nuclear power stations under existing contracts with the thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield.

Mr. Eggar: Under its existing contracts for operating the thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield up to the year 2002, British Nuclear Fuels plc estimates that some 2,000 tonnes of uranium and some 8,000 tonnes of plutonium will arise from the reprocessing of spent fuel from nuclear power stations in the United Kingdom.

Correspondence

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what guidelines are issued to his Department for the processing of correspondence from hon. Members; and what is the average delay between receipt of correspondence from, and the date of response to, an hon. Member.

Mr. Heseltine: The Department of Trade and Industry has an explicit performance target for all ministerial correspondence as set out by the citizens charter unit. When DTI Ministers themselves reply to letters from Members of Parliament or members of the public, they aim to do so within ten working days of receipt of the incoming letter. This target was met, in the year ending 31 December 1991, in 91·5 per cent. of cases.

Maxwell Communications Corporation plc

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the progress of the inquiry into the Mirror Group Newspapers prospectus; what is the expected date for publication of the report; and what consideration the inspectors are giving to statements made by the directors in the prospectus about the Maxwell Communications Corporation plc works pension scheme.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The inspectors have commenced interviewing witnesses, but it is too early to give a realistic estimate as to when they will complete their investigation. I am sure that they will consider all aspects of the company's affairs relevant to their task. It is the policy to publish reports on the affairs of public companies, but a decision cannot be made until the report is received and its contents have been studied.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the progress of the inquiry into the interests in and ownership of shares in Maxwell Communications Corporation plc and the expected date for publication of the report; and whether the report will include sections concerning breach of trust where shares were acquired by or funded by pension funds without proper authority.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: My Department is not carrying out any inquiry into Maxwell Communication Corporation plc.

Gas

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will estimate, on the basis of available known reserves of gas on the United Kingdom continental shelf, how long United Kingdom gas reserves would last if all the proposed gas-generated electricity stations were to come into operation using domestic reserves; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: For details of the Department's most recent estimate of UKCS gas reserves I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for York (Mr. Bayley) on 28 October 1992, Official Report, columns 680-81.

As my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade told the House on 21 October, he will be producing for the House the conclusions we draw from our estimates of reserves, and will report on the scale of gas-generated power stations in production, in build and in the planning process.

Insurance Exhibition

Mr. Tracey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the Association of British Insurers to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I understand that, under the procedures agreed with the Services Committee, arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from 9 to 13 November.

Guinness (Report)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he will publish the inspectors' report relating to Guinness.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The inspectors have submitted an interim report. This has not been published because of the possibility of prejudice to the criminal proceedings. The inspectors will submit their final report following the conclusion of these proceedings. Consideration of publication of that report must await its receipt.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the cost of preparing the inspectors' report relating to Guinness; and when payout was made.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The investigation into the affairs and membership of Guinness plc has cost £1,793,000 to date. Payments have been made to the inspectors against invoices issued from time to time.

Accountancy Firms

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the accountancy firms which have been criticised in his Department's inspectors' reports since 1990.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Since 1990, six inspectors' reports have been published containing criticism of accountancy firms:

Name of Company	Date of Publication of Report	Name of Accountancy Firm
Minet Holdings plc and WMD Underwriting Agencies Ltd.	29 August 1990	Black Geognegan and Till Jocelyne Layton-Bennett & Co. Arthur Young McClelland Moores & Co.
Alexander Howden Holdings plc	29 August 1990	Jocelyne Layton-Bennett & Code Paula Turner Lake & Co Peat Marwick Mitchell & Co Bermuda Arthur Young McClelland Moores & Co
Aldermanbury Trust plc	20 March 1991	Levy Gee Spicer & Pegler Gibraltar
Sound Diffusion plc	1 May 1991	Arthur Young McClelland Moores & Co
Rotaprint plc	24 July 1991	Arthur Young Ernst & Whinney
The Milford Docks Company	16 January 1992	Coopers & Lybrand

British Coal (Privatisation)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the accountancy firms which are advising him on privatisation of British Coal.

Mr. Eggar: Touche Ross was appointed as accountancy adviser on the privatisation of British Coal on 12 June 1991.

Company Accounts

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will introduce departmental investigations of a sample of company accounts whenever the auditors issue a major qualification.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: My Department's investigatory powers can only be exercised when there is good reason to do so, primarily when there are grounds to suggest fraud, misfeasance, or serious misconduct; or where shareholders have been denied reasonable information.

Companies Acts Inspectors

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the names and the business connections of the individuals who are currently acting as inspectors under the Companies Acts.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The information requested by the hon. Member is as follows:

D. Donaldson QC
I. Watt FCA of KPMG Peat Marwick, Chartered Accountants
Miss E. Appleby QC
P. Foss FCA of Moores Rowland, Chartered Accountants

Financial Reporting Council

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much finance he has provided to the Financial Reporting Council for each of the years since its inception.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The amounts of grant in aid paid to the Financial Reporting Council have been:

1990-91	886,317
1991-92	907,793
[1]1992-93	254,000

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he has any plans to appoint inspectors to investigate the role of auditors in the collapse of the BCCI.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The accountancy profession's joint disciplinary scheme announced in April that it had appointed a committee of inquiry at the request of the Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales to look into the conduct and competence of members and member firms in relation to the collapse of BCCI. The committee is chaired by Sir John Bailey KCB. I have no plans to appoint inspectors.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the total cost of the liquidation of Bank of Credit and Commerce International in terms of (a) liquidators' fees and (b) legal fees.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 3 November 1992]: My Department does not have this information; this is a matter for the liquidators.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many loans have been written off by the liquidators of the Bank of Credit and Commerce International.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 3 November 1992]: My Department does not have this information; this is a matter for the liquidators.

Insurance Companies

Mr. Cann: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many captive insurance companies have been created under the supervision of the Department of Trade and Industry during 1989, 1990 and 1991.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: My Department authorised one captive insurance company in 1990 and none in 1989 and 1991.

Libya

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the effect of United Nations sanctions against Libya on British trade.

Mr. Needham: United Kingdom exports to Libya were just under £90 million from April—when limited sanctions came into force—to August 1992. It is impossible to say what additional trade might have occurred if United Nations sanctions had not been in force during that period.

Toyota

Mrs. Currie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he has had with Toyota Motor Manufacturing (UK) Ltd., to discuss further investment programmes.

Mr. Sainsbury: Toyota Motor Manufacturing (UK) Ltd. has already committed £840 million to its current investment programme in the United Kingdom. There are no current discussions with the company regarding further investment.

Municipal Mutual Insurance Company

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received concerning the affairs of the Municipal Mutual Insurance company.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I have been made aware of the concerns of policyholders, including private individuals and local authorities, and employees of Municipal Mutual Insurance Ltd. I have their interests very much in mind when considering the discharge of my Department's responsibilities under the Insurance Companies Act 1982.

Paper Production

Mr. Paice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what investigations his Department has conducted to establish the environmental energy balance through a cradle-to-grave analysis of paper production from virgin fibre and paper production using recycled materials; and what conclusions have been drawn.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 2 November 1992]: Warren Spring Laboratory, an agency of my Department, carried out a review of the environmental impact of recycling processes calling on known, available, published cradle-to-grave analysis data and reported its findings in July 1992. The report, entitled "A Review of: The Environmental Impact of Recycling" concludes that, taking into account the whole lifecycle, there are very significant savings in energy consumption—ranging from 28 per cent. to 70 per cent.—and reductions in emissions to be gained by recycling paper. It notes, however, that there will always be a need for virgin fibre to replace shortened fibres lost as fines and that, in certain situations, there is a case for incineration with energy recovery of waste paper, particularly when in mixed, contaminated form. It also highlights the imbalance between United Kingdom consumption and production of paper and board as a major barrier to increased levels of recycling. I will arrange for a copy of the report to be placed in the Library of the House.

Further work on the environmental impacts from cradle-to-grave of a range of paper products, both virgin and recycled fibre based, is being carried out on behalf of the EC Commission by the Danish National Agency of Environmental Protection. The results of this work, which have yet to be published, will be used in the preparation of criteria for the EC ecolabelling scheme.

Coal Faces (Visits)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list those coal faces which he has visited since taking office as President of the Board of Trade; on what dates those visits took place; and what estimate had been made in each case at that time of the probable life and potential tonnage of that coal face.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 2 November 1992]: I have not visited any collieries since taking up my present office. However, my hon. Friend the Minister for Energy visited Ollerton and Rufford collieries on 13 May and Whitemoor colliery on 17 July. My noble Friend Baroness Denton, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Consumer Affairs and Small Firms, visited Silverwood colliery on 28 August. They had wide-ranging exchanges with local managers and members of the work force about the particular pits and issues affecting the industry more generally.

Coal and Cereals

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish a table showing the percentage increase in coal and cereal production since 1968 and in the amount imported and exported.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 3 November 1992]: Figures for the production, imports and exports of coal and cereals in 1968 and 1991, and the percentage changes of each over the intervening period, were:

Million tonnes

	Coal 1968	Coal 1991	Coal Per cent. change	Cereal 1968-69[1]	Cereal 1991	Cereal Per cent. change
Production	169·9	96·1	−43	13·1	22·6	+72
Imports	—	19·5	(+)	8·6	2·5	−71
Exports	2·7	1·7	−39	0·1	6·0	(+)

Percentage changes have been calculated from unrounded figures.

European Community

Mr. Cryer: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the number of civil servants in his Department whose main task is work related wholly or mainly to the European Community.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 3 November 1992]: My Department has 59 officials wholly engaged in work related to the European Community. There is no central register of officials mainly or partially engaged in such work.

EC Perifra Programme

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the projects approved for submission to the EC Perifra programme together with the dates he expects approval to be given and work under the programme to commence in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 3 November 1992]: On 5 June 1992, the United Kingdom sent 12 proposals to the European Commission for funding under the Perifra scheme. On 7 August 1992, the European Commission announced the approval of eight of them. These are as follows:

Region/project

Borders Regional Council
Textile design and innovation centre.

Calderdale Metropolitan Borough Council
Todmorden area regeneration initiative.

Chorley Borough Council/Lancashire Enterprises
Technology centre to support redeployment of defence jobs.

Dyfed/West Wales Task Force
Employment/training initiative.

Fife Regional Council
Product Innovation Centre.

Hertfordshire TEC/Hertfordshire County Council
Development of alternative employment through support and training.

Leeds City Council
Clothing Resource Centre.

Royal British Legion, Wiltshire

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Pit Closures

Mr. Redmond: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners, what discussions the Church Commissioners have had with the management of the electricity companies in connection with the pit closure programme, under the Commissioners' investment policy guidelines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Alison: The Commissioners take an active interest in those businesses in which they invest and this includes regular discussions with the chairmen of companies in which they have substantial holdings, primarily to discuss a range of ethical questions. From time to time, on matters where the Church has expressed concern, they can use their position as shareholders to reinforce that concern with these chairmen and this is what they are doing in the case of the proposed pit closures.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Crime, Northumbria

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will meet representatives of the Northumbria police authority to discuss the continuation of urban crime fund resources.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 22 October, at column 553. My right hon. and learned Friend is currently considering a request from Northumbria police authority for a meeting.

Le Trong Khai

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he proposes to reply to the letters of 19 February and 22 April from the hon. Member for Sunderland, South regarding the family of Le Trong Khai (ref. L301037/PO4731/92).

Mr. Charles Wardle: This case is one of about 30 cases involving Vietnamese boat people raised with hon. Members by Ms. Frances House, all of which are being considered together. We are awaiting further information from Ms. House on some of the cases, but I hope that this will be forthcoming and that I will be able to send the hon. Member a substantive reply to his letters shortly.

Mrs. Zarqa Begum

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he received the application for indefinite leave to remain in the United Kingdom by Mrs. Zarqa Begum (Ref. IMP B490251/2/S) submitted to him by the hon. Member for Bradford, West; when the application was refused; when the hon. Member for Bradford, West was notified of the refusal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The application was received on 22 January 1992. My hon. Friend the Member for Fareham (Mr. Lloyd) wrote to the hon. Member on 11 March explaining that inquiries were being made and that the compassionate circumstances would be taken into account when a decision was reached. The application was refused on 21 July; it was subsequently reconsidered but again refused on 10 September. I have agreed to meet the hon. Member to discuss this case on 5 November.

Immigration and Nationality Department

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department after what interval a right hon. or hon. Member can expect a substantive reply to letters concerning the immigration and nationality department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: In most cases 35 days.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to establish an independent complaints procedure for the immigration and nationality department.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The arrangements for dealing with complaints are currently under review in the light of the principles in the citizens charter. The arguments for introducing an independent element, which have not hitherto been found persuasive, will be considered in the course of that review.

Fire Regulations

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to publish the Fire Precautions (Places of Work) Regulations 1992 and associated guidance.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend is still considering the many comments on the proposed regulations and guidance received during the consultation period which ended on 1 September. He is concerned to give proper consideration to those comments before deciding on the form which the regulations and guidance should take.

Terrorist Suspects (Interviews)

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement concerning the tape recording of interviews with terrorist suspects.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The full tape recording of interviews with terrorist suspects will begin, on a trial basis, on Tuesday 1 December 1992. All forces in England and Wales will tape record interviews with terrorist suspects in line with current practice for other criminal suspects under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984. These trials, which will run for up to two years, will be carefully evaluated before any decision is taken to extend formally the code of practice on tape recording under the 1984 Act to cover terrorist cases.

Asylum

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will name each of the asylum seekers who have died in detention since 1990; what public reports were made on the circumstances of their deaths; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Two asylum seekers have died in detention during this period. On 16 June 1990, Mr. Kimpua Nsimba died in the Harmondsworth detention centre. The coroner's inquest into his death recorded on 4 March 1991 a finding of suicide by asphyxia and hanging. On 8 October 1991, Mr. Omasase Lumumba died in Her Majesty's prison Pentonville. I understand that the coroner's inquest is due to take place on 8 February 1993.

Duty Psychiatrists

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress he has made towards using the funds announced in the "Autumn Statement 1991" to finance the establishment of duty psychiatrist schemes.

Mr. Jack: Arrangements for administering the financial provision designated for local, court-based duty psychiatrist schemes have been worked out in consultation with the Department of Health, and we hope shortly to be in a position to invite bids for funding to support the operation of such schemes.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the change in numbers of each serious crime since 1979.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 3 November 1992]: The information is contained in the table:

Public Houses (Violence)

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (i) how many prison sentences were imposed on persons found guilty of physical violence against landlords or landladies of public houses in 1991;

(2) how many orders of exclusion from public houses have been enforced on persons found guilty of physical violence against landlords or landladies in 1991.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 27 October 1992]: Information is not held centrally on the number of offenders convicted of offences of violence against landlords or landladies of public houses.

Data held centrally show that in 1990 there were 101 exclusion orders made excluding offenders from licensed premises. This information may be under-recorded, because police forces are not always able to supply us with the relevant details. Provisional data for 1991 will be available before the end of 1992.

Accommodation Agencies Act 1953

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of prosecutions under the Accommodation Agencies Act 1953 each year since 1962.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 27 October 1992]: Information is given in the table. Data for 1962 to 1974 and 1990 are not available. Information collected centrally for 1990 does not identify offences committed under this specific Act from other summary offences. This will also apply to 1991 data when available.

Smoking and Drinking (Young People)

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many publicans have been prosecuted over the last 10 years for selling alcohol to persons under the age of 18 years;

(2) how many shopkeepers have been prosecuted over the last 10 years for selling cigarettes to children under 16 years.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 2 November 1992]: The table shows the information held centrally on the number of prosecutions for the illegal sale of alcohol on licensed premises to persons under the age of 18 and for the sale of tobacco to children under the age of 16. We are unable to distinguish the number of publicans and shopkeepers involved.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Bus Lanes

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consideration is being given to providing bus priority designated lanes with priority at traffic signals on main routes in Belfast.

Mr. Atkins: An experimental scheme was introduced on Ormeau road earlier this year and a further scheme is planned for 1993.

Irish Republican Army

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representation has been made by him and his predecessors to eastern European states and the former Soviet Union to obtain information on the supply of weapons and explosives to the Irish Republican Army.

Mr. Mates: Discussions have taken place with several eastern European Governments and with the Government of Russia. Concern about the supply by Libya of Czechoslovak-made Semtex explosive to PIRA led to the conclusion of the convention on the marking of plastic explosives. The Government will continue to pursue all leads about the supply of weapons and explosives to the Provisional Irish Republican Army.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Community Charge

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will publish a table showing for each county court, and in total, the costs incurred by his Department since 1990 in actions taken recovering community charge arrears.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The enforcement of community charge is dealt with by the magistrates courts. The estimated cost of community charge enforcement in magistrates courts from 1 April 1990 to 30 June 1992 was £8·2 million. It is not possible to break this figure down between individual magistrates courts.

Terrorist-related Crimes

Mr. A. Cecil Walker: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many bail applications for terrorist-related crimes were lodged in Northern Ireland in each of the past two years; how many were successful; and what was the total cost to the Exchequer for each year of these applications.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The number of bail applications made in respect of scheduled offences in 1990 and in 1991; and the number of such bail applications which were successful were as follows:

Applications for bail in respect of scheduled offences

	1990	1991
Applications made	1,035	1,573
Applications successful	562	746

The cost to the Exchequer of these applications is not available and could not be made available except at disproportionate cost.

Consultants

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list all of the reports his Department has commissioned from external consultants in each of the past three years; for each of the past three years, how many reports from external consultants to his Department led to further consultancy work being commissioned, stating for each of these who were the original and subsequent consultants and briefly describing the subject matter of the consultancy work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information requested can be provided only at disproportionate cost. I will not make a statement.

Agencies

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list by grade the numbers of staff and their cost for 1991-92 and the estimated figures for 1992-93 for each executive agency for which he is responsible.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor is responsible for two agencies,—the Public Record Office and Her Majesty's Land Registry. Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the chief executives of both agencies and I have asked them to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from W. Arnold to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 30 October 1992:

The Chief Executive is presently absent from the Office and, as Principal Establishment Officer of the Public Record Office, I have been asked to reply to your Parliamentary Question as set down below, since this is a matter delegated to the Office under the terms of the Agency's Framework Document.

I enclose tables giving the information you seek in respect of the Public Record Office.

If you have any further questions please do not hesitate to ask me.

Letter from John Manthorpe to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 2 November 1992:

The Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, has asked me to reply to your question concerning staff numbers by grade and their cost for 1991-92 and the estimated figure for 1992-93 in the Land Registry.

The table attached indicates the permanent staff in post by grade at the beginning and end of 1991-92 and an estimate of the total at 1 April 1993. Costs, both inclusive and exclusive of superannuation expenditure, for permanent staff in 1991-92 and an estimate for 1992-93 are also shown in the table.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Consultants

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list all of the reports his Department has commissioned from external consultants in each of the last three years; for each of the last three years, how many reports from external consultants to his Department led to further consultancy work being commissioned, stating for each of these who were the original and subsequent consultants and briefly describing the subject matter of the consultancy work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: This information is not held centrally and can be supplied only at disproportionate cost.

Citizens Charter

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which organisations, in each principal sector, have been targeted to receive a copy of the citizens charter; and what progress has been made to date in ensuring that all public bodies affected by the charter's recommendations have a copy of Cm 1599.

Mr. Waldegrave: In July 1991 the head of the home civil service, Sir Robin Butler, wrote to permanent secretaries of civil service Departments about the citizens charter and its implementation. Copies of the White Paper were made available to them. In addition, agency chief executives, the chairmen of British Rail and London Regional Transport, the Association of District Councils, the Association of Metropolitan Authorities, the Association of County Councils, the London Boroughs Association, the Association of London Authorities and the Convention of Scottish Authorities were also sent copies.

Many other bodies were informed of the White Paper's availability including the general managers of the regional health authorities, district health authorities, family health services authorities, special health authorities, chief executives of national health service trust hospitals, the chief officers of police, the chief probation officers and the secretaries of clerks of magistrates courts committees. The White Paper was advertised widely. To date, 20,246 copies of the White Paper have been sold; 455,617 copies of the popular version—"A Guide to the Citizen's Charter"—have been distributed, free of charge.

TRANSPORT

M40

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research has been undertaken regarding congestion at junction 9 of the M40 motorway.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: My Department has invited Oxfordshire county council to undertake a study to investigate and determine measures to improve traffic conditions at this junction.

M11

Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the construction of a motorway services area by Trust House Forte at Birchanger on the M11.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The chief executive of Forte Restaurants wrote to my right hon. and learned Friend the then Secretary of State on 6 March to explain that his company had stopped work at Birchanger pending completion of the Government's review of motorway service area policy. My right hon. Friend announced the outcome of that review on 6 August, and my officials are to meet the company shortly to discuss a resumption of work at the site.

Agencies

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list by grade the numbers of staff and their cost for 1991-92 and the estimated figures for 1992-93, for each executive agency for which he is responsible.

Mr. Steve Norris: The numbers of staff for each of the Department of Transport's Agencies, by grade and their cost for 1991-92, and the estimated figures for 1992-93 are shown in the tables. TRL and DVOIT became agencies on 1 April 1992; the 1991-92 figures for DVOIT are included in DVLA's figures for that year. All staff costs shown include superannuation and earnings-related national insurance contribution provision.

Marine Directorate

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many inspectors are employed by the Marine directorate; and if he will give details of the number of (a) United Kingdom-flagged vessels and (b) flag-of-convenience tonnage covered by inspectors of the Marine directorate in 1989-90, 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Norris: There are at present 190 marine surveyors employed within the marine directorate.

The numbers of inspections of United Kingdom vessels were:

	Numbers
1989-90	4,021
1990-91	3,503
1991-92	4,174

The numbers of foreign ships inspected were:

	Numbers
1989-90	1,782
1990-91	2,197

Commuter Fares

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the level of commuter fares in London relative to other EC capital and major cities; and if he will make a statement on Government policy with regard to this situation.

Mr. Norris: It is difficult to compare fare levels internationally because each transport system has a different fare structure and few European cities are as large and complex as London. In 1991-92 fares on London Buses and the Underground were 17 per cent. and 7 per cent. higher in real terms than 10 years earlier; Network SouthEast fares were 19 per cent. higher. Over the same period, average real weekly earnings have increased by 40 per cent. in London. So fares increases have been more than matched by increased ability to pay. The Government believe that it is right to strike a balance between contributions from users, and subsidy from taxpayers. If one pays less, the other of necessity pays more.

Plutonium

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what submissions his Department has made to the International Maritime Organisation on the subject of the maritime transport of plutonium.

Mr. Norris: None.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Agencies

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list by grade the numbers of staff and their cost for 1991-92 and the estimated figures for 1992-93 for each executive agency for which he is responsible.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to both Wilton Park under its chief executive, Geoffrey Denton, and to the Natural Resources Institute under its chief executive, Anthony Beattie. I have asked them to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Geoffrey Denton to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 4 November 1992

Thank you for your question asking Wilton Park to list by grade the numbers of staff and their cost for 1991-92 and the estimated figures for 1992-93.

Visiting Musicians (Visas)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when visas were issued by the United Kingdom post in Islamabad to five musicians, led by Qadi Muhammad Tufail, born on 10 July 1935, to tour the United Kingdom at the invitation of the Al Falah Youth Organisation of Bradford; when that post was notified that all members of the group had been issued with work permits by the overseas labour section of the Department of Employment; when visit visa applications were made on behalf of the group; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In the absence of any information about this case, we have asked the high commission in Islamabad for a full report. We shall arrange for the hon. Member to receive a substantive reply from the migration and visa correspondence unit of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office as soon as possible.

Maastricht Treaty

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has to accommodate the request by Denmark for amendments to the treaty on European union.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: As presidency, the United Kingdom will use the proposals submitted by the Danish Government as the basis for discussion with partners on agreeing the framework for a solution at Edinburgh.

International Atomic Energy Agency

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) whether the International Atomic Energy Agency has the authority to conduct special investigations at facilities that have not been previously reported to the International Atomic Energy Agency; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what assessment has been made by his Department of the effectiveness of the non-proliferation safeguards set out in the International Atomic Energy Agency document INFCIRO/153; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I have been asked to reply.

An assessment of the effectiveness of IAEA safeguards is provided in the agency's annual report. The 1991 report stated:

> "it is considered reasonable to conclude that the nuclear material placed under safeguards remained in peaceful nuclear activities or was otherwise adequately accounted for".

Previous annual reports have recorded similar findings. The agency's report also recorded, however, that:

> "Inspection activities carried out pursuant to United Nations Security Council Resolution 687 reveal that Iraq had not complied with the obligations under its safeguards agreement to declare certain nuclear activities and place all relevant nuclear material under safeguards".

In the light of the discoveries in Iraq and other recent developments, the board of governors has considered at length ways in which the agency's safeguards system might be further strengthened. As part of this exercise the February board of governors reaffirmed the agency's right, under safeguards agreements concluded under the non-proliferation treaty, to undertake special inspections including locations other than those declared by states. A proposal for the early provision of design information on new and modified facilities was also accepted.

At its June and September board of governors meetings, the IAEA examined proposals which would give the agency important additional information on exports and imports of nuclear material and on exports of certain relevant equipment and non-nuclear materials. The agency's member states are examining options for providing such information.

The agency's board will continue to examine improvements in the strength and cost effectiveness of the agency's safeguards activities from time to time. The United Kingdom attaches great importance to the subject and will continue to play a full part in these discussions.

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent communications his Department has had with his counterparts in Russia and other states in the Commonwealth of Independant States relating to the funding of the International Atomic Energy Agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I have been asked to reply.

Officials have frequent bilateral contact with counterparts from the Russian Federation and CIS states during meetings of the International Atomic Energy Agency's general conference and board of governors at which various matters are discussed including the funding of the IAEA.

PRIME MINISTER

Maastricht Treaty

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy that concessions to Denmark on citizenship in relation to the treaty on European union will be extended to the United Kingdom.

The Prime Minister: The United Kingdom is committed to ratifying the treaty on European union as it stands.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the Government's policy in relation to the Danish Government's proposals relating to article 8 of the treaty on European union.

The Prime Minister: A Danish proposal was agreed by the Folketing on 30 October. This will now be discussed by EC member states. The presidency's task is to take forward this discussion, and to reach a framework agreement on a solution for Denmark at the Edinburgh European Council.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister what tax advantages nationals of other member states resident in the United Kingdom who take advantage of the provisions of article 8b of the treaty on European union will continue to enjoy.

The Prime Minister: The United Kingdom tax position of nationals of other member states will continue to depend on their individual residence and domicile status. This status is not expected to be significantly affected by the provisions of article 8b of the treaty on European union.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister what is his policy towards ratification by other member states of the treaty on European union in the absence of ratification by Denmark.

The Prime Minister: The Birmingham European Council reaffirmed the importance of concluding ratification of the Maastricht treaty as soon as possible. All member states, including Denmark, are working towards this. The treaty cannot, however, enter into force until all member states have ratified.

Citizenship

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he has received in favour of British citizens becoming European citizens.

The Prime Minister: None. European citizenship is supplementary to national citizenship and in no way replaces it. We in the United Kingdom remain responsible for deciding who shall be nationals of this country.

East Timor

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Prime Minister if, as President of the European Council, he will make further representations to the Indonesian Government to stop all repressive actions in East Timor around the 12 November anniversary of the massacre in Santa Cruz cemetery.

The Prime Minister: The Indonesians are already fully aware of the views of the British Government and of our European Community partners.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Prime Minister if, as President of the European Council, he will request the Indonesian authorities to allow a diplomatic mission to Dili, East Timor, for the period including 12 November.

The Prime Minister: No. Diplomatic Missions in Jakarta are able to visit East Timor and do so.

Subsidiarity

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister if the Government will ensure that the principle of subsidiarity is applied to fiscal and monetary policy.

The Prime Minister: The principle of subsidiarity is set out in article 3b of the treaty on European union and applies to all areas of Community competence.

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 5 November.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 5 November.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Family Credit

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the effect of minimum wages fixed by wages councils on the number of recipients of and sums spent on family credit in 1992-93 and 1993-94.

Mr. Burt: It is not possible to identify families receiving family credit whose wages are covered by wages councils. The benefit is payable to any low-income family with children irrespective of whether or not their wages are fixed by wages councils. The biggest determinant of the size of a family credit award is the number and ages of the children rather than variations in the level of wages.

Compensation Recovery Unit

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were the costs involved in setting up the compensation recovery unit; and what were the unit's running costs in 1991-92.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 15 June at column 387.

Social Fund

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what guidelines are issued to local DSS offices in assessing victims of domestic violence when they seek access to social fund loans or grants.

Mr. Scott: National guidance on dealing with social fund applications is contained in the social fund guide, a copy of which is in the Library. Paragraphs 5400 to 5405 provide guidance on applications for community care grants to help an applicant move to different accommodation. Paragraph 5404 states that, where an applicant is moving out of the accommodation following a breakdown of a relationship, a higher priority may be given to cases where there has been domestic violence, if a payment will help to protect the applicant and any children from risk. No specific guidance is given in relation to budgeting and crisis loans.

District managers as area social fund officers are also required to give guidance to social fund officers on both the nature, extent and urgency of needs within the locality and the high, medium and low priority needs which may be met from the district budget. This guidance may include advice on the priority of applications from victims of domestic violence.

In addition, social fund officers, in determining applications, are required to consider the individual circumstances of each case. Where domestic violence is relevant to the application, this will be taken into account.

Cold Weather Payments

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many households in east Edinburgh have qualified, or do qualify, for payments under the cold weather payments scheme since its inception in 1991.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Dr. Gavin Strang, dated 4 November 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking how many households in East Edinburgh have qualified, or do qualify, for payments under the cold weather payments scheme since its inception in 1991.

Edinburgh East constituency is covered by the Agency's East Lowlands and Lothian Central Districts. During 1991, only customers of the Galashiels office, which forms part of the East Lowlands District, qualified for Cold Weather Payments. Details are available in the Library. It is not possible to give an exact figure of how many customers may have future entitlement except at disproportionate cost. However, based on figures for those claiming Income Support in November 1991, it is estimated that approximately 25,100 customers claiming from those Districts may qualify for a Cold Weather Payment should the area be triggered. Parliamentary constituencies and District boundaries do not correspond however and a proportion of these will live outside the constituency.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Consultants

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list all of the reports his Department has commissioned from external consultants in each of the last three years; for each of the last three years, how many reports from external consultants to his Department led to further consultancy work being commissioned, stating for each of these who were the original and subsequent consultants and briefly describing the subject matter of the consultancy work; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Treasury Solicitor's Department has commissioned two reports from external consultants in the last three years. In 1990, KPMG Peat Marwick McLintock reported on a time recording and billing system for the department and in 1992, BDO Binder Hamlyn was commissioned to report on financial and accounting systems for the department.

The Crown prosecution service has commissioned six reports from external consultants in the last three years. In 1990, Scoll Ltd. reported on computer security policy and KPMG Peat Marwick McLintock reported on the training and development needs of CPS managers. In 1991, Yale Consulting reported on local area network strategy. In 1992, Infact Ltd. reported on the cabling specification for the new CPS headquarters building. This led to the further commissioning of the same consultants to provide technical monitoring of the cabling installation. Axsis Ltd. was commissioned to do a telecommunications strategy scoping study and this led to the further commissioning of a full telecommunications strategy study. Also in 1992, Energy Conscious Design performed an energy and environmental audit of the new headquarters building.

The Serious Fraud Office commissioned five reports from external consultants in 1992, and none in 1990 and 1991. They are as follows:

Information systems strategy scoping study: Hedra.
Information systems security study: Admiral plc.
Information systems architecture study: Systemhouse International (Europe) Ltd.
Accommodation space planning study: Morgan Lovall.
Analysis of system faults at Citygate House: Systemhouse.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Hens

15. Mr. Lewis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has to improve the welfare of laying hens.

Mr. Soames: Improved welfare standards need to be set on a European Community basis. We are currently expecting Commission proposals on the welfare of laying hens.

Fishing

16. Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has to protect the catch allocated to British fishermen from quota hoppers.

Mr. Curry: The United Kingdom's registration and licensing arrangements restrict access to our quotas.

Common Agricultural Policy

17. Mr. Wray: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much of the entire EC budget is spent on the common agricultural policy.

Mr. Gummer: The common agricultural policy accounts for approximately 60 per cent. of the EC budget.

Set-aside Land

18. Mr. Lord: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps the Government are taking to encourage the growing of alternative crops on set-aside land; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The EC rules on the new arable area payments scheme allow a wide range of crops to be grown on set-aside land for specified non-food uses. Although member states are not required to implement these arrangements in full in the first year of the scheme, the United Kingdom has done so. I know that a number of growers will be taking advantage of this opportunity.

Mr. Stevenson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps are being taken to implement the revised set-aside arrangements in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Curry: An explanatory booklet on the arable area payments scheme was published in early September and copies were placed in the House Library. The booklet contains detailed information about what growers must do if they wish to claim area payments in 1993 and about the related set-aside requirements, including the management conditions and the arrangements under which crops can be grown on set-aside land for non-food use. Claim forms will be available next year.

Dietary Supplements

19. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made to date on the preparation of the draft directive on dietary supplements.

Mr. Soames: We are still awaiting proposals from the Commission.

Marketing Boards

20. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he intends to introduce his proposed legislation to reform marketing boards.

Mr. Gummer: We intend to introduce legislation to promote improvements in agricultural marketing when the parliamentary timetable permits.

Diversification

21. Mr. Clapham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what specific measures he has undertaken to assist Britain's farmers to diversify.

27. Mr. Lidington: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps are being taken by his Department to encourage farmers to diversify their businesses.

Mr. Curry: Since the farm diversification grant scheme was introduced in 1988, farmers in England have received free advice and £7·6 million in grants to help them to diversify. Over 40 per cent. of farmers are now diversified. We are backing this up with a number of regional seminars to encourage planning authorities to follow through the revised planning guidance issued earlier this year by the Department of the Environment.

Ewe Premium

22. Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the decision to investigate farm partnerships after the special ewe premium was due for payment.

Mr. Curry: Before making payments under the 1992 sheep annual premium scheme we are required by European Community regulations to examine claims from partnerships to establish that they satisfy the headage payment limit rules. This work is being done as quickly as possible.

Footpaths

23. Ms. Quin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he next plans to meet members of the Ramblers Association to discuss footpaths over agricultural land.

Mr. Gummer: I have no such plans at present, but I am always ready to meet the Ramblers Association to discuss matters of mutual interest.

Food Manufacturing

24. Mr. Arness: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what support his Department is giving to food manufacturing companies.

Mr. Gummer: We provide support for the food industry through financial assistance and by promoting its interests at home and abroad.

Sea Bass

25. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress he has made with his studies into the stocks of sea bass.

Mr. Curry: Studies are well in hand to ensure a proper assessment of the effects of the new management measures introduced in 1990.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

26. Mr. Eric Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food by what date he expects bovine spongiform encephalopathy to be eradicated from cattle.

Mr. Soames: I am confident that the measures taken by the Government should be sufficient to bring about the disappearance of BSE. There are already encouraging signs to support this view, but it is impossible to predict how long this process will take.

Farm Incomes

28. Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on farm incomes.

Mr. Curry: Forecasts of 1992 income will be published in the new year, together with revised estimates for 1993.

Plant Health and Pesticides HQ

29. Mr. Bayley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent correspondence his Ministry has had with York city council, and property developers in York about the site for his Department's new plant health and pesticides headquarters.

Mr. Gummer: My Department received last week, and has already replied to, a general inquiry on this matter from York council development services. There has been no other recent correspondence between my Department and interested parties in York.

Wildlife Conservation

30. Mr. Cann: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the effects of the set-aside regulations on the conservation of wildlife, both flora and fauna.

Mr. Curry: We are currently funding a range of studies on the agronomic and environmental effects of short and longer-term set-aside, including changes in the botanical composition of set-aside land, the effects on wildlife habitats and the potential for conserving and restoring such habitats on set-aside land. This involves assessing a number of complex factors over time and final results are not yet available.

Imported Wild Birds

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information is available on mortalities in imported wild birds.

Mr. Gummer: The Department's latest report on mortalities in imported captive birds, relating to imports in 1991, is now available and copies are being placed in the Library of the House. The figures show a fall in the number of birds imported from 176,000 in 1990 to 129,000 in 1991, but the average mortality rate in transport and post-import quarantine rose from 12·3 to 14·8 per cent. Although variation in mortality rates is to be expected, this increase is unacceptable and urgent improvements are clearly needed.

There is a clear correlation between mortality and the size of individual consignments. We are therefore pursuing vigorously proposals for limiting the size of consignments with the International Air Transport Association, whose live animal regulations are to become mandatory under Community law. We are also opening consultations with interested organisations on the introduction of consignment limits in the United Kingdom. From this month new checks are being made on all commercial imports of birds into Great Britain. We are pressing the European Commission to introduce proposals for further specific measures for wild birds under the directive on protection of animals during transport. The United Kingdom presidency is also giving high priority to discussions in the Environment Council on a proposed new Community regulation on the wildlife trade which would provide for specific controls on species are particularly vulnerable to transport.

The Department will be discussing with interested parties a programme to recognise the competence of quarantine operators. In addition, further training courses will be held for veterinarians supervising quarantine premises.

The Government fully appreciate the concern about this issue and is determined that any trade in wild birds is conducted in humane conditions and in accordance with strict conservation safeguards.

Sheep and Goats

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the random slaughterhouse survey of blood samples from sheep and goats carried out under directive 91/68/EC was concluded; if he will publish the findings of the survey; if any samples taken as part of the survey under directive 91/68/EC were screened for maedi visna; and if he will publish the results.

Mr. Soames: The slaughterhouse survey for brucella melitensis and contagious agalactia in sheep and goats and for brucella ovis in sheep was concluded in June 1992. None of the diseases was confirmed. A total of 3,234 of the samples taken were screened for maedi visna, and these results will be made available to the sheep and goat health scheme advisory group.

Equines

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action is being taken by his Department to check values of equines being submitted to his Department for export; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The Department ensures that the valuations are determined by qualified valuers or the appropriate judges of breed societies.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Stevenson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he intends to take to implement fully the EC directive on the welfare of animals in transit.

Mr. Soames: Proposals were issued for public consultation on 15 October 1992.

EMPLOYMENT

Health and Safety

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when she expects to lay the regulations relating to the EC directive on health and safety in the workplace relating to (a) health and safety (general provisions), (b) provision and use of work equipment, (c) manual handling operators, (d) workplace (health, safety and welfare), (e) personal protective equipment at work and (f) health and safety (display screen equipment).

Mr. McLoughlin: The Management of Health and Safety at Work Regulations—previously referred to as the Health and Safety (General Provisions) Regulations—were laid before Parliament on 8 September 1992. The other regulations relating to the EC directive on health and safety in the workplace are expected to be laid before Parliament by early next month.

European Community Funds

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much financial assistance has been given to (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow, (b) Glasgow and (c) Strathclyde by way of each of the four objectives of the European Community's social fund in each of the past three years; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is not available in the form sought, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Training

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what responses she has received to the proposals in the White Paper "People, Jobs and Opportunity", in respect of (a) giving employees information about company training policy and (b) making training contracts more easily enforceable; and what further action she intends to take.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Department has received some 75 responses from a range of organisations and individuals, including a number of firms. I am most grateful to all those who commented.

Many respondents saw the first proposition as an important adjunct to the "Investors in People" standard. They believed that employers would welcome guidance on effective policies for developing and training their employees, and communicating these policies throughout the work force. However, many replies pointed out that a major strength of the "Investors in People" standard is that it is voluntary, driven by business needs and by real commitment from top managers. It is also flexible enough to be relevant to individual circumstances. Accordingly, the Department plans to involve employers in drawing up detailed guidance on creating and communicating effective training policies. We do not propose to introduce legislation, as a clear majority of respondents opposed this.

The great majority of respondents did not support the idea of changing the law on the enforceability of training contracts. Most considered there was not a widespread problem and, even among respondents from the main sector where problems had been reported, there was no general agreement that legislation was required. Given the prevailing view, we propose not to take further action on this proposition.

EDUCATION

Special Needs

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many children in Essex have had statements of special educational needs; and if he will make a statement on the situation in Essex.

Mr. Forth: In January 1992, Essex local education authority was responsible for 4,923 children with statements of special educational needs—around 2·3 per cent. of the county's school population.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many children in special needs schools in Essex have not had statements.

Mr. Forth: In January 1992, there were 2,606 pupils registered at special schools in Essex local education authority. Approximately 7 per cent. of these pupils did not have statements of special educational needs, most of whom were undergoing formal assessment prior to a statement being issued.

Research

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make it his policy to publish all research sponsored by his Department.

Mr. Forman: No; most research reports are published, but the Department needs to consider each case on its merits and no blanket undertaking to publish can be given.

Student Grants

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list for each education authority the number and proportion of mandatory student grants which had not been paid at 31 October.

Mr. Forman: This information is not collected centrally. I am, however, most concerned by any reports of delays in making payments, and my officials will investigate vigorously any complaints which are received.

Four-year-olds

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list in rank order the proportion of four-year-olds in each local education authority who start school at the beginning of the academic year.

Mr. Forth: Information is not available in the form requested, but details of pupils aged four admitted to infant classes between September and December 1990 are given in statistical bulletin 5/92 which is available in the Library.

LINC Projects

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will publish the discussion papers prepared for the development of the LINC projects, 1989-92, which received a grant from his Department.

Mr. Forth: Proposals for the development of the language in the curriculum—LINC—project were set out under category XXIX in the education support grant circular sent to all local education authorities in England in July 1988, a copy of which is available in the Library. This followed publication of the Kingman report in March 1988 which recommended that an in-service training scheme be undertaken to increase teachers' knowledge about language.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will state the number of pupils excluded from each grant-maintained school for the school years 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Forth: Information on permanent exclusions from LEA and grant-maintained schools over a two-year period starting with the summer term 1990 has been collected under the national exclusions reporting system—NERS. The purpose of NERS is to provide a basis on which to review the working of the existing statutory procedures on exclusions. The information received is currently being analysed. NERS returns were made on a confidential basis and it would not be appropriate for me to disclose information on individual schools without the agreement of their governing bodies.

Open University

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what advice he has received from the Open university's visiting committee concerning the university's grant needs for 1993.

Mr. Forman: The visiting committee's advice is contained in a report which has been placed in the Library. A copy of the report has been passed to the Higher Education Funding Council for England, which will be responsible for determining the Open university's grants from 1 April 1993.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will place in the Library the latest report of the visiting committee for the Open university.

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will publish the final report of the Open university's visiting committee.

Mr. Forman: A copy has been placed in the Library.

City Technology Colleges

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will update his answer of 15 July, Official Report, columns 722-23, on principals of CTCs; and if he will list the colleges which have changed principals and the reasons for the departure of the original principals.

Mr. Forth: The names and dates of appointment of the current principal, or equivalent, of each CTC are as follows:

College	Title	Name	Date of appointment
Kingshurst	Principal	Valerie Bragg	January 1988
Macmillan	Principal	John Paddick	January 1989
Djanogly	Principal	Matt Andrews	September 1988
Dixon's	Principal	John Lewis	September 1989
Leigh	Principal	Virginia Waterhouse	January 1990
Emmanuel	Principal	Bill Smith	September 1992
Harris	Principal	Lyndon Jones	January 1990
Bacon's	Principal	Peter Jenkins	September 1990
Britschool	Principal	Anne Rumney	January 1990
Brooke	Principal	Gareth Newman	September 1990
Haberdashers'	Director	Roy Baldock	November 1990
Thomas Telford	Headmaster	Kevin Satchwell	January 1991
ADT	Chief Executive	Richard Painter	October 1990
Landau Forte	Principal	Peter Shackleton	September 1990

The only new appointment is that of the principal at Emmanuel college. The appointment or departure of a principal is a matter for the college itself.

Pupil-Teacher Ratios

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the pupil-teacher ratios for each local education authority in England for (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools, in the years 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Forth: Pupil-teacher ratios for maintained primary and secondary schools in each local education authority in England in January 1991 are published in statistical bulletin 2/92 which is available in the Library. Information for January 1992 is not yet available.

HEALTH

Ozone

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what account she has taken of the implications for health care of continuation of ozone depletion (a) at present rates for 20 years and (b) thereafter at an exponential rate.

Mr. Sackville: The possibility of long-term depletion of the ozone layer is of serious concern and Government policy remains the earliest possible phasing out of the production of ozone-depleting chemicals. The achievement of this will mean that depletion does not continue at present rates for 20 years.

Exposure to ultraviolet radiation—UV—is an important factor in the number of cases of skin cancer which develop and levels of UV at ground level are influenced by changes of levels of ozone in the stratosphere. However, these are only one factor influencing the numbers of skin cancers. Seasonal variations in solar UV levels and short term variations due to cloud cover and local weather conditions are far in excess of any variations anticipated as a result of ozone depletion. The main risk factor which is believed to account for the increase seen in the incidence of skin cancer is the increased extent to which people expose themselves to the sun. The programme of work following the publication of "Health of the Nation" in July includes work to halt the increase in skin cancers.

Hydrochlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the effect on human health of continuing production of HCFCs; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: I am advised that while HCFCs do have some ozone-depleting potential, they cause less damage than CFCs even in the short term. Further, HCFCs are, of course, needed to ensure that they are only used where they are vital to replace CFCs. The European Community will therefore be seeking to bring HCFCs under strict control in this month's review of the Montreal protocol.

With regard to the health effects of ozone depletion, I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave him on 19 October 1992 and 30 October 1992 at columns 79-80 and 939 respectively.

Listeria

Mr. Sykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she is taking to prevent imports of food products contaminated with listeria.

Mr. Sackville: The Food Safety Act 1990 and its subordinate legislation provide a statutory framework to protect the public from food which fails to meet food safety requirements, whatever its origin. We are not aware of any evidence of a problem with listeria contaminated food imports requiring special steps.

Broomfield Hospital

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the closure of a ward at Broomfield hospital; and what action can be taken to reopen the ward.

Mr. Sackville: Broomfield hospital is one of six hospitals which comprise the Mid Essex hospital services NHS trust. Through much greater efficiency, the trust exceeded its contract performance by more than 1,000 cases during the first six months of the current year. As a result ward B8, a general surgical ward, has been closed temporarily as it is not needed to maintain contracted levels of patient treatment.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will provide details of the reason for the delay in the joint trust application by Walsgrave and Coventry and Warwickshire hospitals; and what assessment he has made of the need to change the legal position in this regard.

Dr. Mawhinney: The decision on Walsgrave and Coventry and Warwickshire's application has been deferred along with two other applications because of the need for the Walsgrave national health service trust to undertake further internal consultation with its staff. Consideration is currenty being given to an amendment to the National Health Service Trusts (Consultation on Dissolution) Regulations 1991.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Battle) on 18 May, Official Report, column 63, if she will analyse the figures stated for expenditure on establishing NHS trusts into the different categories of expenditure linked in her answer.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave him on 26 October 1992 at columns 478-80 and on 3 November 1992 at column 180.

Waterlogged Soils (Infant Mortality)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research her Department has available on links between waterlogged soils and variations in the infant mortality rate; if she will commission further studies into the theory of such a link; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The Department has no plans to commission research in this area, although we are always willing to consider suitable proposals.

West Midlands Regional Health Authority

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will suspend the chairman of the West Midlands health authority with immediate effect.

Dr. Mawhinney: No. Sir James Ackers has welcomed Sir Roy Griffiths' assistance in looking at management within West Midlands and is working closely with him to ensure arrangements are in place for the most effective management of the health services for the people of the west midlands.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the audits, reports and investigations commissioned by her Department concerning the West Midlands regional health authority or any of its component districts in the past two years; and if she will itemise (a) those whose final report has been received with dates, (b) those whose draft report has been received with dates and (c) those which have not yet reported.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department frequently receives a wide range of reports on health and management matters from West Midlands regional health authority, districts and family health services authorities.

Child Care

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her policy on the application of the purchaser/provider split to local authority child care provision.

Mr. Yeo: It is for local authorities to determine the appropriate structure for the delivery of children's services having regard to their child protection duties and the general child care requirements imposed upon them by the Children Act 1989 and associated regulations and guidance.

Royal Northern Hospital

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received on the future of the Royal Northern hospital site in Islington; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: None. The North East Thames regional health authority is currently in discussion with the Bloomsbury and Islington district health authority regarding the future ownership and use of the Royal Northern site. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Chessels, the regional chairman, for further information.

Medical Audit Commission

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will state (a) the annual budget of the Medical Audit Commission for 1991-92 and 1992-93 and (b) the main categories of its expenditure.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 29 October 1992]: The medical audit initiative, which was introduced and funded by the Government as part of the national health service reforms, is funded by the NHS Management Executive, health care directorate.

Medical audit has received a substantial investment, which remains necessary to accomplish the major transformation in professional attitudes and working practices which it entails. The sums allocated in the years in question were:

(i) £60 million in 1991-92, and

(ii) £42 million in 1992-93.

A capital allocation was made for two years, ending in 1991-92 for comupters and software. Family health service audit funding has been built into normal allocations from 1992-93. The same will happen to HCHS funding when it has become firmly established, except for about £10 million retained centrally to fund work by the medical royal colleges and others to establish standards of best practice.

Most of the money is spent on employing medical audit support staff, a new profession within the NHS which is already demonstrating the potential to make a major contribution to improving patient care. Funds also pay for computers and doctors' time spent organising audit and continuing medical education. The above sums do not include the cost of doctors' time—about a half day a month—spent attending audit meetings.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

National Lottery

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he consulted with the charities in commissioning the consultants GAH Group to advise on aspects of a national lottery on charitable donations; when he proposes to meet them to discuss the advice; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The Government do not as a rule consult third parties before commissioning research advice. I plan to meet representatives from the National Council for Voluntary Organisations next week for general discussions on the national lottery; and we are continuing consultations with other organisations in the charity and voluntary sector.

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he consulted with the football pools companies, in commissioning the consultants GAH Group to advise on aspects of a national lottery on the football pools industry; when he proposes to meet them to discuss the advice; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The Government do not as a rule consult third parties before commissioning research advice. I plan to meet soon representatives from the pools industry for general discussions on the national lottery.

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to his answer of 30 October, Official Report, column 914, where the contract for the research work awarded to GAH Group was advertised; when it was advertised; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: Government competitive tendering procedures do not invariably require the advertising of invitations to tender. Selected firms were invited to tender for the contract. The invitation was issued on 24 July 1992, and the contract was let on 10 August.

Pitchford Hall

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will review the current position in relation to Pitchford hall.

Mr. Key: I do not propose to do so.

SCOTLAND

Murderers

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many individuals convicted for murder and sentenced to life imprisonment have been released and thereafter convicted for a further murder since 1985.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 3 November 1992]: A total of four individuals, having been convicted of murder and subsequently released from life imprisonment, have thereafter been convicted of a further murder since 1985.

Appointments

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all the names of public appointments that he has made, giving the period for which the appointment was made, relevant qualifications of the appointees and what remuneration each currently receives.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 2 November 1992]: As the information sought is extensive, I shall provide the hon. Member with a list of those I have appointed since becoming Secretary of State for Scotland and who currently hold their appointments. I am also arranging for copies of the list to be placed in the Library of the House. It shows the body on which they serve, the length of the appointment and, where appropriate, the remuneration. Information on relevant qualifications held, and on appointments, other than those of chairmen and deputy chairmen, is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Home and Health Department

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment has been made of the extent to which the grants awarded by the Home and Health Department are giving value for money; and if projects are being vetted adequately.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 2 November 1992]: Grants are awarded by the Scottish Office Home and Health Department for many projects falling under that Department's areas of responsibility. In each case, strict guidelines and conditions are laid out relating to the use of grant aid and must be accepted in writing by prospective recipients prior to any funds being advanced. Thereafter, projects are monitored and evaluated on a regular basis throughout the life of the grant aid and, where appropriate, the annual accounts of the recipient bodies are required to be submitted to the Department. Increasingly, grant recipients are being required to produce business plans and are being set performance targets. All these measures serve to assist value-for-money examination and I am content that the projects are being vetted adequately.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Agencies

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list by grade the numbers of staff and their cost for 1991-92 and the estimated figures for 1992-93 for each executive agency for which he is responsible.

Sir John Cope: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executives of the Royal Mint, Central Statistical Office, and Valuation Office agencies. A copy of the question has been passed to each and they have been asked to reply direct to the hon. Member.

Letter from A. D. Garrett to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 2 November 1992:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to respond to your above Written Question concerning the numbers of staff and their cost for 1991-92 and estimates for 1992-93.

The information you require is set out on the attached sheet.

Letter from W. McLennan to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 4 November 1992.

As Chief Executive of the Central Statistical Office I have been asked to respond to your Parliamentary Question of 28 October to the Chancellor of the Exchequer about staff numbers and costs.

The attached gives numbers of staff for the CSO by grade and their salary costs for 1991-92, and estimates for 1992-93 as requested.

I also enclose a summary of the CSO financial account for 1991-92, and our provision for 1992-93, which show a breakdown of running and capital costs.

Letter from R. R. B. Shutler to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 2 November 1992:

In your question to the Chancellor ref: 203 you ask for a list by grade of the number of staff within the Agency and their cost for 1991-92 and the estimated 1992-93 details.

The information you have requested is detailed on the attached table.

Inland Revenue (Headquarters)

Mr. Soley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the revised cost estimates of the new Nottingham headquarters building for the Inland Revenue; and what are the expected annual savings to the Treasury.

Mr. Dorrell: The construction work for the project for a new Inland Revenue building in Nottingham is currently at the tendering stage. Consequently the cost estimates for the various work packages remain, at present, commercial-in-confidence. It is fully expected that the outturn will be within the agreed budget for the project.

The currently estimated annual net accommodation and pay savings are around £12 million from 1996-97 following completion of the project.

Housing Loans

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of mortgage interest relief at source payments are currently made to households earning (a) over £50,000 per annum, (b) over £35,000 per annum, *(c)*under £20,000 per annum, (d) under £10,000 per annum and (e) under £5,000 per annum.

Mr. Dorrell: Provisional estimates for 1992-93 based on projected information from the 1990 family expenditure survey and the 1989-90 survey of personal incomes are in the table.

Inheritance Tax Exemptions

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will now make it his policy to allow public access to information on successful applications for conditional inheritance tax exemption where the conditions referred to within the application refer to public access to land.

Mr. Dorrell: Reasonable public access is required to all scenic land which is conditionally exempt from inheritance tax. The heritage advisory agencies, including the Countryside Council for Wales, can supply information about public access to heritage land including conditionally exempt land. To protect taxpayers' confidentiality, the conditionally exempt land cannot be separately distinguished.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to overturn conditional exemptions from inheritance tax payments where it has been proved that the conditions set out concerning public access have not been fulfilled.

Mr. Dorrell: The undertakings providing for public access to land and buildings which have been conditionally exempted from inheritance tax are monitored by the relevant heritage advisory agencies. Where breaches cannot be resolved in discussion between the agencies and landowners, the agencies will notify the Inland Revenue. To date, there has been no occasion on which they have had to do this. Undertakings providing for public access to conditionally exempt chattels are monitored directly by the Inland Revenue.

If an owner refuses to observe any undertakings given in respect of conditional exemption, inheritance tax is charged on the current value of the property. This provides a powerful incentive for the owner to honour the terms of the undertakings.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to ensure that all public rights of way granted as part of conditional exemptions from inheritance tax appear on subsequent editions of ordnance survey maps.

Mr. Dorrell: Definitive public rights of way which result from the conditional exemption from inheritance tax of scenic land will appear on subsequent Ordnance Survey maps. Decisions on what other paths or forms of public access are shown on the maps are a matter for the chief executive of Ordnance Survey.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to apply the definition of public access outlined in the National Parks and Access to the Countryside Act 1949 when evaluating applications for inheritance tax exemptions under the Inheritance Tax Act 1984.

Mr. Dorrell: No. The heritage advisory agencies advise the Inland Revenue as to what constitutes reasonable public access to land for which conditional exemption from inheritance tax is claimed. The access arrangements for each case are considered individually on the basis of its own facts. Adopting the approach in the 1949 Act would allow the landowner to deny public access in some circumstances where it is currently sought in return for the conditional inheritance tax exemption.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will state for each year since 1986, in Wales, (a) the number of successful applications for conditional exemption from inheritance tax, (b) the number of such applications related to land and (c) the minimum total estimated value of such land.

Mr. Dorrell: The number of designations for conditional exemption from inheritance tax of all types of heritage property in Wales could only be provided at disproportionate cost. Since 1976 there have been five successful applications for conditional exemption of heritage land in Wales. Where conditional exemption from inheritance tax is granted it is not necessary to establish the value of the land.

Energy Review

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what contribution his Department will be making to the energy review; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: My Department will be playing a full part in the review.

Drug Seizures

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list by type, number of seizures and weight all drug seizures made by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise at Heathrow airport during each of the past 12 quarters.

Sir John Cope: The number of drug seizures by type and weight made at Heathrow Airport in each of the past 12 quarters is as shown in the table.

Footpaths and Bridleways

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many new (a) footpaths and (b) bridleways in Wales have been created as a direct result of granted exemptions on inheritance tax, since the Inheritance Tax Act 1984, in each year since 1984; and if he will list the location of the footpaths and bridleways in each instance.

Mr. Dorrell: The public have access to approximately 20 miles of footpaths and bridleways over scenic land in Wales which is conditionally exempt from inheritance tax. A breakdown of this figure by year of designation cannot be provided due to the taxpayer confidentiality rules.

Public access was already allowed to some of these paths and bridleways before the exemption was given, but the conditions attached to the exemption will have put the access on a more secure basis.

The Countryside Council for Wales is able to supply information about access to heritage land, including conditionally exempt land, although the land will not be identified as conditionally exempt.

VAT Penalties

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to announce the findings of his review into value added tax penalties on companies.

Sir John Cope: The reviews of misdeclaration penalty and default surcharge are due to report in time for decisions to be taken as part of the 1993 Budget strategy.

Taxpayers (Interviews)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether Inland Revenue staff are permitted to make tape recordings of interviews with taxpayers without the knowledge or consent of the taxpayer; and if he will include provisions in the taxpayers charter and in departmental guidance manuals so as to preclude such recordings being made.

Mr. Dorrell: Existing guidance for inspectors of taxes tells them that they should not make a tape recording of an interview.

Self-employment (Tax)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made on the simplification of tax for the self-employed.

Mr. Dorrell: A further consultative paper entitled "A Simpler System for Assessing Personal Tax" has been published by the Inland Revenue. This takes forward the discussions on simplification of the personal tax system. Copies of the paper have been placed in the Library of the House.

Maastricht Treaty

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures he intends to introduce to implement paragraph 2 of proposed article 130R of the treaty of Rome, included in the Maastricht treaty on European union.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 2 November 1992]: I have been asked to reply.

It falls to the European Commission to make proposals for measures to implement obligations under the treaty of Rome. The Government fully endorse the considerations set out in the second paragraph of article 130R as it will be amended by the Maastricht treaty. During the United Kingdom's presidency of the Environment Council, we have been laying particular emphasis on the need to integrate environmental protection requirements into other policy areas.

Smuggling

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures are being taken to counter the extra opportunities for smugglers as a result of EC measures which will make movement through EC countries easier.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 3 November 1992]: It is a central objective of all changes to customs controls for the single market, that effectiveness against smuggling should be maintained. Following a thorough review of their anti-smuggling controls, customs have been creating new flexible anti-smuggling teams and important results have come from the risk-based targeting methods which they employ.

Customs are working with other enforcement agencies, trade associations and individual transport companies to sign memoranda of understanding under which they assist customs to detect drug smugglers who are using their facilities. Customs are also developing closer co-operation with our Community partners. They have signed maritime and aerial surveillance memoranda of understanding with France and Spain and are in the process of concluding one with the Netherlands. The fight against smugglers will be further assisted in the single market by the customs information system. This network, which I launched in October allows information to be exchanged electronically between all 12 member states.

VAT

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what limit the recent agreements in the EC on the harmonisation of rates of VAT place on the amount by which the VAT starting threshold can be raised.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 4 November 1992]: The recent agreements in the EC will not affect the level of the VAT registration threshold which is governed by the EC Sixth VAT Directive and current United Kingdom legislation.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will consider raising the VAT threshold to £50,000 and beyond.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 4 November 1992]: The EC Sixth VAT Directive which the then United Kingdom Government agreed in 1977 constrains increases in the VAT registration threshold to what is needed to maintain its value in real terms.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consideration he is currently giving to problems relating to the current VAT penalty regime.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 4 November 1992]: The second phase of the review of the serious misdeclaration penalty regime was announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor in his Budget statement in March 1992. Wide ranging consultations have since taken place with the relevant trade and professional bodies. In addition, Customs have issued a consultative paper on default surcharge inviting comment on how the system might be made both more effective and acceptable.

ENVIRONMENT

Ozone-destroying Substances

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what criteria are used by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution when assessing the best available technology not entailing excessive cost for the prevention of the release of ozone-destroying substances.

Mr. Maclean: HMIP is responsible for authorising releases from those processes prescribed under part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

The Act requires an operator of a prescribed process to either prevent releases of prescribed substances or where not practicable, to minimise releases and to render them harmless. In implementing this requirement, a balance must be made between the costs of these techniques against the potential environmental harm, such as possible damage to the ozone layer, resulting from proposed releases. This is the basis of the requirement to use the best available techniques not entailing excessive cost—BATNEEC.

In granting authorisation HM inspectorate of pollution will have regard to the advice provided in the relevant chief inspector's guidance note including the need to use BATNEEC.

One of the most significant industry sectors as far as potential releases of compounds posing a threat to stratospheric ozone levels, most notably some volatile organic compounds, is that covering the production and storage of chemicals.

The first nine guidance notes covering this sector will be published shortly. They will provide detailed guidance on the release of VOCs and in particular will place extremely tight release limits on those substances, covered by the Montreal Protocol which have been identified as posing a threat to ozone levels. Guidance is also given on preventing fugitive releases from all parts of such processes.

On publication, copies of all chief inspector's guidance notes are placed in the House Library.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which companies have made applications to release ozone-destroying substances under part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990; and how many have been turned down.

Mr. Maclean: The information can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made by his Department in utilising the powers under the Environmental Protection Act 1990 to outlaw the release of ozone-destroying chemicals.

Mr. Maclean: The Environmental Protection (Prescribed Processes and Substances) Regulations 1991 set out the industrial processes and the main substances to be controlled under part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

The regulations are enforced by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and local authorities who are required to ensure industry uses best available techniques not entailing excessive cost to prevent, or minimise and render harmless the release of prescribed substances. The substances prescribed for release into the air include oxides of nitrogen, organic compounds and halogens and their compounds, which are ozonede-depleters.

To date HMIP has received just over 500 applications and local authorities some 6,300 in England and Wales. Details of all these applications and authorisations issued as a result are not held centrally.

Waste Incineration

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many shipments of clinical waste have been imported for incineration within the United Kingdom in each of the past five years; and if he will specify the tonnage imported in each instance.

Mr. Maclean: My Department has no record of clinical waste being imported before 1 January 1992. Since then, 463 tonnes in 71 separate shipments have been notified to the Department under the Transfrontier Shipment of Hazardous Wastes Regulations 1988 as having been imported for incineration in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to prohibit the incineration of wastes containing heavy metals, organochlorines and other organic halogens.

Mr. Maclean: Waste incineration processes are tightly controlled under part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. Since 30 September 1992, operators of all existing waste incinerators have had to apply under the Act to either Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution or their local authority, depending on the size of the plant or the sort of waste being incinerated, to obtain authorisation to undertake the process. Any authorisations given will include conditions covering such matters as combustion conditions and release limits to ensure the protection of public health and the environment. These conditions must be designed so as to ensure the use of the best available techniques not entailing excessive cost—BATNEEC—to prevent or minimise releases of prescribed substances from the plant, and to render all unpreventable releases harmless. I, therefore, see no grounds for a general prohibition on the incineration of wastes containing heavy metals, organochlorines and other organic halogens.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to undertake a full assessment of problematic waste streams going into incineration.

Mr. Maclean: There is already a considerable amount of research into the incineration of various types of waste. The objective is to determine the conditions required to minimise the release of pollutants, and to render harmless any unpreventable releases.

Chlorine (Stratosphere)

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what level of chlorine loading in the stratosphere is regarded as the maximum that the United Kingdom will accept as a condition for signing a revised Montreal protocol in Copenhagen;

(2) what are the maximum periods of stratospheric chlorine loading (a) above 2ppbv and (b) above 3ppbv that the United Kingdom is prepared to accept as a condition for signing the revised Montreal protocol in Copenhagen.

Mr. Maclean: We will be pressing for the Montreal protocol's controls to be tightened to require the earliest possible phase out of ozone-depleting substances, in order to achieve the lowest possible level of chlorine loading in the stratosphere.

Waste Streams

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to set goals and time scales for the reduction of priority waste streams.

Mr. Maclean: The United Kingdom is participating in several European Community "priority waste streams" groups comprising representatives from business, national and local government, consumer and environmental organisation. The groups aim to agree common targets and objectives within the Community for the treatment and handling of a number of difficult waste streams, including used tyres, chlorinated solvents, scrap vehicles, clinical waste and demolition material. The United Kingdom is leading on clinical waste, and has also initiated a research project on the recycling of demolition wastes.

Members' Correspondence

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidelines are issued to his Department for the processing of correspondence from hon. Members; and what is the average delay between receipt of correspondence from, and the date of response to, an hon. Member.

Mr. Howard: Guidelines to officials in my Department stress that all ministerial correspondence should be dealt with as soon as possible, and every attempt is made to achieve my Department' objective of replying to hon. Members' letters within three weeks of receipt.

It is not possible to identify from my Department's records, an arithemetical average length of time taken to reply to hon. Members.' letters. However my Department's objective of a reply within three weeks of receipt, was achieved for 60 per cent. of letters from hon. Members' received in the first six months of this year. Seventy-seven per cent. were replied to within four weeks, and 90 per centre within six weeks.

March Consultancy Group

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what policy changes he will implement as a result of research undertaken for the Department by March Consulting Group.

Mr. Maclean: My Department has commissioned four studies from the March Consulting Group. Three of these are for Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and concern pollution control for petrochemical and petroleum processes, and for processes involving sulphonation. The group is required to identify both the various processes being undertaken and the best available techniques being used worldwide to control polluting releases. The results of these studies will be used by the inspectorate in the chief inspector's guidance notes covering those processes. The fourth is on the use of chlorofluorocarbons in the United Kingdom refrigeration and air conditioning industries. The Government are committed to the earliest possible phase out of CFCs, and are now considering what further action might be taken in the light of March Consulting Group's report, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Hydrochlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what essential uses of hydrochlorofluorocarbons his Department has identified in the refrigeration and air conditioning sector.

Mr. Maclean: HCFCs are needed in the short to medium term in this sector to ensure the swiftest possible move away from the use of CFCs.

Clinical Waste

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidelines are currently provided by his Department to companies involved in the incineration of clinical waste concerning the safe deposit of toxic ash following the burning of such waste.

Mr. Maclean: My Department is satisfied that ash from incinerators burning clinical waste can be safely deposited at landfill sites licensed and designed to accept such waste without risk to public health or the environment. Waste disposal authorities formulate licence conditions and monitor sites to ensure that no hazard arises.

My Department has published definitive guidance on the landfilling of waste in waste management paper No. 26 and on disposal licensing in waste management paper No. 4. Copies of both these documents have been placed in the Library of the House. Guidance will shortly be issued on the management of clinical waste in the revised version of waste management paper No. 25.

Rural Development Commission

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much grant in aid the Rural Development Commission received in (a) 1979 and (b) 1992.

Mr. Maclean: In 1979-80 the development commission was issued a grant of £16·126 million to meet expenditure of £18·257 million. For 1992-93 grant in aid of £11·969 million was approved by Parliament, prior to the 1992 summer recess, for the Rural Development Commission enabling it to spend up to £38·939 million. In both years, the balance between grant in aid and gross expenditure is accounted for by receipts.

Biodiversity Agreements

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to encourage the involvement of non-governmental organisations in the drafting and negotiation of future treaties and agreements related to biodiversity.

Mr. Maclean: Non-governmental organisations were involved throughout the preparations leading up to the agreement of the convention on biological diversity, in particular through the Advisory Group on Biological Diversity.

We will continue to involve non governmental organisations in taking forward this convention and in other biodiversity-related work.

Hazardous Waste (Imports)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the level of imports of hazardous waste in (a) 1981 and (b) 1988.

Mr. Maclean: There was no requirement for information on hazardous waste imports to be supplied to the Secretary of State until the Transfrontier Shipment of Hazardous Waste Regulations 1988 came into force on 1 October 1988. During the 1988-89 financial year, approximately 52,000 tonnes of hazardous waste were imported. This figure comprises estimates from 1 April to 30 September 1988, and collected data thereafter.

Water Pollution

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many incidents of water pollution on Britain's bathing beaches were reported in (a) 1980 and (b) 1992.

Mr. Maclean: No data are held centrally for 1980. The results for the 1992 bathing water survey are not yet available. In 1991, 76 per cent. of the United Kingdom's 453 identified bathing waters met the mandatory coliform bacteria standards of the EC bathing water directive.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people in Britain are supplied with water that does not reach the EC regulated standard.

Mr. Maclean: Information on drinking water quality in England and Wales is contained in "Drinking Water 1991", the second annual report by the chief drinking water inspector, published in July 1992. Copies have been placed in the Library. It is planned to publish shortly a similar report on drinking water quality in Scotland.

Controlled Wastes

Mr. Chris Smith To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what action has been taken by his Department and other relevant authorities to clarify to users of ozone destroying substances the circumstances in which these chemicals are to be considered controlled wastes for the purposes of the Environmental Protection Act 1990;

(2) what guidance has been issued, and when further guidance will be available to users of ozone destroying substances that are considered controlled wastes, concerning their obligations under section 33 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990;

(3) which authorities are responsible for enforcing section 33 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 as it applies to ozone destroying substances that are considered controlled wastes; and what action they have so far taken to enforce section 33 so far as it applies to ozone destroying substances.

Mr. Maclean: Section 33(1)(c) of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, which came into force on 1 April this year, makes it an offence to treat, keep or dispose of controlled waste in a manner likely to cause pollution of the environment or harm to human health. Controlled waste is defined in section 75 of the Act. The Controlled Waste Regulations, which refine and extend the definitions of controlled waste, were also brought into force on 1 April. Guidance on those regulations was issued to local authorities, including waste regulation authorities, in a joint circular from the Scottish Office, the Welsh Office and my Department—DOE circular 14/92—published on 21 May 1992.

Section 34 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 imposes a duty of care on those holding controlled waste to take reasonable steps to prevent a breach of section 33. Guidance for waste holders on how to discharge this duty, including advice on how to decide whether a substance is controlled waste, was issued in a code of practice published jointly by the three Departments in December 1991. The definition of controlled waste and the provisions of sections 33 and 34 of the Act are not specific to particular substances or sectors of industry, nor is the advice on those sections.

It is intended that section 33 together with the waste management licensing system in the Act will be brought fully into force on 1 April 1993, and further advice on the operation of waste management licensing will be issued before then.

Waste regulation authorities, as the authorities who will have the duty of granting waste management licences, will be mainly responsible for the enforcement of section 33 of the Act, but there is no restriction on the right to instigate prosecutions for offences under section 33.

Bird Pests

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether the proposed general licences to kill or take certain birds will fully discharge United Kingdom obligations so far as they relate to his Department's responsibilities under the 1979 EC birds directive;

(2) if he has consulted the Joint Nature Conservation Committee on the proposed general licensing system to control the shooting of bird pest species under section 16(1) (c), (d) and (i) of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981; and whether the committee has approved the form and scope of the proposed licences;

(3) whether the constituent bodies of the Joint Nature Conservation Committee had submitted their opinions on the proposed general licensing system to control the shooting of bird pest species by the final date of submission; and what steps have been taken to obtain them;

(4) if he has consulted the Joint Nature Conservation Committee on the proposed general licensing system to control the shooting of bird pest species under section 16 (i), (j) and (k) of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981; and whether the committee has approved the form and scope of the proposed licences.

Mr. Maclean: We are satisfied that the proposed general licensing system for pest bird control will meet the requirement of the EC birds directive and provide a sensible basis for pest control in the United Kingdom.

Officials of the Joint Nature Conservation Committee have been fully involved with those from my Department in the development of the licensing system and have provided the scientific advice on which the licences will be based. In discharging the special function of the country councils to jointly advise on nature conservation matters affecting Great Britain as a whole, committee officials have liaised with their counterparts in the country councils. The councils received the public consultation paper, issued in July, setting out the Government's proposals. The Countryside Council for Wales and Scottish Natural Heritage have responded directly to the Department.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 22 October, Official Report, column 347, if he will set out a summary of the advice on radiological equivalence of radioactive wastes from the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee; and when he expects to reply to the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee report.

Mr. Maclean: The Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee's report offers advice on the technical basis of British Nuclear Fuels' proposals and their likely radiological and environmental impact for the United Kingdom. I expect to reply to the report after consulting colleagues.

Neighbour Noise

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will issue new guidelines on neighbour noise to local authorities.

Mr. Maclean: Part III of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 contains provisions for controlling statutory nuisances, including noise. In September, my Department and the Home Office issued joint guidance to local authorities and the police on the control of noise from parties.

Wildlife Habitats

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what new measures he is proposing to provide greater protection to sites of special scientific interest in order to prevent destruction of wildlife habitats.

Mr. Maclean: The additional safeguards for sites of special scientific interest announced by this Government in September 1991 came into effect on 2 January 1992. Guidance to local authorities and others on how our policies for the conservation of our natural heritage are to be reflected in land use planning, and development control, are to be set out in a planning policy guidance note, which will be published shortly.

Home Energy Efficiency Scheme

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, how many households in the network installer area including the Lancashire, West constituency qualify and have been improved under the home energy efficiency scheme since its inception in 1991.

Mr. Maclean: In order to be eligible for grant under the home energy efficiency scheme, an applicant or his or her spouse must be in receipt of one of five passportable benefits: housing benefit, income support, family credit, community charge benefit or disability working allowance. In addition, his or her property must meet certain criteria concerning existing levels of insulation and receipt of a grant for similar work under previous schemes. Data on numbers of households eligible in any particular area at a particular time are not available.

Within the network installer area that contains the hon. Member's constituency, 2,494 homes have benefited from home energy efficiency scheme grant since its inception in 1991.

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many households in the network installer area covering the Falkirk, East constituency have been improved under the home energy efficiency scheme since its inception in 1991.

Mr. Maclean: Within the network installer area that contains the hon. Member's constituency, 2,119 homes have benefited from HEES grant since 1 January 1991.

City Challenge

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what analysis was made of the benefits to local communities of the first round of city challenge pacemaker authorities before deciding to embark on a second round.

Mr. Robin Squire: The decision to go ahead with the second round of city challenge was announced in February 1992. The pacemaker authorities began implementing their action plans in April 1992. However, analysis of pacemaker bids helped to inform the decision to embark on a second round and on the bidding guidance for that round. The guidance stated that one of the main aims of city challenge was to support the development and implementation of locally devised and time limited plans for the regeneration of disadvantaged areas within our cities which will significantly benefit the residents of those areas.

Urban Development Corporations

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which urban development corporations have enterd into agreements with developers which require them to employ local labour.

Mr. Robin Squire: None. Although the use of local labour is encouraged, a contractual requirement specifying that local labour must be used would be in contravention of United Kingdom legislation, the treaty of Rome, and European Community works and supplies directives.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the occasions on which boards of urban development corporations have met in public.

Mr. Robin Squire: The boards of the urban development corporations do not meet in public.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each urban development corporation the total amount of Government finance they have received since their inception.

Mr. Robin Squire: The total amount of Government grant in aid the urban development corporations have received, up to 31 March 1992, is as follows.

	£ million
Birmingham Heartlands	Nil
Bristol	35·233
Black Country	141·643
Central Manchester	43·500
Leeds	39·038
London Docklands	1,347·500
Merseyside	291·386
Sheffield	49·725
Teesside	160·071
Trafford Park	91·581
Tyne and Wear	142·066

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to require the boards of urban development corporations to meet in public.

Mr. Robin Squire: We have no plans to require the boards of the urban development corporations to meet in public. UDCs have the discretion to admit the public to discussions on land use planning matters and most choose to do so.

London Forum

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his plans for the London forum.

Sir George Young: My hon. and learned Friend announced on 21 October that Sir Allen Sheppard had agreed to be the first chairman of the London forum, and that Sir Hugh Bidwell has agreed to be a deputy chairman. The Secretary of State and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for National Heritage have agreed in principle with Sir Hugh that the forum should merge with the London tourist board, of which Sir Hugh is the chairman. The merger will create a single powerful private sector body to promote London overseas, with the aim of maximising business investment in the capital and expanding London's role as a centre for tourism and culture.

The London forum will share an executive organisation with London First, a new private sector initiative of which Sir Allen is also the chairman. London First is a private and public sector partnership harnessing business skills to enhance London's attractions. It will improve the "product" which it will be the forum's job to promote internationally. A common supporting organisation under chief executive Stephen O'Brien will ensure close coordination of the efforts of the two bodies.

Sir Allen is now taking forward the development of a business plan for the forum, with a view to launching the new body around the turn of the year.

Environmental Information

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will establish an independent body to oversee the implementation of procedures under the EC directive on the freedom of access to information on the environment.

Mr. Maclean: No.

Council Tax

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will take steps to ensure that disabled persons living in band A properties will be entitled to a reduction in their council tax liability; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: The scheme of council tax reductions for people with disabilities will ensure that no one pays more council tax in respect of additional accommodation which they need because of a disability. If a dwelling is allocated to band A, any additional accommodation cannot have resulted in an increase in council tax liability, and no reduction is therefore appropriate.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much his Department spent in total on transitional relief and the community charge reduction scheme; and what was the original estimate of the amount required.

Mr. Robin Squire: My Department has so far paid out £1,950 million in transitional relief and community charge reduction scheme grant. Further grant payments totalling about £500 million will be paid this and next year. Early estimates put the cost of the schemes at about £2,830 million.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will publish a table showing for each collecting local authority in England the latest figures available of uncollected community charge and the percentage of the total community charge that this figure represents;

(2) if he will publish a table showing for each collecting local authority in England the amount of uncollected domestic rates in 1989-90 and the percentage of the total rate that this figure represented.

Mr. Robin Squire: My Department does not collect figures for the amounts of domestic rates and of community charges outstanding. Figures for community charge arrears outstanding at 31 March 1991 were published by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy in "Revenue Collection Statistics 1990-91 Actuals", a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. Figures for uncollected domestic rates are not available, although the chartered institute has published gross arrears of domestic and non-domestic rates at 31 March 1990 in "Rate Collection Statistics 1989-90 Actuals", a copy of which is also available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing for each collecting local authority in England how much was bid by that authority for Government funds to cover the set-up costs of the council tax and how much his Department gave to each authority in 1992-93.

Mr. Robin Squire: Authorities were not asked to bid for funds to cover the costs of implementing the council tax. Independent consultants, CSL Ltd., were employed to advise on these costs. They estimated that the revenue costs of implementing the council tax would be £114·6 million. The Government agreed to pay 75 per cent. of these costs by way of a special grant of which £56·74 million will be paid to authorities this year, and a further £29·23 million will be paid in 1993-94 on receipt of audited claims. The allocation to billing authorities of this grant is given in Special Grant Report (No. 4) approved by the House in June this year, a copy of which is in the House of Commons Library. The other 25 per cent. of costs will be met through revenue support grant.

In addition, supplementary credit approvals to the value of £41·2 million are available to authorities in respect of capital expenditure they incur on implementing the council tax.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what items of local authority expenditure were included in the Government's calculations of council tax set-up costs.

Mr. Robin Squire: This Department employed independent consultants CSL Ltd to advise on the total cost of preparing for the introduction of the council tax by April 1993. The costs, both revenue and capital, taken into account by the consultants covered staffing, accommodation, computer hardware, computer software, stationery, publicity and training.

Capital Receipts

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing for each housing authority in England the amount of unapplied capital receipts from (a) housing sales and (b) other capital sales.

Mr. Robin Squire: I have arranged for the available information to be placed in the Library of the House.

Separate figures for housing receipts and other capital receipts are not available.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing for each county council in England the total amount of unapplied capital receipts.

Mr. Robin Squire: The total usable receipts for each county council in England as at 31 March 1992 are shown in the table.

Montreal Protocol

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals Her Majesty's Government will make at the forthcoming preparatory meeting for the Montreal protocol.

Mr. Maclean: The Government, together with our EC partners, will be proposing that the phase-out dates for production and consumption of CFCs, halons, carbon tetrachloride and 1,1,1 trichloroethane be brought forward to 1 January 1996 with an interim cut of 50 per cent. for 1,1,1 trichloroethane and 85 per cent. for the other substances by 1 January 1994. In addition, we shall be pressing for tight controls on HCFCs to be introduced and a freeze on the production and consumption of methyl bromide at 1991 levels by 1995.

House Condition Survey

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 15 July to the hon. Member for Crosby (Sir M. Thornton), Official Report, column 833, if he will make a statement on the reasons for the time taken to prepare the report on the 1991 English house condition survey.

Sir George Young: The 1991 English house condition survey began in September last year and has involved three separate surveys—a physical inspection of 25,000 dwellings, interviews with households and a postal survey of local authorities and housing associations. Data collection for the last of these surveys will be completed this month. Results will be published just as soon as the analysis is completed.

Crown Immunity

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to issue a public consultation paper on the removal Crown exemption from planning legislation.

Sir George Young: My right hon. and learned Friend has today issued a public consultation paper on the removal of Crown immunity from planning law. My right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for Scotland and the Secretary of State for Wales also propose shortly to issue public consultation papers as regards Scotland and Wales.

The consultation paper proposes that all Crown bodies should be required to apply to the local planning authority for planning permission, listed building consent, conservation area consent, and hazardous substances consent, and to the Secretary of State for National Heritage for scheduled monument consent in the normal way.

There will be some exceptions to these requirements, principally where national or prison security is involved, and for trunk road proposals, which are already subject to statutory procedures equivalent to town and country planning procedures. In the case of national security, it is intended to make provision in the legislation for a certification system whereby the appropriate Minister or official would certify projects which would be exempt from the legislation on grounds of national security. A similar procedure will apply to prison security.

The Government consider that it would be inappropriate for the enforcement provisions of the planning legislation, particularly those which contain criminal sanctions or permit the local authority to enter land, to apply to the Crown. It is proposed that in lieu of the enforcement provisions and injunctive or criminal proceedings the "enforcing" authority would be able to apply to the High Court for a declaration of the rights of the parties. If the Crown is shown by a declaration to have acted in breach of planning control, it would, of its own accord, remedy the position.

One consequence of the proposals will be that Crown developers will be legally required to undertake environmental impact assessments of their proposals, as required by EC Directive 85/337, in the same way as other developers, replacing the non-statutory arrangements in DOE circular 15/88, Welsh Office 23/88.

The statutory regimes in part VIII of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 for outdoor advertisement control and tree protection will also apply to Crown land, subject to certain modifications and exceptions.

These proposals will be embodied in primary legislation when a suitable opportunity arises.

Supplementary Credit Approvals

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce the supplementary credit approvals for (a) improvement grants and (b) other purposes.

Mr. Howard: Provisional awards of supplementary credit approvals—SCAs—for mandatory house renovation grants will be notified to local authorities shortly. On the SCAs issued by my Department for other purposes, we have already announced to local authorities our intentions for 1992-93. The SCAs themselves will be issued by 30 September 1993.

Rating Revaluations

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what additional resources will be made available to the Valuation Office in connection with outstanding rating appeals from the 1990 revaluation of non-domestic property.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department's existing expenditure plans in respect of Valuation Office agency rating services are set out in figure 119 of the Department's annual report for 1992. This shows the following provision over three years:

Year	£ million
1992-93	115·3
1993-94	115·4
1994-95	118·2

This provision covers work on outstanding and new rating appeals against the 1990 rating list, and work in connection with the 1995 general revaluation.

Darwin Initiative

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made in relation to the Darwin initiative.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 26 October 1992]: Consultations with interested institutions and organisations are continuing. I expect to make a statement later this year.

Household Waste

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects the first results will be available from the national household waste analysis project, currently being undertaken by Warren Spring laboratory and Aspinwalls on behalf of his Department.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 2 November 1992]: The first phase of the project—developing the methodology—has been completed and a report should be available by the end of 1992. Preliminary results from the first samples will be available from Warren Spring laboratory from the beginning of 1993. A full report of the 1992-93 results will be available in the late summer of 1993.

Recovery and Recycling

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether any consideration has been given to making a cradle-to-grave analysis of potential benefits to be gained from combining recovery and recycling facilities with incineration and energy recovery facilities.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 2 November 1992]: My Department and the Department of Trade and Industry have been studying the concept of combining recovery and recycling facilities with incineration and energy recovery facilities. The DTI's energy technology support unit started a five year research programme on the concept in 1991. Preliminary results will be published in due course.

Water Supplies

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment the Office of Water Services has made of the health and safety danger posed by pre-payment water meters in domestic properties in the event of an accident in the home or of heating systems running dry.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 4 November 1992]: I understand that OFWAT will be closely monitoring inter alia the health and safety aspects of a trial of pre-payment meters by Severn Trent Water Limited. OFWAT has asked the company to produce a leaflet for the customers concerned, giving advice about the precautionary action customers should take if they interrupt their supply by not inserting a pre-paid card to buy further units. However, I understand that all electronic pre-payment water meters enable water to be taken on credit in the event of an emergency.

Contaminated Land Register

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will improve the clarity of the definition of the areas of land that are to be included in the proposed regulations relating to the contaminated land register.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 4 November 1992]: It would be our intention to accompany any regulations made under section 143 of the Environment Protection Act 1990 with guidance about their implementation, including criteria for defining areas of registrable land.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will reconsider his proposals to include land that has been used for mineral extraction from the contaminated land register.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 4 November 1992]: Our recent consultative draft of regulations proposed under section 143 of the Environment Protection Act 1990 did not include mineral extraction as a registrable use of land; the proposed regulations would apply only to the most contaminative uses of land.

Methane Emissions

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what the contributions to the United Kingdom total methane emissions from landfills in Scotland and Northern Ireland will be.

Mr. Maclean: Direct estimates of total methane production from landfills in Scotland and Northern Ireland have not been made. An estimate based on population and waste arising statistics suggests that the figure is likely to be between 10 and 15 per cent. of the total for England and Wales, or between 100,000 and 150,000 tonnes per annum.

Geopathic Stress

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research his Department is currently carrying out into geopathic stress; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The Department is supporting studies at Lancaster university to determine the sensitivity in the United Kingdom of vegetation and of plant pathogenic micro-organisms to increased fluxes of ultraviolet-B radiation which may result from depletion of the stratospheric ozone layer. These studies will feed into the periodic reassessment of available scientific, environmental, technical and economic information required under article 6 of the Montreal protocol on substances that deplete the ozone layer.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Parliamentary Procedure

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Lord President of the Council when he expects to bring proposals for reform of parliamentary procedure before the House.

Mr. Newton: I informed the House during the debate on the report of the Select Committee on Sittings of the House on 13 July that I hoped to identify a basis of agreement for discussion through the usual channels, with the aim of being in a position to bring forward substantive motions at an early stage once the House returned.

That remains my intention.

WALES

Arable Support Scheme

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received concerning the arable support scheme for Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: I have received a number of representations concerning the arable support scheme. The rates (converted using the green rate applicable on 22 September 1992) payable in Wales for the main scheme in 1993-94 are:

	Notional compensation ECU per tonne	Payment per hectare ECU	Payment per hectare £
Cereals[1] (including sweetcorn)	25	116·25	95·20
Oilseeds	152	477·65	391·15
Proteins (including vining peas)	65	302·25	247·51
Set-aside	45	209·25	171·35

[1] Producers in the simplified scheme (less than 19·78 ha in production) willl receive the cereals rate for all crops grown.

I have made it clear in my discussions with the farming unions in Wales that this is for one year only and I have asked my Department, in consultation with industry representatives, to examine the available data in order to decide whether for future years a different regionalisation plan might be more appropriate.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to exclude local authorities' grants to charities and voluntary organisations from charge-capping calculation arrangements.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Local authorities in Wales should keep their budget requirements for 1993-94, including provision for grants to charities and voluntary organisations, in line with my right hon. Friend's expenditure plans. My right hon. Friend will announce his proposals for the 1993-94 local government revenue settlement in due course.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he proposes to tell local authorities in Wales their allocations of money for collecting the council tax for the next financial year.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The cost of council tax administration is one of the categories of expenditure taken into account in determining local authorities' standard spending assessments. My right hon. Friend's proposals for the 1993-94 local government revenue settlement will be announced in due course.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table showing for each collecting local authority in Wales the latest figures available of uncollected community charge and the percentage of the total community charge that this figure represents.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is shown in the table:

Arrears of community charges at 31 March 1992

	Amount[1] (£000)	As a percentage of the total debit[2]
Alyn and Deeside	1,866	10
Colwyn	1,148	8
Delyn	983	6
Glyndwr	890	8
Rhuddlan	1,069	7

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table showing for each collecting local authority in Wales how much was bid by that authority for Government funds to cover the set-up costs of the council tax and how much his Department allocated to each authority in 1992-93.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Welsh charging authorities did not bid for funds to cover council tax preparation costs. The Government commissioned the consultants CSL Group Ltd to estimate the costs to local authorities in England and Wales of preparing for the council tax. CSL estimated that Welsh authorities would spend £9·2 million—£7·98 million on revenue costs and £1·24 million on capital costs. My right hon. Friend accepted CSL's conclusions for Wales in full and has made £5·985 million special grant available to Welsh charging authorities to cover 75 per cent. of the revenue costs. The remaining 25 per cent. of the estimated revenue cost is supported through revenue support grant. My right hon. Friend has also issued supplementary credit approvals totalling £1·24 million to cover capital costs.

Details of the special grant are set out in the Special Grant Report (Wales) 1992 which received the approval of the House on 24 June 1992. Special grant and supplementary credit approval allocations for each charging authority in Wales are as follows:

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table showing for each collecting local authority in Wales the amount of uncollected domestic rates in 1989-90 and the percentage of the total rate that this figure represented.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is not collected centrally. I refer the hon. Gentleman to the CIPFA publication "Rate Collection Statistics 1989-90 Actuals" which provides figures for combined domestic and non-domestic rate arrears.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the outstanding amount of money uncollected on the poll tax.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Local authorities in Wales reported that, at 31 March 1992, arrears of community charges for the financial years 1990-91 and 1991-92 totalled £44 million that is equivalent to about £20 for each chargepayer.

Housing

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many housing association houses have been built in Alyn and Deeside since 1979;

(2) how many council houses have been built in Alyn and Deeside since 1979.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: A total of 404 council houses and 168 council flats were built in Alyn and Deeside between 1 January 1980 and 31 August 1992. A total of 103 houses and 114 flats were built by housing associations in the area in the same period.

Mr. Donald Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the number of unfit homes in Wales in 1979 and in each of the past three years.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Such information is only available from house condition surveys. From these, the estimated numbers of unfit dwellings were 90,900 in 1981 and 79,900 in 1986.

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the forecast for the number of new rural housing units to be built in Wales for the year 1993-94.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information is not available centrally.

Household Statistics

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total number of households in Wales where the classified head of the household is over the age of 65 years; what percentage of such households are (a) owner-occupied (i) with or (ii) without a mortgage or (b) renting from (i) a local authority or (ii) a housing association; and what percentage rent is from private landlords.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The 1986 Welsh inter-censal survey indicated that 299,000 households were headed by a person aged 65 or over. Of these households 59·6 per cent. were owner-occupiers (of which 7·4 per cent. were with a mortgage and 92·6 per cent. were owned outright), 31·3 per cent. rented from local authorities or new towns, 1·7 per cent. from housing associations and 7·4 per cent. from private landlords and other tenures.

Food Premises

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of food premises in Wales were inspected by each local enforcement authority in each year since 1988; and what were the equivalent percentage figures for (a) food manufactures, (b) restaurants and caterers and (c) food retailers.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information on the percentage of food premises inspected or visited has been held centrally only since 1991 and is given in the following table (1). Figures for 1992 are not yet available.

I will write to the hon. Gentleman and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House with equivalent percentage figures for (a) food manufacturers (b) restaurants and caterers and (c) food retailers.

Nursing Appeals

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of state for Wales if he will publish the number of clinical regrading nursing appeals that are yet to be determined in Wales; and what is his target for completion.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The numbers of clinical grading appeals outstanding in Wales are as follows:

	Number
At employing authority level	403
At regional level (Welsh Appeals Committee)	1,310
At national level (Negotiating Council)	170

Employing authorities are on course to have completed appeals at the local level by the end of this year. Efforts are being made to speed up the appeals process at regional and national levels, but while further appeals continue to be lodged it is not feasible to forecast when the entire process will be completed.

National Parks

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to introduce environmentally sensitive area-type payments within all the national park areas of Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: I have previously announced my intention to designate Preseli, which includes part of the Pembrokeshire coast national park, as an environmentally sensitive area. The Tir Cymen scheme which offers grants for the conservation of the farm landscape is also available to farmers in parts of the Snowdonia and Brecon Beacons national parks. In addition national park authorities have the discretion to enter into agreements with farmers which encourage environmentally friendly farming.

Aerospace Industry

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people are employed in the aerospace industry in Wales; and if he will provide a geographical breakdown of those figures.

Mr. David Hunt: According to the latest available estimates, for September 1989, there were 9,300 people employed in the aerospace industry in Wales. A geographical breakdown of these figures would breach the guidelines for protecting confidential data relating to a small number of businesses.

Rents

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average housing association rent in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average council house rent in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The average council house rent in Wales in 1992-93 is £29·74p per week.

"Women First"

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many copies of "Women First: a guide to health services for Women in Wales" have been (a) produced and (b) distributed by his Department to date.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: A total of 350,000 copies of the booklet have been produced and to date, approximately 325,000 have been distributed.

Crime Prevention

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the councils in Wales who have appointed crime prevention co-ordinators to date; how many local authorities have submitted bids for crime prevention moneys under the urban programme; and what is the total value of these bids in accordance with each local authority area.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Crime prevention co-ordinators have been appointed by seven of the county councils, the exception being South Glamorgan. Information is not held centrally about such appointments by district councils.

I have received the following bids for 1993-94 for funding of crime prevention and related initiatives under the urban programme:

Authority	No. of schemes	Bid for 1993-94 £
Clwyd county council	2	45,122
Alyn and Deeside district council	1	16,400
Dyfed county council	1	57,290
Gwynedd county council	1	40,000
Cynon Valley borough council	2	61,904
Taff Ely borough council	3	108,422
South Glamorgan county council	2	307,000
Vale of Glamorgan borough council	2	163,000
West Glamorgan county council	2	38,670
Port Talbot borough council	2	109,500
Lliw Valley borough council	2	6,900
Swansea city council	3	57,950
Total	23	1,012,158

Bids under the urban programme normally cover a three year period; the figures show the bid for the initial year.

Proposed Legislation (Representations)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to present copies of all official representations on proposed legislation made to his Department, in the form of deposited papers to the Library unless the body or individual making the representation demands otherwise.

Mr. David Hunt: It is usual practice to deposit such representations in the Library of the House.

Food Safety

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many inspections of food premises have been carried out by each local authority in Wales under the Food Safety Act 1990; and how many of such inspections have resulted in (a) the issuing of improvement and emergency prohibition notices, (b) informal warning letters or (c) the voluntary closure of companies.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: At present information is available only for 1991. This is given in the following table[1].

[1] These statistics cover work carried out by local authorities under the Food Safety Act 1990, regulations made under it and the Official Control of Foodstuffs Directive. They exclude:

meat hygiene inspections carried out under EC veterinary legislation;
milk hygiene inspections of production plants;
inspections carried out by the Wine Standards Board under EC wine legislation.

[2] The number of food hygiene and food standards inspections covers:

inspection of premises;
inspection of equipment including cleaning and maintenance equipment;
inspection of a process or operational procedure;
inspection of the hygiene or practices of personnel;
inspection of food (including ingredients, additives and products at any stage of manufacture) or contact materials; inspection of labels, labelling equipment and advertising matter and/or inspection of records.

These figures exclude all other visits eg revisits to check compliance with notices, sampling visits and visits to follow up complaints.

[3] Excludes figures for first quarter of 1991. This was only required on a voluntary basis.

[4] For port health authorities this includes the number of consignments and of number of ships kitchens inspected.

Acid Rain

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the effects of acid rain deposition on wildlife habitats in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: At present, no comprehensive information is available on the effects of acid rain deposition on wildlife habitats throughout Wales. The Welsh Office is currently funding research, with the Department of the Environment and the Countryside Council for Wales, aimed at providing a better overall picture of the situation.

Departmental Meetings

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) meetings with external organisations and (b) public hearings were conducted by his Department both within the Cardiff headquarters and externally in the latest year for which figures are available; how many requests were made for translation facilities at such meetings; and what proportion of such requests were fulfilled.

Mr. David Hunt: This information is not held centrally.

Refuse Collection

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many tenders for refuse collection or street cleansing are currently (a) run in-house and (b) put out to private companies in Wales; and how many tender-holders have made pre-tax losses in the latest accounting year for which figures are available.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This information is not held centrally.

Epilepsy

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the average annual incidence of epilepsy due to road traffic accidents in Wales between the year 1989 and 1991; and what percentage this represents of epilepsy from all causes.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The requested information is not held centrally.

Special Needs Education

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average cost of special needs education per child per annum.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The average expenditure for each pupil education in maintained special schools and special education provided elsewhere than at school, is available in table 12.17 of "Statistics of Education in Wales: Schools", No. 5 1991. A copy is available in the Library of the House.

Tourism, Clwyd

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of income in Clwyd is generated by tourism.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This information is not available centrally.

Road Traffic Injuries

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of referrals for behaviour or emotional problems requiring the services of psychologists or psychiatrists in Wales between 1989 and 1991, resulted from injuries sustained in serious road traffic accidents.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The requested information is not held centrally.

Head Injuries

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many children in Wales were assessed from 1980 to 1991 as having special educational needs due to severe head injuries (a) sustained in road traffic accidents and (b) from all causes after the neonatal period.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much was paid in Wales annually between 1989 and 1991 in (a) attendance allowance, (b) mobility allowance and (c) carers' allowance for disabilities due to serious head injuries (i) as a result of road traffic accidents and (ii) from all causes.

Mr. Scott: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested is not available.

Junior Doctors

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress has been made to reduce the hours junior doctors work.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The latest progress report on junior doctors' hours shows that, at the end of August, the number of junior doctors in Wales still working in hard pressed posts in excess of 83 hours per week has been reduced to below 5 per cent.

The Welsh task force is striving to ensure that the target date for reducing all junior doctors hours to a maximum of 83 per week by 1 April 1993 is met.

Building Industry

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people are currently employed in the building industry in Wales; and what was the equivalent number in each of the past five years.

Mr. David Hunt: In June this year there were 37,000 employees employed in the construction industry. The equivalent number for each of the last five years is given in the table.

Museums

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has for central funding for the Welsh museum schools service.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I am considering this in the public expenditure round but in doing so I am taking into account that five local education authorities already fund the service and the possibility of continued support from these and other sources.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what consultations he has had with the council of the National Museum of Wales regarding the rules for the generation of income from European Community research grants by the national museum and any compensatory withdrawal of grant-in-aid under additionality arrangements; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what arrangements he will make to strengthen the incentives for the National Museum of Wales to undertake European Community research projects, without loss of income generated.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Our officials have provided advice to the museum on specific queries in relation to a proposed application for European Community research funding.

The public expenditure arrangements provide scope and flexibility, within the public expenditure survey, for proper consideration of the implications for domestic expenditure of European Community research and development, for the setting of priorities and obtaining value for money. Our officials stand ready to discuss these arrangements with bodies in Wales.

Health Service

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the specialties for which the Welsh Office will be funding capital costs for the new Neath and Port Talbot hospital.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: My right hon. Friend's statement on 29 October underlined his determination that there will be a new hospital on the site at Baglan.

The review of health services to be undertaken by West Glamorgan health authority will ensure that the scheme is consistent with the possible need for further investment, including in primary and community health services, in West Glamorgan as a whole and Neath and Port Talbot in particular.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will issue guidelines on the procedure to be followed by the chairmen and non-executive directors of newly-appointed national health service trusts in Wales in appointing to the post of chief executive, as regards advertising the vacancy (a) where a general manager is already in post, (b) where a trust crosses pre-existing unit or health authority boundaries and (c) where there is no general manager in post or where he or she is near retirement or on extended sick leave.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Department has issued general guidance on the appointment of executive directors of national health service trusts. The appointment of chief executives is a matter for the chairman and non-executive directors of each trust.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what were the annual budgets of the training and enterprise councils in West Wales, Mid Glamorgan and Gwent in each year since their creation; and what is the percentage annual change in the central government contribution to each of these TEC budgets.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Comparative information is only available for financial years 1991-92 and 1992-93. This indicates that in the TECs concerned expenditure, budgets and percentage changes were as follows:

	1991-92 expenditure	1992-93 budget	Change Per cent.
Gwent	17,390	17,909	+2·98
Mid Glamorgan	20,039	20,561	+2·60
West Wales	29,295	27,911	−4·72

Mr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many training places at West Wales TEC, Mid Glamorgan TEC and Gwent TEC there were in each year of their operation; what are the latest current estimates; and what is the percentage year-on-year change in training places at each of those TECs.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information is not available in the form requested.

Valleys Programme

Mr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the number and percentage rate of long-term unemployed in Wales and the valleys programme area, on a seasonally adjusted basis, for (a) June 1988, (b) June 1990 and (c) September 1992.

Mr. David Hunt: The number and percentage rate of long-term unemployed in Wales and the valleys programme area are not available on a seasonally adjusted basis. The following table shows unadjusted numbers and rates of those unemployed for more than 52 weeks.

	Valleys area		Wales
[1]July	Number	[2]Rate	Number	[2]Rate
1988	12,775	5·2	47,638	3·8
1990	6,648	2·8	23,026	1·8
1992	11,765	4·8	41,456	3·2

[1] Unemployed figures by duration are produced on a quarterly basis. The months, for which data have been produced, closest to those requested are given in this table.

[2] The long-term unemployed expressed as a percentage of the total workforce.

Mr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the value of grant paid by year at constant prices and the associated job creation or job safeguarding effects for (a) regional development grant, (b) regional selective assistance and (c) regional enterprise grant in the valleys programme area in each year since 1988-89.

Mr. David Hunt: It is not possible to link payments of grant on a yearly basis to the number of jobs created or safeguarded over the lifetime of projects.

Payments of grant made to projects in the Valleys Programme Area since 1988-89 are as follows:

				£ million
Scheme	1988-89	1989-90[1]	1990-91[1]	1991-92[1]
RSA	14·3	9·5	7·6	13·0
RDG II	17·3	8·9	7·4	2·8
REG	0·1	0·2	0·5	0·3

For projects to which some payment of grant has been made the number of jobs created or safeguarded during the period 1988-89 to 1991-92 is as follows:

Scheme	Jobs Created	Jobs Safeguarded
RSA	10,861	4,301
RDG II	10,513	—

Note:—Some payments may have been made towards such projects in previous years, some may be made in subsequent years with more jobs created and safeguarded in subsequent years.

The REG scheme does not specifically require job creation.

Mr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the percentage male unemployment rate in Wales and the valleys programme area, on a seasonally adjusted basis, for (a) June 1988, (b) June 1990 and (c) September 1992.

Mr. David Hunt: Rates for the valleys programme area and Wales are given in the table. Seasonally adjusted unemployment rates are only available for Wales.

Male unemployment rates expressed as a percentage of the work force

	June 1988	June 1990	September 1992
Valleys[1]	17·5	12·8	18·7
Wales[1]	12·3	8·0	13·3
Wales[2]	12·1	8·3	13·5

[1] Unadjusted.
[2] Seasonally adjusted.

Ely Estate, Cardiff

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on a second tranche of financial assistance to Cardiff city council by way of supplementary credit approval for further housing improvements on the Ely council estate.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Decisions on this matter will be taken in due course after discussion about progress with the local authority.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

British Nuclear Fuels plc

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his current estimate of the value of depleted uranium stockpiled at nuclear facilities operated by British Nuclear Fuels plc.

Mr. Eggar: This is a commercial matter for the owners of the material.

Ozone-depleting Substances

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment his Department has made of what precentage of companies in the (a) electronics, (b) precision cleaning, (c) metal cleaning and (d) dry cleaning sectors view hydrochlorofluorocarbons as the only alternative to the use of chlorofluorocarbons or methyl chloroform; and what is the current level of emissions of ozone-depleting solvents from the (i) electronics, (ii) precision cleaning, (iii) metal cleaning and (iv) dry cleaning sectors.

Mr. Eggar: Latest information on the use of CFC113 and methyl chloroform in these sectors and on the proportion of companies which are considering the use of hydrochlorofluorocarbons as an alternative is contained in a report recently commissioned by my Department from Touche Ross management consultants. A copy of the report has been placed in the Library of the House. Information on emissions of ozone-depleting substances from the sectors concerned or on companies which view hydrochlorofluorocarbons to be the only alternative is not available.

Mr. Chris S[illegible] To ask the President of the Board of Trade what position his Department has taken with regard to proposals by CEN, the European Committee for Standardisation, for a regulation on hydrocarbon refrigeration.

Mr. Eggar: The European Committee for Standardisation brings together the national standards bodies of the European Community and the European Free Trade Association countries. The British Standards Institution is the United Kingdom national member of the European Committee for Standardisation. Through its technical committee structure, the British Standards Institution acts as the main channel for the United Kingdom's input into European standards-making. The determination of the United Kingdom's position on the European Committee for Standardisation proposals concerning hydrocarbon refrigeration is therefore the responsibility of the appropriate British Standards Institution technical committee.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps his Department has taken to promote the use of hydrocarbon refrigerants; and how much funding his Department has spent or committed to research and uptake of hydrocarbon refrigeration technology.

Mr. Eggar: Hydrocarbon refrigerants are among the alternatives to chlorofluorocarbons identified in a booklet on refrigeration and air conditioning published recently by my Department in a series entitled "Protecting the Ozone Layer and Safeguarding Your Business".

No funds have been spent on or committed specifically to the research and uptake of hydrocarbon refrigeration within the past three years. However, my Department and the Department of the Environment operate schemes of financial support for the research, development and diffusion of sound environmental technologies in general and the replacement of ozone-depleting substances is a priority area within those schemes.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps his Department has taken to promote the use of alternatives to HCFCs in (a) refrigeration and air conditioning, (b) foams and (c) solvents.

Mr. Eggar: HCFCs cause less damage to the ozone layer than CFCs and their availability is enabling industry to move out of CFCs more quickly than would otherwise have been the case. However, booklets on refrigeration and air-conditioning, foam blowing and solvents published recently by my Department in the series "Protecting the Ozone Layer and Safeguarding Your Business" provide information and sources of advice on alternatives to the use of ozone-depleting chemicals in the sectors concerned.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment his Department has made of the percentage of demand for HCFCs within the refrigeration and air conditioning industry which results from servicing, maintenance and leaks.

Mr. Eggar: None. However, the problem of loss of refrigerants resulting from servicing, maintenance and leakage is addressed in general terms in a report by March Consulting Group on "CFCs in the UK: Refrigeration and Air Conditioning Industries", commissioned recently by the Department of the Environment.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what essential uses of HCFCs his Department has defined in solvent cleaning; and what is the current and projected demand during the next 10 years of ozone-depleting substanes in solvent cleaning.

Mr. Eggar: No uses of HCFCs in solvent cleaning have yet been defined as essential for the purposes of exemption from future controls currently under discussion in the context of a review of the Montreal protocol.

The latest available forecasts of future demand for ozone-depleting substances in solvent cleaning are contained in two recent reports commissioned by my Department: figures for HCFCs are contained in a "Study of Ozone Depleting Substances" by Coopers and Lybrand; estimates for other ozone-depleting substances are contained in a report on "The Use of CFC 113 and 1,1,1 Tricholorethane as Solvents in UK Industry" by Touche Ross, management consultants. Copies of both reports have been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions his Department has had with ICI and Rhône Poulenc regarding their production and export of HCFC22.

Mr. Eggar: Officials in my Department hold regular meetings with both those companies on the question of phasing out ozone-depleting chemicals. Both ICI and Rhône Poulenc are participating in international consortiums evaluating the toxicology and environmental impact of HFC32 as potential replacement for HCFC22. ICI announced KLEA32, a new ozone-benign refrigerant, on 1 July 1992.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what discussions his Department has had with Sainsbury's regarding the use of HCFCs;

(2) what discussions his Department's officials have had with United Kingdom domestic fridge manufacturers regarding the use of hydrocarbons;

(3) what discussions his Department has had with supermarkets regarding ammonia and absorption refrigeration technology.

Mr. Eggar: Officials in my Department and the Department of the Environment have regular meetings with producers and users of ozone-depleting substances. Trade associations representing the interests of supermarkets, and United Kingdom manufacturers of domestic refrigerators and the refrigeration servicing sector are represented at these meetings. The meetings aim to ensure that manufacturers and users are aware of all current and potential options for accelerating the reduction of dependency on ozone-depleting substances.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what research his Department has undertaken or commissioned on refrigeration systems in Sweden; and what discussions the Department has had with the Swedish authorities regarding legislation restricting the use of HCFCs in refrigeration systems.

Mr. Eggar: My Department has commissioned no research into refrigeration systems in Sweden though information on relevant technological developments in Sweden and other countries is made available to it from time to time in its regular meetings with United Kingdom producers and users of ozone-depleting substances.

The United Kingdom and Sweden are both participating in discussions on future controls on the use of HCFCs in the context of the current review of the Montreal protocol.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what advice his Department has given industry with regard to hydrochlorofluorocarbon phase-out dates; and what representations his Department has recieved from (a) industry, (b) trade associations and (c) HCFC producers regarding phase-out dates of HCFCs.

Mr. Eggar: No dates have been agreed for the phasing-out of hydrochlorofluorocarbons, but my Department has given advice to industry that HCFCs are transitional substances which are likely to be subject to control and eventual phase-out. A range of views have been received from industry, trade associations and producers of HCFCs concerning the timetable for phasing out HCFCs and discussions are continuing.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions his Department has had with German counterparts regarding hydrocarbon refrigeration technology; and if he will instruct departmental officials to visit the German company DDK Scharfenstein to investigate their domestic hydrocarbon fridge.

Mr. Eggar: It is for industry to develop the technologies to replace ozone-depleting substances and my Department and the Department of the Environment operate schemes of financial support to assist industry to do this. I understand that organisations representing producers of refrigeration equipment are aware of recent publicity concerning a domestic hydrocarbon fridge under development in Germany.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what contacts his Department has made with the German company Aerotech regarding ammonia refrigeration systems.

Mr. Eggar: None.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what policy changes he will implement as a result of recent research on the use of solvents for the Department by Touche Ross.

Mr. Eggar: The report by Touche Ross was primarily intended to inform decisions on the timetable for phasing out of ozone-depleting substances which have yet to be taken. My Department will continue to advise and assist industry to switch to alternatives to ozone-depleting substances by the deadlines agreed within the European Communitty and earlier where this is practicable.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what advice his Department has issued to industry with regard to section 33 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 and the use of ozone-depleting substances; and what particular industrial processes involving the use of ozone-depleting substances are covered by section 33 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Mr. Eggar: My Department's advice to industry on section 33 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 is contained in a booklet on refrigeration and air conditioning published in the series "Protecting the Ozone Layer and Safeguarding Your Business". However, section 33 of the Act deals with the treatment, keeping or disposal of controlled waste. It is not specific to any particular process or processes.

Point of Ayr Colliery

Mr. Richards: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what were the details of the criteria on which British Coal originally decided to close Point of Ayr colliery in north Wales; and in what respects the criteria on which its future will now be assessed differ from these.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade and I accepted British Coal's advice that in order to meet its estimate of its potential market economically, it needed to reduce its present levels of production urgently and subsequently. We also accepted British Coal's advice as to the particular pits that should be closed. The detailed criteria used in making that decision are a matter for British Coal.

I refer my hon. Friend to the reply my right hon. Friend gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Broxtowe) (Mr. Lester) on 26 October, Official Report, columns 522-23, announcing the terms of reference of the review of the prospects for the 21 pits, including Point of Ayr, proposed for closure by British Coal but not subject to the statutory consultation currently being undertaken by it.

Staffing Costs

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list by grade and number employed the staffing costs for the year 1991-92 and the estimate for 1992-93 for the business task force.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested for 1991-92 is as follows. No figures for 1992-93 are available: the business task forces were abolished as part of the reorganisation of the Department of Trade and Industry this summer.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list by grade and number employed, the staffing costs for the year 1991-92 and the estimate for 1992-93, for the manufacturing technology division.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested is as follows. The significant increase in size in 1992-93 follows the reorganisation of the Department of Trade and Industry in the summer, as a result of which the manufacturing technology division took on extra responsibilities in respect of information technology.

Power Generation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether power is still being generated for supply to the national grid on the basis of merit order of power stations based on generating cost; and whether he will publish the most recent list of power stations by that merit order, together with their generating capacity, power produced and fuel consumption.

Mr. Eggar: The National Grid Company is required by its transmission licence to schedule and dispatch plant in accordance with a bid price merit order system, under which generators submit price bids for their stations daily and the cheapest plant bid is used first, within the technical constraints of the transmission and distribution system. Price bids are a matter for the generators. Daily information on bid prices and capacity available is not published but may be obtained from National Grid Company Settlements Ltd. Figures for power produced and fuel consumption are commercially confidential.

Coal Industry

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list by date the meetings he, Ministers or officials of his Department, have had with external bodies or expert consultants on the coal industry since 15 April.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 2 November 1992]: My right hon. Friend and I, and our officials, have had numerous meetings with external bodies and expert consultants on the coal industry since 15 April.

Nuclear Materials Review Conference

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what submissions on physical protection, inventory control and enhanced security were put forward by Her Majesty's Government to the review conference on the physical protection on nuclear materials held between 29 September and 1 October; and if he will make a statement on the outcome of the review conference.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 2 November 1992]: The Government's aim at the review conference was to ensure that the high standards of physical protection required by the convention on the physical protection of nuclear material were maintained and to urge states which had not already done so to accede to the convention.

The conference endorsed the important role of the convention in providing an international framework for the physical protection of nuclear material. I am placing a copy of the final statement of the conference in the Library of the House.

EC Coal Subsidy

Ms. Quin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he last had discussions with Commissioner Sir Leon Brittan about the differing levels of subsidy on coal production in the EC; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 3 November 1992]: My right hon. Friend and I meet both Commissioner Sir Leon Brittan and Commissioner Cardoso from time to time to discuss matters of mutual interest.

Energy Select Committee

Mr. Spearing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 29 October, Official Report, cols. 784-85, to the hon. Member for Newham, South concerning availability of his reply to the Fourth Report of the Select Committee on Energy 1991-92 (HC 113), by what means his memorandum, and that of the Director General of Electricity Supply, were released to the press; and if he will list the names of journals to which it was sent without a request.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 3 November 1992]: My Department's memorandum was circulated using our standard method of distribution for press notices, which covers around 450 newspapers, journals, media and other companies and individuals. The Office of Electricity Regulation circulated its press release to its standard distribution list of more than 500 newspapers and other contacts, and sent a copy of the director general's memorandum to the majority of press and media contacts.

Gas Reserves

Mr. Hardy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proportion of the reserves of gas which he has estimated will meet Britain's requirements have yet to be proved; and what proportion he estimates will come from smaller fields than those which currently provide supplies to the home market.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 4 November 1992]: My Department's latest estimates of United Kingdom gas reserves were published in the Brown Book—"Development of the Oil and Gas Resources of the United Kingdom"—in April 1992. About 37 per cent. of the total are reserves which have yet to be proved by drilling. Reserves in future fields will fall within a wide range, but it is not expected that any will compare in size with the largest fields currently supplying the United Kingdom market.

Pit Closures

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many representations he has received in the last three months from businesses wishing (a) to reopen closed pits in Wales and (b) to maintain existing pits under new management; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 4 November 1992]: My Department has not received any representations in the last three months from businesses wishing to reopen closed pits in Wales. It has received a number of representations in relation to taking over existing pits in Wales for operation under new management.

Expressions of interest in pits are a matter for British Coal, which has a duty to consider carefully applications from responsible organisations seeking licences to mine.

DEFENCE

Reserve Forces

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to use members of the reserve forces in support of current operations.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence reported to the House by notice last month the call-out of a small number of willing officers of the Royal Air Force Volunteer Reserve to support current operations.

A further need for specialist support available only from the reserve forces has now become apparent, and a number of individuals from the Territorial Army's intelligence and security group (volunteers) have offered to serve on duties in the United Kingdom. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State has made the Queen's order required by section 12(1) of the Reserve Forces Act, 1980, and has formally called them out under section 11(1) of the Act.

A number of officers of the Royal Naval Reserve have also volunteered to serve, and they are being called up under the provisions of an Order in Council made in May 1982.

Agencies

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list by grade the numbers of staff and their cost for 1991-92 and the estimated figures for 1992-93, for each executive agency and defence support agency for which he is responsible.

Mr. Aitken: This is a matter delegated to my Department's executive agencies under their framework documents. I have therefore asked each chief executive to reply direct to the hon. Member.

Letter from J. C. R. Hunt to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 5 November 1992:

I am responding to your written parliamentary question, "to ask the Secretary of State for Defence, if he will list by grade the numbers of staff and their cost for 1991-92 and the estimated figures for 1992-93, for each executive agency and defence support agency for which he is responsible."

The number of staff in each grade is given in the table attached. The staff cost (including superannuation) was £59·4 million in 1991-92 and is expected to be £62·9 million in 1992-93.

Letter from J. A. R. Chisholm to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 5 November 1992:

In today's written answer the Under Secretary of State for Defence informed you that, as Chief Executive of the Defence Research Agency, I would be replying directly to your question concerning numbers and costs of staff in Executive Agencies.

The number of personnel employed by DRA on 1 April 1991 was 12,027 and the total staff costs for 1991-92 were £206 million. On 1 April 1992 total personnel numbered 11,187 for whom the costs in 1992-93 will be £211 million. Staff numbers as at 1 October 1992 are 11,267. This number will reduce slightly by the end of the year as a result of my recently announced voluntary redundancy scheme.

My colleague Roger Warren wrote to you on my behalf in July listing the DRA staffing levels by grade as at 1 April 1992. I have repeated that information below for your convenience. I am afraid a breakdown by grade is not available for 1 April 1991.

	Numbers

Industrial staff
Craft	2,047
Non-craft	1,443
Sub Total	3,490
Military staff
All ranks	190
Total	11,187

I hope you find this information helpful.

Letter from Colonel G. H. Wilson to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 3 November 1992:

I refer to your parliamentary question, received on 29 October, which asked the Secretary of State for Defence to list by grade the numbers of staff and their cost for each Executive Agency for 1991-92 and the estimated figures for 1992-93.

The Duke of York's Royal Military School was established as an Executive Agency of the MOD on 1st April 1992. Attached are staff numbers and costs for 1991-92 and the estimated figures for 1992-93.

Letter from Mr. J. D. Hankinson to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 4 November 1992:

I have been asked to write to you in answer to your Parliamentary Question.

Date of Order Paper: 28 October 1992

"31. Mr. Martin Redmond (Don Valley): To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, if he will list by grade the numbers of staff and their cost for 1991-92 and the estimated figures for 1992-93 for each executive agency for which he is responsible."

Answer:* This School has been an Executive Agency since April 1st, 1992, hence it is appropriate to provide the estimated figures for 1992-93. They are as follows:

Queen Victoria School: Estimated staff and their costs, 1992-93

	67·0	1,133,173	85,074	29,744	112,760	1,360,751

I trust this answer is helpful. Further instructions can be supplied if required.

Letter from Rear Admiral J. A. L. Myres to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 4 November 1992:

Hydrographic Office DSA—Parliamentary question

You recently asked the Secretary of State for Defence to list by grade the numbers of staff and their cost for 1991-92 and the estimated figures for 1992-93, for each Executive Agency and Defence Support Agency for which he is responsible. The Minister has asked me, as Chief Executive, to reply in respect of the Hydrographic Office Defence Support Agency.

The information you requested is at the Annex. I hope this is helpful.

The information has been placed in the Library.

MAINTENANCE GROUP DEFENCE SUPPORT AGENCY

1. In response to Parliamentary Question 7256F, seeking the numbers of staff making up the subject Agency and their costs for financial year 1991-92 as well as the estimated figures for this financial year, you are advised that the outturn cost for the Service element in financial year 1991-92 was £126 million with the estimate for this financial year being £123 million. For the civilian element the outturn cost for financial year 1991-92 was £80 million and the estimate for this year is currently £84 million.

2. Please find at Annexes A and B the required detailed breakdown by rank/grade and number.

Annex:

A. Numbers of Service Staff for 1991-92 and Estimated Figures for 1992-93.

B. Number of Civilian Staff for 1991-92 and Estimated Figures for 1992-93.

The details have been placed in the Library.

Letter from M. J. Dymond to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 5 November 1992:

You asked the Secretary of State for Defence for details of the number of staff in each grade and their costs in 1991-92 and 1992-93 for each MOD executive agency. As Chief Executive of DGDA I have been asked to reply for my Agency. The table at Annex A (attached) sets out the information requested.

Letter from Dr. Graham S. Pearson to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 5 November 1992:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking if he will list by grade the numbers of staff and their costs for 1991-92 and the estimated figures for 1992-93 for each Executive Agency and Defence Support Agency has been passed to me for reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The number of staff in post at the end of 1991-92 and their salary/wage costs for that year were 603 and £10·08M respectively; a grade breakdown is provided in the Annex.

3. Our staff target for 1992-93 is 639½ and the estimated cost of their salary/wage costs in this year is £11·31M; a grade breakdown is also in the Annex. The difference in staff in this year numbers arises from a number of vacancies on 1 April 1992 and from additional repayment work being undertaken by this Establishment.

Letter from Mr. P. Altobell to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 4 November 1992:

Minister of State (DP) asked me to write to you about my Agency staff numbers and their costs.

I have provided this information in the attached table. However, because of restructuring, we do not have a complete record of our costs on a compatible basis before we became an Agency in July 1992. In consequence the cost figures for both 1991-92 and 1992-93 are estimates, and I have therefore rounded the figures to the nearest £10,000.

Letter from D. Leadbeater to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 2 November 1992:

In his reply of 5th November, the Secretary of State for Defence referred to agency chief executives the question:

To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, if he will list by grade the numbers of staff and their cost for 1991-92 and the estimated figures for 1992-93, for each executive agency and defence support agency for which he is responsible.

The Defence Operational Analysis Centre was formed as a Defence Support Agency on 1 July 1992; so a comparison of numbers within the agency over the two years is not possible.

Notwithstanding the above limitation on the use of manpower numbers, I can tell you the numbers by grade and costs for year 1991-92 prior to agency status and my projections for year 1992-93 as follows:

Letter from Brigadier M. A. Browne to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 5 November 1992:

In response to your question of the Secretary of State for Defence concerning staff numbers by grade and costs for 1991-92 and the estimated figures for 1992-93 for each executive agency and defence support agency I am replying in respect of the Defence Postal and Courier Service—Defence Support Agency as Chief Executive.

The staff figures for 1991-92 are the average strength in each grade for the year and the associated costs are the actual outturn figures.

Those for 1992-93 are the estimated average strength for the year and the costs are my forecast as at 31 September 1992.

I hope this information meets your requirements and is helpful in building the overall picture for staffing and costs for Ministry of Defence executive and defence support agencies.

Consultants

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all of the reports his Department has commissioned from external consultants in each of the last three years; for each of the last three years, how many reports from external consultants to his Department led to further consultancy work being commissioned, stating for each of these who were the original and subsequent consultants and briefly describing the subject matter of the consultancy work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: The information requested is not held centrally and could not be compiled without disproportionate cost and effort.

Plutonium

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to seek amendment of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty to make the stockpiling of weapon-ready plutonium illegal for signatory members.

Mr. Aitken: It is our policy to seek an indefinite extension to the non-proliferation treaty, without amendment.

Naval Emergency Monitoring Organisation

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the role and function of the Naval Emergency Monitoring Organisation; what is its annual budget; how many personnel are assigned to it; in what year it was first established; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The role of the Naval Emergency Monitoring Organisation is to provide rapid and effective monitoring advice in the event of a defence radiological incident. It was established in 1961 and currently consists of around 40 full-time and 60 part-time personnel. Because the constituent teams are integrated into other MOD and naval establishments, a full cost breakdown is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Submarines

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what agreements exist covering the use of extremely low frequency radio transmitters in the United States of America for the purpose of communicating with Royal Navy submarines; and what plans he has to negotiate an agreement for the use of extremely low frequency radio transmitters in the United States of America for the purpose of communicating with Royal Navy submarines.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We have no such agreements with the United States and no plans to negotiate any.

RAF Jets (50th Anniversary)

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in what ways the forthcoming 50th anniversary of the introduction of jet aircraft to the RAF will be commemorated.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are currently no plans to commemorate this anniversary.

Scottish Regiments

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many representations he has received since 9 April about the proposed amalgamation of Scottish regiments.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Since 9 April this year, my Department has received some 40 letters which were primarily about the amalgamation of Scottish regiments.

Search and Rescue

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list for each local government region the number of rescues carried out by search and rescue crews from RAF Leuchars in each of the years (a) 1987, (b) 1988, (c) 1989, (d) 1990, (e) 1991 and (f) 1992 to date.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Statistical data are not recorded in the form required.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) on how many occasions in each year between 1 January 1987 and 31 December 1991 search and rescue helicopters from RAF Leuchars have been involved in operations which required them to begin or to continue flying during the hours of darkness;

(2) on how many occasions since 1 January search and rescue helicopters from RAF Leuchars have been involved in operations which required them to begin or to continue flying during the hours of darkness.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The number of such operations is:

	Number
1987	32
1988	33
1989	21
1990	13
1991	19
[1]1992	15

[1] Between 1 January and 31 August 1992.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the current mandatory training requirements for night flying airmen which are applicable to search and rescue crews based at RAF Leuchars.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Each crew member should complete a minimum of two hours of night flying per month, which includes navigation training, cliff winching training, mountain training and approaches to night landing sites. Crews at RAF Leuchars are exempt from these requirements during the months of May, June and July provided they complete a minimum of one hour of night flying during the previous two calendar months.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many rescue missions have been flown by search and rescue aircraft from RAF Leuchars in the years (a) 1987, (b) 1988, (c) 1989, (d) 1990 and (e) 1991; how many of them have involved the rescue of civilians; and how many have involved the rescue of military personnel.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The table details the to[illegible] number of rescues—including incidents such as the transfer of sick or injured people from ship to hospital —carried out by the Wessex search-and-rescue flight at RAF Leuchars in the years in question:

year	Military callouts	Civilian callouts	Total callouts
1987	2	47	49
1988	3	57	60
1989	7	38	45
1990	2	38	40
1991	—	66	66

Equipment Exhibition

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence where the Royal Navy and British army equipment exhibition will be held; and on which days it will be open to (a) overseas customers, (b) the press and (c) the public.

Mr. Aitken: The Royal Navy and British army equipment exhibition will be held in Aldershot from 5 to 10 September 1993. The exhibition will be open to overseas visitors from 6 to 10 September, to the national press on 5 September only, and to the technical press for the whole week. The exhibition will not be open to the public.

Defence Research Agency

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions the Defence Research Agency's premises in Dyfed have been used for development or test firing of the RA[illegible]O multiple launch rocket system.

Mr. Aitken: Management of the Aberporth range was transferred from the Defence Research Agency to the newly formed Directorate General of Test and Evaluation on 1 April 1992. For reasons of commercial confidentiality we do not release details of individual test firings by manufacturers at Aberporth or any of our ranges.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all those countries that have used the DRA's facilities at Aberporth in Dyfed in the past five years.

Mr. Aitken: Three countries have used the Aberporth range's facilities directly during the past five years: Germany, the Netherlands and the USA. In addition, in 1988, the RAF's central tactics and trials organisation sponsored a major NATO trial involving aircraft from the following NATO countries: Belgium, Denmark, France, Germany, Italy, Norway, Portugal, Spain and the USA. We cannot, for reasons of commercial confidentiality, release details of trials in which the range's customer was United Kingdom industry but sales, or potential sales, to foreign countries were involved.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all accidents involving airborne missiles that have occurred at the DRA facility in Aberporth, Dyfed since 1979 indicating the country of origin of the missiles involved.

Mr. Aitken: There have been no such incidents.

General Pinochet

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the purpose of the visit by General Pinochet of Chile to Government property in Britain in 1991.

Mr. Aitken: The general did not visit Government property.

Aviation Industry

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the hon. Member for Walsall, North will receive a reply to his letter of 24 September regarding the aviation industry.

Mr. Aitken: I replied to the hon. Member's letter—which was passed to me by the Department of Trade and Industry—on 3 November.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Citizens Charter

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what were the publication dates of (a) the citizens charter White Paper, Cm 1599, and (b) the tape recorded version for partially sighted people.

Mr. Jackson: The citizens charter White Paper (Cm 1599) was published on 22 July 1991 and the audio version on 18 November 1991.

Her Majesty's Stationery Office

Mr. Garrett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are the salaries of the executive directors of Her Majesty's Stationery Office at the present time and 18 months ago; and what proportion of their present salaries is in the form of performance-related pay.

Mr. Waldegrave: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to HMSO under its chief executive. I have asked him to write to the hon. Member direct.

Letter from Paul Freeman to Mr. John Garrett, dated 3 November 1992:

I have been asked to reply to your Question to the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster about the salaries of HMSO's executive directors.

The remuneration arrangements for HMSO's directors are exactly the same as for other staff. Jobs are assigned to a pay band by means of an analytical job evaluation system. Progression within the pay band is dependent on performance, and performance pay is not separately identifiable. Details of the relevant pay bands are as follows:

Pay band	April 1991 £	Now £
14	27,856—36,549	29,165—38,267
15	30,748—40,343	32,193—42,239
16	33,940—44,532	35,536—46,625
17	35,658—46,786	37,334—48,985
18	37,469—49,155	39,224—51,465

ADMINISTRATION COMMITTEE

Forged Banknotes

Mr. Janner: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee whether he will arrange for an ultraviolet monitoring machine to be made available in the House of Commons Members' post office to protect hon. Members against receiving forged banknotes.

Mr. Martin: There is no evidence of sufficient demand to justify this provision.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Battery Cages

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the main findings of the EC scientific veterinary committee report on hen welfare; and if he will make it his policy to advocate the phasing out of battery cages.

Mr. Soames: We await the official publication of the scientific veterinary committee's report, together with the Commission's proposals for revision of the battery hens directive and new welfare standards for hens kept in alternative systems.

It is already the Government's policy that the current battery cage design, in which only feeding and drinking facilities are provided, must be phased out on a Community basis.

Farms (Pollution Control)

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures are currently available to assist family farms with the costs of fulfilling pollution control requirements.

Mr. Curry: Since the farm and conservation grant scheme was introduced in 1989, £88 million has been spent on grants to help United Kingdom farmers meet the costs of installing or improving waste handling facilities. Free initial advice on pollution control is available to farmers from the Agricultural Development Advisory Service, the Scottish Agricultural College and the Northern Ireland Department of Agriculture.

In addition, the Ministry is carrying out a pilot study to see if farmers can help to reduce pollution themselves by drawing up their own farm waste management plans.

Agricultural Support

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will set out, for each system of agricultural support which will be effective next year, the total estimated cost, the likely quantities involved and also the split in costs between the common agricultural policy and United Kingdom public funds.

Mr. Curry: Details of estimates for the years 1992-93 to 1994-95 were provided in the departmental report by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Intervention Board. This report was presented to Parliament in February 1992 and a copy was placed in the Library. Details are not readily available of the likely quantities involved in each of the support systems and could be compiled only at disproportionate cost.

Milk Hygiene

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what charges are being set for milk hygiene enforcement work for 1992-93.

Mr. Curry: Following consultation with interested parties the Government have today laid before Parliament regulations maintaining the current charge for milk hygiene inspection visits and increasing the charge for visits for sampling and testing of untreated milk undertaken by ADAS. The new charge will come into force on 27 November 1992.

The Milk and Dairies and Milk (Special Designation) (Charges) (Amendment) Regulations 1992 will increase the charge for sampling and testing visits from £47 to £63. This increase is necessary to assist the Government in meeting its ultimate objective of recovering the full costs of milk hygiene enforcement work. The charge for milk hygiene inspection visits will remain unchanged at £92—£71 for producers with fewer than 20 cows—as will the present exemptions from charges for pre-registration inspection visits, for farmhouse caterers and for suppliers in remote areas.

The current milk hygiene enforcement programme will be reviewed in the context of the arrangements that are being made to implement the new EC milk hygiene directive by 1 January 1994. The review will include an examination of the possibility of contracting out the work.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Poll Tax

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the average weekly amount ordered by magistrates for payment of poll tax arrears by recipients of income support.

Mr. John M. Taylor: This information is not collected.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will include in the community charge enforcement statement figures for the remission of debt following means tests.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I have no plans to add to the existing information that is supplied to the Library of the House.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make regulations to limit the amount of payment for poll tax arrears ordered by the courts in the case of recipients of income support to no more than £2·15 per week; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: It is not the role of the courts to determine the rate of payment of arrears by debtors subject to a liability order. Where recovery cannot otherwise be achieved, a court may, on an application by the charging authority, decide in the light of the debtor's means to postpone committal to prison for default, subject to any requirement to make such payments as the court may determine. I do not think that it would be right for me to seek to fetter the courts' discretion in such matters.

Legal Aid

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make it his policy to grant the right to free legal advice to all patients detained in psychiatric hospitals.

Mr. John M. Taylor: No. It is the Government's general policy that those who are assessed as having the means to contribute towards the cost of legal advice provided under the legal aid scheme should do so.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the average time between legal aid work being done by barristers and legal aid fees being paid to them for (a) criminal and (b) civil legal aid for each of the past 20 years.

Mr. John D. Taylor: Figures are not available in the form nor for the period requested. The information immediately available is contained in the tables. It shows performance against target for bills paid by the Legal Aid Board and the Crown court. It is only available in respect of the time taken to pay bills once they have been submitted.

Payments made by the Legal Aid Board

Payments made by the Crown court

In the Crown court, where counsel has claimed a standard fee the target is for payment within five working days where the claim is lodged on the day that the case is concluded; and within 10 working days where it is not. The table gives the percentage of cases paid within target and the average number of days taken to pay all standard fees.

	1989-90	1990-91	1991-92
Performance	60 per cent.	68 per cent.	72 per cent.
Average time (days) between date of receipt and payment of claim	10	11	9

For non-standard fee cases in the Crown court there is a target of no more than 30 per cent. of claims to be outstanding after four weeks from date of receipt.

	1987-88 Per cent.	1988-89 Per cent.	1989-90 Per cent.	1990-91 Per cent.	1991-92 Per cent.
Percentage of claims from counsel outstanding more than four weeks from receipt	33	32	37	38	28

Figures for the speed of payment of Crown court claims by the central taxing teams—which were established in March 1991—are produced on a monthly basis. The target is for payment of 75 per cent. of the claims within three months of the claim becoming ready to tax and for no claims to remain untaxed after six months. In terms of their own workload, all teams, except the south-eastern, are currently meeting the first of these targets, and all but the south-eastern and midland and Oxford are meeting the second.

Queen's Counsel

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to allow people who are being considered for appointments as Queen's Counsel to see files that are held by him on them.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Factual information held on a candidate is available on request in the form of a summary sheet. It is also open to the individual concerned to see a senior official of the Lord Chancellor's Department when he can be told the tenor of the opinions received. However, as in most organisations dealing with recruitment and appointments, the references and opinions obtained on those who have applied for appointment as Queen's Counsel are confidential. The Lord Chancellor has no plans to make them available to applicants.

TRANSPORT

Safety Tests

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to publish annually the results of safety inspections on (a) ferries, (b) locomotives and (c) aircraft.

Mr. Norris: The Surveyor General's Organisation—which is responsible for inspecting ferries as well as other types of ship—produces an annual report setting out its survey and inspection performance. The Civil Aviation Authority's surveyors monitor compliance with established safety standards in transport aircraft; operators are required to report defects to the CAA under the mandatory occurrence reporting system and these reports are published. Railway operators are responsible for inspecting their locomotives and while they do not publish any information on safety inspections, the Health and Safety Executive publishes an annual report on railway safety which gives details of certain safety-related failures of locomotives and multiple units which have occurred in service.

We have no plans to require the publication of any additional information.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to publish annually the failure of any (a) ferry, (b) locomotive or (c) aircraft to pass safety tests.

Mr. Norris: We have no plans to publish information on individual failures at safety tests. Any ferry, locomotive or aircraft on which a major defect was found at a safety inspection would not be allowed to return to service until the relevant fault had been rectified.

InterCity 225 Trains

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 16 July, Official Report, column 866, if he will list the number of claims by British Rail, under warranty protections, to the manufacturers of InterCity 225 trains.

Mr. Freeman: The number of claims is a commercial matter between British Rail and the manufacturers.

Nuclear Materials

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will establish a centralised database of the movement of nuclear materials, including medical isotopes, within, into and from the United Kingdom.

Mr. Norris: No.

Rail Privatisation

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are his plans for the membership of the franchising authority proposed as part of the rail privatisation; and what local imput there will be.

Mr. Freeman: The franchising authority's head will be appointed directly by the Secretary of State. The authority will wish to take into account the views of local authorities when specifying service levels for franchises, particularly in the passenger transport authorities areas where the passenger transport executives will continue to pay for the services they support.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to ensure the continuation of the integrated local services in the west midlands area after privatisation.

Mr. Freeman: The west midlands, in common with six other areas in the United Kingdom, has a passenger transport executive responsible for specifying and procuring local passenger rail services, and for measures which promote their operation in conjunction with local passenger transport services. PTEs will continue to have this responsibility following British Rail's privatisation, feeding their requirements into the service specification that the franchising authority will draw up when letting the franchises for passenger rail services which cover PTA areas.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy that expenditure by the West Midlands passenger transport authority on rail developments receives a return on outlay following privatisation.

Mr. Freeman: Any contractual rights or obligations existing between British Rail and the West Midlands PTA will be honoured.

Radioactive Fuel

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many occasions in 1991 and so far in 1992 irradiated test reactor fuel from Harwell has been transported by road to Dounreay; and how many accidents have taken place in the course of those journeys.

Mr. Norris: There were no such shipments in 1991, and have been none so far this year.

Westway

Mr. Walden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list the dates of resurfacing work carried out on the Westway since 1987;

(2) to what extent the present repairs to the Westway in west London involve remedial work following the most recent previous repairs; and what amount and proportion of the costs of the current repairs are accounted for by such remedial work;

(3) why the current repairs to the Westway in West London were not carried out when the road was last under repair;

(4) what the difference is between the current repairs to the Westway in west London and those carried out in the most recent previous repair programme.

Mr. Norris: During an inspection of Westway in 1988, the waterproof membrane was found to have reached the end of its life. As an interim measure the defective membrane was patched in places between August and November of that year. This was the first time that Westway had been subject to substantial repair works since 1986. Following this interim measure, full waterproofing and resurfacing of the entire length of A40(M) is being carried out. In consultation with the police and the local boroughs—Westminster, Kensington and Chelsea, Hammersmith and Fulham—it was decided that to undertake all the work at once would cause unacceptable disruption to traffic on both Westway and the adjacent road network. The work was accordingly divided into two phases.

Phase I, from the Marylebone flyover to just short of Ladbroke grove, and the A40(M)/M1 flyover, started in September 1991 and was completed in February 1992. Phase II, which covers work at the A40(M)/M41 roundabout and the Wood Lane flyover, began in July 1992 and is due to finish at the end of November. None of the current work is remedial work. During carriageway closures, signed diversions are in operation.

Once the work is complete, I do not envisage resurfacing the Westway for many years.

Brake Lights

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what alterations are being considered with regard to the regulations affecting the provision of high mounted brake lights on motor vehicles.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I have no plans at present to alter the current lighting regulations which provide for the optional fitting of high mounted stop lamps on vehicles.

It now seems likely that Europe will follow the USA and, for the future, make the fitting of a supplementary high mounted stop lamp compulsory. When changes are agreed by the European Community, an amendment will be needed to our regulations.

EC Transport Council

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the result of the Luxembourg Transport Council.

Mr. John MacGregor: The Transport Council, in Luxembourg on 26 October, held most constructive discussions which have cleared the way for agreement on a wide range of subjects including airport slot allocation, transport infrastructure funding, road and rail transit of Austria and Switzerland and road haulage cabotage liberalisation together with associated taxation and charging issues.

Airport Slot Allocation

The Council provided guidance on the direction which further preparatory work should take on key issues, with the objective of agreeing the detailed regulation at the December Council.

Transport Infrastructure Funding

After discussion based on a presidency compromise, the Council is now in a position to reach agreement on the regulation to supersede the present transport infrastructure funding regulation, subject to the views of Parliaments. As at present, maritime and aviation infrastructure is not to be included in the regulation. Its duration is to be two years but with the provision that it will automatically lapse on the introduction of trans-European networks funding for transport under the Maastricht treaty.

Road and Rail Transit of Austria, Switzerland and Slovenia

The Council is now also in a position to conclude transport agreements between the Community and Austria and Switzerland and administrative arrangements for implementing them, subject to the views of Parliaments and to the satisfactory conclusion of outstanding discussions between Germany and Austria. The Council reached a similar provisional agreement on a regulation on the distribution to member states of "ecopoints" which encourage the use of "green lorries" for additional transit journeys through Austria. I expect that final agreements will be reached on these items in time for implementation from 1 January 1993.

The Council also reached agreement on a mandate and procedures for the Commission to negotiate a transit agreement between the Community and Slovenia.

Road Haulage Cabotage Liberalisation and Fiscal Harmonisation

The Council had a constructive discussion on the taxation and charging of road goods transport and made useful progress. It was agreed that the Commission's proposals on taxation and charging represent the best possible basis for making further progress. The presidency will work further in the next few weeks on this issue and the related one of road haulage cabotage liberalisation, on the basis of the Commission's proposal together with the previous compromise proposal of the Portuguese presidency on cabotage liberalisation. Agreement on free cabotage is required under the single market provisions of the treaty by the end of 1992 and I shall be pressing for agreement on this at the Council's December meeting.

Combined Transport

The Council is also in a position to reach agreement, subject to the views of Parliaments, on a directive amending the definition of combined transport for the purpose of certain concessions to road hauliers so as to include journeys made partly by sea; and on a regulation to extend by three years and to widen the scope of the existing regulation permitting member states to grant aid for combined transport.

The Commission's proposal for a Community shipping register, Euros, was discussed briefly and a full discussion will take place at the December Council. The Commission briefly introduced proposals for revising the code of conduct on airline computer reservation systems, for a directive on standards for air services relations with third countries. All these issues were referred to the Committee of Permanent Representatives for examination.

Rail Freight Services

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 22 October, Official Report, column 345, whether his Department or British Rail put out to tender the consultancy on the sale of British Rail's freight operations; and how many replies were received to the invitation to tender.

Mr. Freeman: Yes; six.

SCOTLAND

Consultants

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the names of all the consultants commissioned by his Department from 1986 to the most recent date for which information is available; and if he will give the subject and expenditure for each.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 29 October 1992]: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Low Pay

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his proposals to increase equal economic opportunities for the low paid.

Mr. Lamont: The Government's strategy of reducing inflation, cutting taxes and making markets work better is the best way of helping the low paid.

Exchange Rates

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the reduction in the trade-weighted nominal rate for the pound sterling since the fourth quarter of 1986, together with his estimate of the corresponding reduction in relative export unit values, assuming that the fall in the nominal rate is fully reflected in a reduction in the prices charged by United Kingdom exporters in foreign currency terms.

Mr. Nelson: The latest figures for the sterling effective exchange rate index and the United Kingdom's relative export prices are on the CSO databank which may be accessed through the Library of the House.

Pension Scheme Surpluses

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has for legislation under which banks would be prevented from appropriating pension scheme surpluses in their annual accounts.

Mr. Nelson: I have no such proposals.

Bingham Inquiry

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the Government Ministers who gave evidence to the Bingham inquiry and the dates on which they appeared before the inquiry.

Mr. Nelson: A full list of those who gave evidence to the Bingham inquiry is at annex 1 to the report, a copy of which is available in the Library. Of those, five present or former Government Ministers appeared before the inquiry to give oral evidence. The dates of their appearances were:

Date and Witness

4 February 1992—The Right Hon. Sir Ian Stewart, now Lord Stewartby (former Economic Secretary).

6 February—The Right Hon. Nigel Lawson, now Lord Lawson (former Chancellor of the Exchequer).

10 February—The Right Hon. John Major MP (Prime Minister and former Chancellor of the Exchequer).

11 February—John Maples (former Economic Secretary).

12 February—The Right Hon. Norman Lamont MP (Chancellor of the Exchequer).

Interest Rates

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the interest rates in Britain and other EC countries.

Mr. Nelson: United Kingdom short-term interest rates are the lowest in the EC.

Kerrey Inquiry

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the departments and agencies of Her Majesty's Government which provided evidence to the Kerrey inquiry in the United States of America; and if he will place all such evidence which has been published in the Library.

Mr. Nelson: No Departments or agencies of Her Majesty's Government provided evidence to Senator Kerrey's inquiry into the Bank of Credit and Commerce International, nor did Senator Kerrey seek to check the accuracy of his report with them.

Retail Prices Index

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the rate of increase in the retail prices index (a) including and (b) excluding, housing costs in (i) the year, (ii) the six-month period and (iii) the three-month period to October; and if he will estimate the effect on the price index of including rents, but excluding mortgage costs.

Mr. Nelson: The table shows the percentage changes in the relevant components of the retail prices index for the periods specified up to September 1992, the latest date for which information is available.

Retail Prices Index: September 1992

	Index	Percentage change over
	(January 1987 = 100)	Twelve months	Six months	Three months
All items	139·4	3·6	2·0	0·1
All items except housing	134·9	3·5	1·4	–0·1
All items except mortgage interest payments	137·3	4·0	2·1	0·1

Note: The housing group of the retail prices index comprises rents in both the public and private sectors, mortgage interest payments, Community charges, water and sewerage charges, dwelling insurance and ground rent, repairs and maintenance charges and do-it-yourself materials.

Output

Mr. Hain: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give figures for the percentage increases between 1979 and 1991 of (a) consumer expenditure at constant prices, (b) output, (c) output excluding North sea oil production and (d) manufacturing output.

Mr. Nelson: The percentage increases, derived at constant 1985 prices, are (a) 37·5, (b) 23·6, (c) 21·8 and (d) 5·8 respectively.

Bank and Insurance Company Accounts

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what checks he performs on bank and insurance company accounts when they are filed at Companies House.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I have been asked to reply.

The Registrar of Companies informs me that accounts delivered to him for filing, including those of banks and insurance companies, are checked to ensure that they comprise the appropriate documents—in the majority of cases, profit and loss account, balance sheet, directors' report and auditors' report—are duly signed and cover the appropriate period. The accounts are then made available for public inspection.

Insurance companies also deliver accounts to the insurance division of my Department under the provisions of the Insurance Companies Act 1982. These are subjected to manual and computer checks covering correctness, consistency with previous accounts and solvency.

I am advised that the Bank of England carries out its own checks on copies of accounts of banking companies, which are sent direct to them by the companies concerned.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Fact-finding Visits

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the fact-finding visits made in the last 12 months by the chief executive of each executive agency for which he is responsible; and what were the findings resulting from each visit.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to both Wilton Park under its chief executive, Geoffrey Denton, and to the Natural Resources Institute under its chief executive, Anthony Beattie. I have asked them to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from G. Denton to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 29 October 1992:

Thank you for your question about the number of fact finding visits made by the Chief Executive of this Agency in the last twelve months.

During the year in question I did not make any fact finding visits.

Letter from A. Beattie to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 28 October 1992:

Lady Chalker has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question about fact-finding visits by chief executives of Agencies.

On 8 November 1991 I visited Hadlow College in Kent to brief myself on the College's facilities and courses. On 8 May this year I went to the EC's centre for Tropical Agriculture (CTA) at Wageningen in The Netherlands to explore the scope for collaboration between the Centre and NRI and to sign a memorandum of understanding covering joint activities.

Overseas Territories

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the proposed citizenship status under the treaty of European union, of citizens of (a) French overseas territories and (b) British dependent territories.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The declaration on nationality of a member state accompanying the treaty on European Union states:

> "the question whether an individual possesses the nationality of a member state shall be settled solely by reference to the national law of the member state concerned."

Under the United Kingdom declaration on the definition of United Kingdom nationals for European Community purposes, made on accession and revised in January 1983, the only British dependent territories citizens so defined are those > "who acquire their citizenship from a connection with Gibraltar".

These are accordingly the only BDTCs eligible for citizenship of the European union. It is not for us to comment on French nationality law.

Indonesia

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps have been taken in respect of British arms trading with Indonesia under the terms of the European Council of Ministers declaration at Lisbon on non-proliferation and arms exports.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None. The sale of arms and defence equipment to all destinations, including Indonesia, is subject to strict export licensing procedures. In the United Kingdom's case, the criterion agreed at the Lisbon European Council was already taken into consideration when making export licensing decisions.

Haiti

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what initiatives he has taken to encourage constitutional rule in Haiti.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We issued a statement and co-sponsored United Nations General Assembly resolution 46/7 condemning the coup and calling for the restoration of democracy in Haiti. Along with our EC partners, we continue to support the efforts of the Organisation of American States (OAS) to broker a settlement: a senior British diplomat represented the presidency on a recent OAS mission to Haiti.

EC General Affairs

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, at the next General Affairs Council, he will propose that its next meeting shall be held wholly or partially in public, pursuant to its order of procedure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: At its next meeting on 9 November the General Affairs Council, as instructed by the European Council at Birmingham, will discuss ways in which all Councils can conduct their business in a more open and transparent way. As Chairman of the Council, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs will call upon Foreign Ministers to consider a number of ideas including the question of whether, and under what circumstances, Council meetings should be held in open session.

Mahammed Afzal

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps have been taken to help the Pakistani authorities to apprehend the killers of Mahammed Afzal in Jaurah village, Pakistan, on 4 October.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Mr. Afzal was a dual British-Pakistani national, and the United Kingdom has no standing under international law to intervene in the investigation of his murder, which is being conducted by the Pakistani police. Our high commission in Islamabad is, however, maintaining contact with the Pakistani authorities.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

National Music Day

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will support a national music day in 1993.

Mr. Brooke: Following the success of the national music day on 28 June this year, I am pleased to confirm my commitment to a further national music day in 1993. This will take place on Sunday 27 June.

Redundant Churches Fund

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement about the implementation of the Wilding report on the redundant churches fund.

Mr. Key: A number of the recommendations made by Richard Wilding in his report are for the Church Commissioners to implement through amendment of the Pastoral Measure 1983. The General Synod, which meets next week, will have before it a draft amending measure. Should Synod approve the amending measure, I intend to bring forward legislation to amend the Redundant Churches and other Religious Buildings Act 1969 so that my Department's grant to the redundant churches fund can in future be paid through the Church Commissioners rather than directly to the fund. This was a key recommendation of the Wilding report, and will strengthen the role of the Commissioners as the focal point for the review of policy, the selection of priorities and the matching of expenditure with resources.

Items in Lieu of Tax

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if there have been any offers accepted in lieu of tax or allocated since his predecessor's announcement on 16 June.

Mr. Brooke: Since my predecessor's announcement on 16 June, Official Report, colimns 448-9, I am pleased to inform the House of the acceptance of two offers in lieu of tax, and the allocation of three offers previously accepted. A further payment has also been made for an offer accepted last year.

The offers are:

A painting by Beccafumi, "San Bernardino preaching in the Campo at Siena", together with a chalk study for the painting, and two diagrams by Michelangelo, satisfying £119,000 tax, and

A sculpture by Henry Moore which will satisfy £87,500 tax.

The sculpture will be allocated to Leeds city art gallery. A decision on the allocation of the Beccafumi and Michelangelo diagrams has yet to be taken.

Three offers, previously accepted, have now been allocated.

An offer of a collection of eight contemporary paintings:

"Bomb store" by David Bomberg
"Self-portrait, recto and verso" by David Bomberg
"Ghetto theatre" by David Bomberg
"Woman and goat" by Robert Colquhoun
"Two Figures Monotype" Robert Colquhoun
"Man hosing metal fish boxes" by Prunella Clough
"Pears" by William Scott
An untitled work by Roger Hilton

"Bomb store" by David Bomberg and the Prunella Clough painting have been allocated to the Tate gallery and the remainder to the Wakefield city art gallery.

An offer comprising of a vintage motorcar and two motor-cycles. The car will go to the national motor museum and the motor-cycles to the Bradford industrial museum and the tank museum.

An offer comprising a Rembrandt etching and 31 illuminated manuscripts will go to the national art collections fund.

The further payment for the Statham collection of porcelain will be £4,333·51.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Cattle

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what systems he has to ensure that payments for cattle sold into the Irish Republic can be traced to buyers in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: None. The question of payment for cattle sold in Northern Ireland is a private matter between the seller and purchaser and, if the sale is through a livestock market, the operator of the market.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action has been taken to trace cattle movements through herd book registers in Northern Ireland to identify smuggling activity into the Irish Republic.

Mr. Hanley: Checks on herd registers as a means of tracing illegal movements of cattle are ineffective. The legal movement of cattle between herds, to and from livestock markets and to slaughterhouses is recorded for purposes of animal disease control. The export of cattle to the Republic of Ireland is prohibited, except in very limited circumstances, for bovine spongiform encephalopathy reasons. This means that permits for movements to the Republic are not normally requested and such movements would not therefore be recorded in herd registers.

Cold Weather Payments Scheme

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many households in East Antrim qualified for payment under the cold weather payments scheme during the winter period 1991-92.

Mr. Hanley: Social security operational matters are the responsibility of the chief executive of the Social Security Agency. However, I understand that the cold weather payment system was not triggered in any part of Northern Ireland during the winter period 1991-92 and consequently no one qualified for payment under the scheme.

Farm Buildings

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will extend the qualifying size condition for grant in respect of replacement dwellings on farms beyond the present 100 sq m restriction.

Mr. Atkins: Whilst existing floor area is not a factor when considering applications for grant for a replacement house or farmhouse, a replacement dwelling with a standard floor area of 100 sq m—1,050 sq ft—is regarded as reasonable to meet normal family requirements. In cases where specific family need can be established, such as accommodation for a disabled person, alleviating overcrowding or providing facilities to accommodate additional farm workers, and where these cannot be met within the standard 100 sq m floor area the Housing Executive, which administers this scheme, has discretion to exceed that standard.

Although farms which were certified as "viable" by the Department of Agriculture, used to enjoy preferential treatment for grants purposes, such status gave no automatic entitlement to a particular size of floor area. Applicants for grant aid who can demonstrate the need for additional floor space will not, therefore, be disadvantaged under the replacement grant scheme.

Health Service

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the background to the review of services at Altnagelvin area hospital and detailing the reorganisation of services including relocation of wards, changes in speciality ward numbers, introduction of new facilities and the closure or phasing out of any existing facilities.

Mr. Hanley: The Western health and social services board has established a project review group, supported by the management consultant firm of Coopers and Lybrand Deloitte, to undertake a strategic review of acute services and associated requirements at Altnagelvin hospital.

The review group's recommendations will be considered by the Western board at its meeting on 30 November 1992, following which the board will submit proposals to the Department of Health and Social Services for consideration.

In the meantime a £6·6 million external re-cladding scheme for the hospital has already been approved and is at present in planning.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what contacts have been made between the management executive and units in the Western health and social services board regarding proposals or potential applications for moving to HSS trust status.

Mr. Hanley: The working paper "Self-Governing Hospitals in Northern Ireland—An Initial Guide" was issued in January 1990 and all units of management within the health and personal social services were invited to express an interest in becoming health and social services trusts. The initial guide was replaced by an updated version entitled "HSS: A Working Guide" which was also issued to every unit of management. After the first round, the chief executive of the management executive wrote to unit general managers in all four boards inviting expressions of interest in a second round. No expressions of interest have been received from any unit within the Western health and social services board in either round.

Industrial Relations Legislation

Mr. Cormack: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to introduce further industrial relations legislation.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Bill at present before the House includes an enablement whereby certain provisions may be extended to Northern Ireland by means of an Order in Council subject to negative resolution procedure. The provisions to be extended to Northern Ireland deal with EC obligations—relating to proof of an employment relationship, procedures for handling redundancies and protection against dismissal of health and safety workers—employment rights—relating to pregnant workers, sex discrimination and industrial tribunals procedures—and the abolition of wages councils. It is my intention to introduce such an order as soon as possible following Royal Assent.

The application to Northern Ireland of provisions equivalent to the remainder of the Bill, and also the provisions of the Employment Act 1990, will be considered in due course following discussions with local bodies.

Independent Living Fund

Mr. Wells: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the cash limit, NID2, for the independent living fund.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The cash limit for the independent living fund (NID2) in 1992-93 will be reduced by £247,000 from £5,298,000 to £5,051,000. The cash limit is being reduced because of an overspend in 1991-92.

EMPLOYMENT

Wages Councils

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the lowest and the mean rates of pay discovered in wages council industries.

Mr. McLoughlin: In April 1992 the mean rate paid to workers on adult rates of pay in wages council industries was £5.05 an hour. The minimum basic rates currently range from £2.59 to £3.10 an hour.

Sunday Trading

Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what research she has commissioned into the likely effectiveness and enforceability of legal measures intended to protect shop managers and employees who do not wish to work on Sundays.

Mr. McLoughlin: None. The Government will shortly be announcing their intentions regarding the current legislation governing Sunday trading.

Protective Headwear (Sikhs)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will arrange to exempt Sikhs from EC regulations requiring those people in certain occupations to wear protective headwear in their place of work; what representations she has received on this matter; what consultations EC institutions are undertaking with Sikh organisations and others; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment has no plans to arrange for a general exemption for turban wearing followers of the Sikh religion from the regulations to implement the European directive on the use of personal protective equipment at work. Nor has she any plans to remove the existing exemption for such Sikhs on construction sites. The Secretary of State has received a number of representations from Sikh organisations and others on this issue, to which she and Ministers of this Department have responded individually. Consultations which EC institutions undertake are a matter for those institutions themselves.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to her answer of 29 June, Official Report, column 418, if she will now provide the figures for training and enterprise council budgets and contracts for 1992-93 in the same form as her answer.

Mr. McLoughlin: The tables show the budgets and volumes agreed for each training and enterprise council in England for 1992-93.

Information relating to Wales and Scotland is for the respective Secretaries of State to provide.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Price Marking Order 1991

Mr. McFall: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representation he has received from the retail industry relating to the Price Marketing Order 1991.

Mr. Leigh: My Department has received a number of representations from the British Retail Consortium, and its constituent organisations, expressing concern about how some aspects of the order apply to them.

Mr. McFall: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on his plans to amend the Price Marking Order 1991.

Mr. Leigh: This order has been looked at in detail in the light of representations received. The issues involved are complex, but my Department will be in a position to discuss the way forward with interested parties shortly.

Nuclear Power

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consultations and communications his Department has had in regard to the establishment of a structure for the forthcoming review of nuclear power; and what criteria he plans to adopt in setting out the remit for the review.

Mr. Eggar: My Department is considering the form and content of the 1994 review of the future prospects for nuclear power in the United Kingdom including the need to provide for appropriate public and parliamentary consultation. The precise terms of reference will take account of any relevant conclusions reached as a result of the review of the coal industry currently being undertaken by my Department.

Pit Closures

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what environmental implications were taken into account in the original announcement for the closure of 31 pits.

Mr. Eggar: This is an operational matter for British Coal.

Citizens Advice Bureaux

Dr. Wright: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he proposes to take to extend the support and resources provided to citizens advice bureaux to enable them to meet their increased work load.

Mr. Leigh: The Department of Trade and Industry funds the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux—NACAB—and the Citizens' Advice Scotland—CAS—which provide the central support services for the local bureaux in England, Wales and Scotland. Similarly, the Northern Ireland Office funds the Northern Ireland Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux—NIACAB. Since 1982, the total grant in aid to these bodies has more than doubled from around £5·7 million in 1982-83 to around £12·6 million in 1991-92—an increase of more than 30 per cent. in real terms. Total grant in aid in 1992-93 is expected to be more than £13·2 million, representing a 5 per cent. increase over 1991-92 which is above the rate of inflation.

The funding of individual bureaux is a matter for local authorities based on their own assessment of local needs and the resources available. However, although the Government do not fund individual citizens advice bureaux, directly, the grant in aid to the central organisation does include provision to develop the local network through partnership agreements with local authorities on a strictly time-limited basis.

Supervisory Bodies

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on what basis he will be reviewing the operations of the recognised supervisory bodies in 1993.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: When the supervisory bodies for auditors were granted recognition last year under the Companies Act 1989, it was agreed with them that it would be appropriate for the bodies to review jointly with my Department in 1993 the operation of their procedures for monitoring compliance by their members with their rules.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what examination he made of the disciplinary procedures of the Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales before granting it recognised supervisory body status.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: My Department's examination of the institute's application for recognition as a supervisory body for auditors under part II of, and schedule 11 to, the Companies Act 1989 was such as to enable the Secretary of State to determine whether the statutory requirements were satisfied.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the relationship between the Auditing Practices Board and the recognised supervisory body regime established under the Companies Act 1989.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Paragraph 8 of schedule 11 to the Companies Act 1989 requires recognised supervisory bodies to have rules and practices governing both the technical standards which their auditor members must apply in company audit work and the manner in which those standards are to be applied. The recognised supervisory bodies have bound themselves to adopt the standards and guidelines issued by the Auditing Practices Board and they require their auditor members to comply with those standards.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what statutory provisions govern the recourse of members of the public to recognised supervisory bodies.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Paragraph 12 of schedule 11 to the Companies Act 1989 requires the recognised supervisory bodies to have effective arrangements for the investigation of complaints, both against persons who are eligible under their rules to be appointed as company auditors and for the investigation of complaints against the supervisory bodies themselves in respect of matters arising out of their functions as such. The Companies Act 1989 (Register of Auditors and Information about Audit Firms) Regulations 1991 also require the recognised supervisory bodies to maintain and make available to the public a register of individuals and firms eligible for appointment as company auditor and certain information about firms so registered.

Public Limited Companies

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will bring forward proposals to require public limited companies in their notes to their annual accounts to show the number of employees who earn less than £209 per week.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: No.

Company Auditors

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals he has for legislation under which company auditors would owe a duty of care to individual shareholders.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I have no such proposals.

Accountants

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he will provide a list of the organisations which he consults before appointing accountants as inspectors.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: No. Before making such appointments, my Department makes such inquiries as are necessary and takes all relevant considerations into account.

Exports

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he will publish a table showing for the United Kingdom, United States of America, Germany, France, Italy and Japan the change in relative export values for manufactures each year since 1962, on the basis of the second half of 1973 = 100, together with the change in share of exports of manufactures.

Mr. Needham: The information requested for relative export values is not available on a consistent basis before 1975. The available information is published in table F8 of the CSO publication "Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics", which is available from the House of Commons Library. Data for changes in the shares of exports of manufactured goods are given in the table.

Share Options

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals he has to require company directors to give information about share options in the directors' report.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: A director is required to disclose certain information concerning share options to the company, and this must be entered in the company's register of directors' interests, which is open to public inspection. Certain information regarding options must also be disclosed in either the directors' report or the notes to the accounts. Moreover, a director is not permitted to buy options in shares in a listed company. I am aware that disclosure generally is under discussion as part of the public debate on corporate governance.

Financial Reporting Council

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received in favour of the transfer of the Auditing Practices Board to the Financial Reporting Council.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I have received no such representations.

Auditing Firms

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he will provide a list showing the names of the auditing firms that have been criticised five or more times in his Department's inspectors' reports published since 1988.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Since 1988 there have been five published reports of inspectors appointed under the Companies Act containing criticism of constituent firms of what is now Ernst and Young, chartered accountants.

Polly Peck

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will dismiss the Polly Peck administrators.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The power of appointment and removal of an administrator rests with the court, not with the President of the Board of Trade.

Firework Safety

Dr. Wright: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what effect the single European market will have on firework safety in the United Kingdom; and if he will make it his policy to ensure that any European standard is at least as high as the existing British Standard (BS 7114) on firework safety.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 2 November 1992]: The single European market should not have an immediate direct effect on fireworks safety in the United Kingdom. The United Kingdom delegation on the CEN technical committee will continue to try to ensure that any European standard for fireworks matches the high standards of safety in the United Kingdom; work on producing such a standard is some years away from completion.

First Stop Shops

Mr. David Porter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on how his proposed first stop shops to support local businesses in Suffolk and Norfolk will be implemented; and how overlap with existing agencies will be avoided.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 2 November 1992]: Following extensive consultation, my Department will be issuing a prospectus inviting bids to operate up to 15 pilot one-stop shops in England. The bids will be drawn together by the training and enterprise councils and a key criterion for success will be that the bids clearly demonstrate an active partnership between all the relevant local business support agencies. Following the evaluation of the pilot operating a national network will be established.

Coal Subsidies

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will give details of those subsidies which have been made to the mining operations of British Coal in each of the last eight quarter year periods for which figures are available.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 2 November 1992]: Figures for financial assistance to British Coal by quarter are not readily available. Government grants paid to British Coal in the last two financial years, 1991-92 and 1990-91, were £709 million and £1,822 million respectively. In addition, British Coal benefited by about £1 billion in both years from the high margins, over and above world market prices, that the electricity generators are obliged to pay for their coal supplies from the corporation under present contracts.

Animal Testing

Mr. Hardy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy that the use of animals in skin and eye irritant testing of cosmetic materials will be ended during or before 1998.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 4 November 1992]: In March we called on the European Community to set 1998 as a target date for the replacement of animal tests for skin and eye irritancy, subject to there being validated non-animal alternatives.

Estate Agency Fees

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will investigate the attempt to form a cartel to control the fee structure of estate agency business in part or parts of scotland by Slater Hogg and Howison, Ron Slater Estate Agents Ltd. and Royal Life Estates.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 5 November 1992]: Any attempt to control the fee structure of estate agency business in any part of the United Kingdom is a matter for the Director General of Fair Trading, Sir Bryan Carsberg, to consider. Any evidence of possible anti-competitive agreements should be submitted to Sir Bryan.

Point of Ayr Colliery

Mr. Hanson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the socio-economic consequences of the closure of Point of Ayr colliery, north Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I have been asked to reply. As the hon. Gentleman will know, a review of the proposed closure of 21 pits is under way and a moratorium has been announced on these proposals while the review takes place. My Department is in discussions with the North East Wales TEC, the Welsh Development Agency and local authorities on measures to promote economic diversification and employment opportunities in the area.

HEALTH

Agencies

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list by grade the numbers of staff and their cost for 1991-92 and the estimated figures for 1992-93, for each executive agency for which she is responsible.

Dr. Mawhinney: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the National Health Service Estates agency under its chief executive, Mr. John Locke, and to the Medicines Control Agency under its chief executive, Dr. Keith Jones. I have asked them to reply to the hon. Member.

Letter from K. Jones to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 5 November 1992:

The Secretary of State for Health will have advised that your recent Parliamentary Question would be answered directly by the Chief Executives of the Agencies concerned. I have set out below the response for the Medicines Control Agency.

Numbers of staff, by grade, are as follows:

Unified Grade 3	1	1
Unified Grade 4	5	5
Unified Grade 5	23	26
Unified Grade 6	13	13
Unified Grade 7	51	53
Senior Executive Officer/Pharmaceutical Officer I/Senior Scientific Officer	32	33
Higher Executive Officer/Pharmaceutical Officer II/Higher Professional and Technical Officer/Higher Scientific Officer	29	29
Executive Officer/Scientific Officer	40	42
Administrative Officer/Assistant Scientific Officer	37	40
Administrative Assistant	65	67
Senior Personal Secretary	6	6
Personal Secretary	32	33
Typist/Support Grade Band I	2	2
Support Grade Band II	4	4
Totals	340	354

Total costs[3] are as follows:

	(£000)	(£000)
Salaries, National Insurance, and Superannuation:	9,039	9,750

[2] Estimated numbers and costs.

[3] Cost of permanent and temporary staff as shown in the Agency's Annual Report and Accounts.

I regret it is not possible to show costs by grade, as staff budgeting in the MCA is based on functional businesses.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Letter from J. Locke to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 5 November 1992:

I have been asked by the Secretary of State for Health to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question (No. 1515) regarding Agency staff. Please find attached the number and cost for each grade as recorded in the 1991-92 Annual Report and estimates for 1992-93. The salaries disclosed do not include Employer's National Insurance Contributions or Superannuation.

On the 1 April 1992, the Agency absorbed the Works Information Management System Centre of Responsibility from the North East Thames Regional Health Authority, including their 12 posts.

In April 1993 the Agency will be relocating to Leeds in West Yorkshire. A proportion of London based staff will not be relocating, and the 1992-93 estimate includes the additional cost of advance recruitment.

London Ambulance Service

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in what percentage of incidents the London ambulance service failed to meet its call-out time standards in each month of the current year to date; and what were the figures for the equivalent months in each of the past five years.

Mr. Sackville: Monthly details of the response times of ambulance services are not collected centrally. The available information is in the table.

Summary of response times of the London Ambulance Service—1987-88 to 1991-92

	Total emergency calls	Percentage where response time within performance standard 1	Percentage where response time within performance standard 2
1987-88	470,348	21	85
1988-89	451,150	18	83
1989-90	231,294	14	79
1990-91	456,659	11	74
1991-92	472,310	15	64

Performance standard 1: 50 per cent. of ambulances to respond within seven minutes up to 1990-91 and eight minutes in 1991-92.

Performance standard 2: 95 per cent. of ambulances to respond within 14 minutes.

(i) The number of calls received in 1989-90 are low due to the ambulance dispute which took place during that year.

(ii) 1991-92 figures are provisional.

The response time of an ambulance is the time taken from an emergency call being received, to the arrival of a fully equipped vehicle at the patient's location.

These figures are likely to underestimate the performance of the LAS because percentages relate to the total number of calls and not all calls result in a response.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many complaints have been received (a) by her Department and (b) by the London ambulance service in each month of the current year to date about delays or failures by the London ambulance service in responding to (i) emergency and (ii) other calls; and how many of these have involved incidents in which patients have died between the time at which the call was logged and the time at which the patient was delivered to hospital.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many complaints she has had from the public about the condition of the London ambulance service since the introduction of the computerised system.

Mr. Sackville: There has been widespread concern and a large number of complaints have been made about the emergency services of the London ambulance service.

My right hon. Friend announced to the House, on 28 October, an external inquiry into the operation of the computer-aided dispatch system and the circumstances surrounding its failure on 26 and 27 October. My right hon. Friend has today announced further details of the terms of reference and composition of the inquiry which will also enquire into the further failure of the system on 4 November.

Every allegation that a patient died as a result of the computer failure will be investigated by the acting chief executive of the London ambulance service.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent meetings she has held with the director of the London ambulance service; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Sackville: The South West Thames regional health authority is responsible for the London ambulance service. My right hon. Friend met Professor Marian Hicks, chairman of South West Thames regional health authority, members of the South West Thames regional health authority management team and Mr. James Harris, chairman of the London ambulance service on 16 October 1992. There was a full discussion about the reasons for the unsatisfactory performance of the London ambulance service in responding to emergency calls.

My right hon. Friend had a further meeting with the regional general manager of SW Thames RHA and the acting chief executive of the London ambulance service on 3 November.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what internal audit has been done of the purchase and efficiency of the London ambulance service computer.

Mr. Sackville: The purchase of the computer-aided dispatch system by the London ambulance service was subject to the South West Thames regional health authority standing orders and standing financial instructions. The RHA is satisfied that these were complied with.

The development of the system was managed by a project board in line with the PRINCE project management methodology. During the development phase the component parts were tested on dummy data.

The system would ordinarily have been subject to a post implementation review but due to the problems experienced following full implementation, the London ambulance service reverted to a part manual system. Following a further failure on 4 November the London ambulance service had now reverted to a full manual system. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced in the House on 28 October, that there will be an external inquiry into the operation of the computer-aided dispatch system. Further details of the terms of reference and composition of the inquiry were announced today.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many different ambulance controls systems have been installed at the headquarters of the London ambulance service over the past 15 years; what was their cost; and what were the reasons for their abandonment.

Mr. Sackville: I am advised that an ambulance control system was originally commissioned at a cost of £1·8 million by South West Thames regional health authority which was responsible for the management of the London ambulance service. When the London ambulance service board was established, in August 1990, the system was found to be inoperable. The new board tendered for a new computer based system in the same year and this has been phased in over the last six months, at a capital cost of about £1·5 million. Following the failure of this system on 26 and 27 October and 4 November a decision was made to revert to manual control. The reasons for the failure are being investigated.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current condition of the London ambulance service computer; and how many times it has broken down since installation.

Mr. Sackville: The computer-aided dispatch (CAD) system failed on 26 and 27 October. On 4 November the system was malfunctioning and management at the London ambulance service decided to revert to a fully manual system. The computerised system will not be brought back into use until the problems have been solved. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has announced today details of the external inquiry set up by the South West Thames regional health authority into these failures.

Mr. Thomason: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give details of the external inquiry into the London ambulance service which she announced on 28 October.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I have today agreed the terms of reference and composition of the independent inquiry which the South West Thames regional health authority has set up on the London ambulance service. The inquiry's terms of reference are:

> "To examine the operation of the computer-aided dispatch system, including:
>
> the circumstances surrounding its failures on Monday and Tuesday 26 and 27 October and Wednesday 4 November
>
> the process of its procurement
> and to identify the lessons to be learned for the operation and management of the London Ambulance Service against the imperatives of delivering the service at the required standard, demonstrating good working relationships and restoring public confidence."

The inquiry will be led by Mr. Don Page, chief executive of the South Yorkshire ambulance service. Other members of the inquiry will be Mr. Paul Williams, a specialist in computer systems from BDO Binder Hamlyn Chartered Accountants, and Mr. Dennis Boyd, formerly chief conciliation officer of the Arbitration, Conciliation Advisory Service (ACAS).

The inquiry has been asked to report to the South West Thames RHA by February 1993 at the latest and to highlight any action, where necessary, for the chief executive of the London ambulance service. The report will be published. The chairman of the RHA will report to me on its outcomes, and will keep me informed of progress in improving service performance during the inquiry period and beyond.

Smoking

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate she has made of the comparative influences of (a) price, (b) parental smoking and (c) tobacco advertising bans on smoking habits.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is difficult to estimate the comparative influences of the different factors on smoking habits. The influence of each factor taken alone can be summarised as follows:

(a) increases in price have been shown to decrease consumption, though by a proportionately smaller amount. For example, a 10 per cent. increase in price will lead to a 3 per cent. to 6 per cent. decrease in consumption;

(b) children whose parents both smoke are two and a half times more likely to smoke than children whose parents do not smoke;

(c) the Department of Health discussion document, titled "Effect of tobacco advertising on tobacco consumption", looks at the effect of tobacco advertising bans. It was published on 28 October and comments have been invited on it over the next three months.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will list for each study examined by her Department of the effect of advertising on tobacco consumption the final year of data, the level of participation in smoking in that year, the present level and the estimated reduction associated with a ban; and what conclusions she has drawn on the effect if these results were replicated in the United Kingdom in the same years;

(2) if she will list the information available to her of the year and the level of smoking when an advertising ban was introduced and the levels of smoking in this country in each of those years.

Dr. Mawhinney: The figures for those countries studied in the Department of Health discussion document "Effect of tobacco advertising on tobacco consumption" are as follows:

Per cent.

Country	Final year of data before ban	Smoking level in relevant country in that year	Present level in relevant country	Consumption reduction associated with ban	United Kingdom prevalence in year of ban
Norway	1975	43	34	9	45 (1974)
Finland	1977	29	(1985) 26	7	42 (1976)
Canada	1989	[1]	32	4	32 (1988)
New Zealand	1990	28	26	5·6	30 (1990)

It is unclear whether the effect of a tobacco advertising ban in these countries would be replicated in the United Kingdom, given the fall in smoking in the United Kingdom from 45 per cent. of the population in 1974 to 30 per cent. in 1990 and the existing controls on tobacco advertising through the voluntary agreement on tobacco advertising and promotion.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will estimate the contribution of the major factors in the reduction of smoking in the past 20 years in this country and in other countries since the introduction of a ban on advertising.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is difficult to estimate the contribution of the major factors in reducing smoking in this country. Perhaps the most important factor has been the increasing social unacceptability of smoking, with increased awareness of the health risks of smoking and passive smoking. It is also difficult to estimate the contribution of various factors in other countries. The Department of Health report, titled "Effect of tobacco advertising on tobacco consumption", reviews the evidence on the effect of advertising bans in other countries.

Tinnitus

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money has been allocated for research into the cause and treatment of tinnitus in each of the past three years in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Sackville: It is not possible to identify centrally funds allocated for research into the treatment of tinnitus.

The main agency through which the Government support medical and clinical research in the United Kingdom is the Medical Research Council (MRC) which receives its grant-in-aid from the Office of Science and Technology under the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

In 1991-92, the latest year for which figures are available, the MRC spent £129,000 on research into tinnitus. The council also supports a substantial volume of basic research into hearing which may have relevance to the understanding and treatment of this condition.

Influenza

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what monitoring her Department is undertaking as to the effectiveness of family health authorities, general medical practitioners, regional medical officers and district medical officers in implementing the advice of the Chief Medical Officer of 21 September on the immunisation of groups at risk from influenza; and if she will make a statement as to the results.

Mr. Sackville: The Department monitors the national uptake of influenza vaccine each year. In addition, the public health laboratory service's communicable disease surveillance centre monitors laboratory reports of influenza—and other respiratory tract infections—and provides regular information for health authorities through its communicable disease review. It is for directors of public health to decide what data to collect locally in assessing health care needs, including protection against influenza. Steps have been taken in the past two years to ensure that both doctors and patients are aware of the benefits of influenza immunisation for those patients who are at increased risk of complications should they develop influenza. This includes the production of guidance leaflets for general practitioners, revised guidance in the 1992 edition of "Immunisation against Infectious Disease" and a patient information poster for GPs' surgeries.

Hydatid Disease

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current incidence of hydatid disease.

Mr. Sackville: Interim figures from the public health laboratory service indicate an average of five cases a year presumed to be acquired in England and Wales for the last three years—1988 to 1990—of its current survey into hydatid disease. This figure may be subject to amendment by the time the survey is completed at the end of this year. The final results of the survey will be published.

Health Services, Coventry

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of people each year having NHS eye tests in the Coventry health authority area in each year since 1987.

Dr. Mawhinney: Figures are not collected in respect of district health authorities. The numbers of national health service sight tests paid for in each financial year by the Coventry family health services authority are shown in the table.

Year	Number of sight tests
1987-88	75,470
1988-89	86,610
[1]1989-90	31,500
1990-91	28,200
1991-92	36,440

[1] From April 1989, national health service sight tests were restricted to certain groups in the population. The sight tests paid for in 1989-90 include some carried out prior to that date. The remainder paid for in 1989-90 do not represent a full year under the new system, because of the delay in payments. The figure for 1989-90 is not, therefore, directly comparable with 1990-91.

Health Care, London

Ms. Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she will formally consult on the establishment of a new St. Thomas's and Guy's national health service trust; and when she expects to announce her decision on whether to grant the new hospital trust status.

Dr. Mawhinney: Consultation on Sir Bernard Tomlinson's recommendation that the St. Thomas's and Guy's and Lewisham national health service trusts should be dissolved, and a new St. Thomas's and Guy's national health service trust, and a Lewisham national health service trust established will be managed by South East Thames regional health authority and should begin shortly. It will last for three months. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will announce her decision only when that consultation is completed.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the members of the implementation group for Tomlinson on the future of London's health care; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The chairman of the London implementation group will be Mr. Tim Chessells. I shall announce the other members in due course.

Deaths (Unemployed)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information her Department has on the number of unemployed people who (a) committed suicide, (b) died prematurely or (c) suffered clinical depression in each year since 1979.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is not available centrally.

Family Breakdown

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will outline her policy on the prevention of family breakdown.

Mr. Yeo: The Department's view is that the family is the best place for a child to be brought up. This is reflected in the provisions of the Children Act 1989 which, among other requirements, gives local authorities the duty to provide such services for children in need to enable them to be brought up by their family, wherever possible.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of hospitals in the north-west of England are, or have applied to be, self-governing trusts.

Dr. Mawhinney: Fifty-three per cent. of hospital and community service revenue allocated to North Western regional health authority is currently spent in national health service trusts, or units which have applied to be trusts. From April 1993 there will be eight NHS trusts in the region which provide acute hospital services. The proportion this represents depends on the management configuration of the remaining units, but it is likely that the vast majority will apply to become operational trusts from April 1994.

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what forecasts she has made for the future ratio in the number of self-governing national health service trust hospitals to district health authority hospitals; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is for local managers and clinicians to decide whether to seek NHS trust status, but we anticipate that all providers of NHS services—hospitals, community units and ambulance services—will become NHS trusts. From next April the proportion of hospital and community services revenue spent in NHS trusts will be 63 per cent. or more, depending on the decisions on outstanding third wave trust applications and deferred London teaching hospital trusts. We expect the vast majority of the remaining directly managed units to apply to become NHS trusts in April 1994.

Kidney Dialysis

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) males and (b) females (i) under and (ii) over the age of 55 years per million of the population, were accepted for kidney dialysis treatment in England in 1990 and 1991.

Mr. Sackville: The information is not collected centrally in the form requested. The number of new patients accepted for dialysis was 3,491—60.7 per million population—in 1990 and 3,430—59.7 pmp—in 1991.

No national health service patient is barred from treatment on the grounds of age. Whether any patient should receive a particular form of treatment is a matter for clinical decision by the doctor in charge of the patient.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what additional revenue would be raised in the financial year 1993-94 by an increase in prescription charges of (a) 1 per cent., (b) 5 per cent., (c) 10 per cent. and (d) 15 per cent.; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The requested information is in the table.

Estimated additional revenue in 1993-94 from prescription charge set at 1 per cent., 5 per cent., 10 per cent., and 15 per cent. higher than current charge

Percentage increase in prescription charge	Prescription charge (£)	Increased revenue (£ million)
1	3·79	2
5	3·94	9
10	4·13	18
15	4·31	26

Regional Health Authorities (Property)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much, at current prices, was raised from the disposal of property in each regional health authority covering London in each year since 1990; what is the current projection of funds to be raised by such disposals in 1993-94; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table:

RHA	1990-91	1991-92	[1]1992-93	[1]1993-94
North West Thames	22	33	25	50

South East Thames	9	11	20	25
South West Thames	17	20	10-15	10

[1] RHA projection.

All money realised from the sale of surplus NHS property is used for the benefit of patients.

Halcion

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the members of the Medicines Commission which dealt with the appeal against the ban on Halcion.

Dr. Mawhinney: The appeal was heard by the Medicines Commission on 15 May 1992. The following members were present:

Professor Dame Rosalinde Hurley, DBE, LLB, MD DUniv (Surrey), FRCPath (Chairman). Professor of Microbiology, Royal Postgraduate Medical School's Institute of Obstetrics and Gynaecology, University of London.

Professor I. D. Aitken, PhD, BVMS, MRCVS. Director of Animal Diseases Research Association, Moredun Research Institute, Edinburgh.

M. J. S. Butler Esq, BSc (Econ). Lecturer in Politics and Public Administration, University of Kent. Former Chairman of Canterbury and Thanet CHC and Former Chairman of Association of CHC's for England and Wales.

Dr. M. G. Carter, MB ChB BPharm, DipPharmMed, FRPharmS, MCPP, FFPM, Director, ICI Pharmaceuticals.

Professor J. G. Collee, CBE, MD, FRCPath, FRCP(E). Emeritus Professor of Medical Microbiology, University of Edinburgh.

Professor A. D. Dayan, DM, FRCP, FRCPath, FIBiol, FFPM. Professor of Toxicology, St. Bartholomew's Hospital, London.

Dr. Sheila Gore, MA, PhD. Senior Statistician, Medical Research Council Biostatistics Unit, Cambridge.

Miss Joan Greenleaf, OBE, BA, FRPharmS. Former Regional Pharmaceutical Officer, North East Thames RHA.

B. D. Hoskin, Esq, BVMS, MRCVS. Consultant to Veterinary Pharmaceutical Industry.

Professor C. N. Hudson, MChir, FRCS, FRCOG, FRACOG. Professor of Obstetrics and Gynaecology, St. Bartholomew's Hospital, London.

Professor T. M. Jones, BPharm, PhD, FRPharmS, CChem, FRSC, MCPP. Director, Research, Development and Medical, Wellcome Foundation Ltd.

Professor D. G. McDevitt, MD, DSc, FRCP, FRCPed, FRCPI, FFPM. Professor of Clinical Pharmacology, University of Dundee.

Dr. P. Pietroni, FRCGP, MRCP, DCH. General Medical Practitioner, London, Senior Lecturer in General Practice, Regent's College, Regent's Park, London.

Professor John Rhodes, MD, FRCOP, BSc, ChB. General Physician, University Hospital of Wales.

Professor P. S. J. Spencer, BPharm, PhD (London) DSc (Wales) CBiol, FIBiol, MCPP, FRPharmS. Professor of Pharmacology and Head of School, Welsh School of Pharmacy, University of Wales, Cardiff.

Professor D. W. Vere, MD, FRCP, FFPM (Hon). Professor of Therapeutics, University of London.

H. Cowan Wilson Esq, BVMS, FRCVS. General Veterinary Practitioner, Fife.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the members of the committee dealing with the current appeal against the ban on Halcion.

Dr. Mawhinney: The members are:

Ms. Diana Cotton QC, Barrister (Chairman).
Professor J. A. Edwardson, Director of the MRC, Neurological and Pathology Unit, Newcastle-upon-Tyne.
Ms. Ann Foster, Director of the Scottish Consumer Council.
Professor David Marsden, Professor of Neurology at London University.
Professor Charles George, Professor of Clinical Pharmacology at Southampton University.

Lancashire Ambulance Authority

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the emergency response times for the Lancashire ambulance authority for each year since 1986 showing the percentage answered within eight minutes and within 20 minutes.

Mr. Sackville: Information on response times has only been collected centrally since 1987-88.

The available figures are shown in the table:

Year	Total emergency calls	Percentage where response within 8 minutes	Percentage where response within 20 minutes
1987-88	70,509	70·7	99·1
1988-89	70,561	71·2	99·2
1989-90	35,630	70·9	99·1
1990-91	73,640	67·1	98·9
1991-92[1]	71,414	67·3	98·9

[1] Provisional figures.

National Health Service Expenditure

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much was being spent on average on the national health service per week for each family in 1979 and at the latest available date.

Mr. Sackville: Total spending on the health service in the United Kingdom per week, for a family of four persons, was £11·05 in 1978-79—£31·28 at 1992-93 prices. Total spending in 1992-93 is planned to be £47·56, a real terms increase of 52 per cent.

Mental Handicap

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish for each district health authority for the current financial year (a) the planned capital and revenue expenditure on mental handicap—learning disabilities—services and (b) the value of assets relevant to mental handicap—learning disabilities—services listed in capital asset registers.

Mr. Yeo: This information is not held centrally.

ENVIRONMENT

Council Housing

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he proposes to extend compulsory competitive tendering to the management of council housing.

Mr. Baldry: Yes.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to offer financial incentives to local authorities that encourage tenant participation in planning, management and service delivery of housing provisions.

Mr. Baldry: The extent and effectiveness with which local authorities encourage appropriate tenant participation is taken into account in housing investment programme (HIP) allocations. The best authorities already deploy significant resources to encourage greater tenant participation, and the HIP process will offer clear incentives to others to follow their lead. My Department also makes grants in support of tenant management under section 16 of the Housing and Planning Act 1986.

Housing Allocations

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will issue to local authorities guidelines on equal opportunities and anti-discrimination within housing allocation policies and homelessness service provision.

Mr. Baldry: My Department issued to local authorities in August last year a revised code of guidance on the homelessness legislation. On 30 January 1991 the Commission for Racial Equality, with the Secretary of State's backing, issued a code of practice giving practical guidance on eliminating racial discrimination and promoting equal opportunities in the field of rented housing.

House Condition Survey

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish details of the 1991 house condition survey at an early date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The results of the 1991 English house condition survey will be published as soon as the analysis of the data is completed.

Staffordshire County Council

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will meet a delegation from Staffordshire county council to discuss the forthcoming standard spending assessment settlement.

Mr. Robin Squire: We would be pleased to receive a delegation as soon as proposals for the 1993-94 revenue support grant settlement have been announced.

Local Housing Companies

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to permit local authorities to set up local housing companies to stimulate new investment.

Mr. Baldry: Part V of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989, which sets out the statutory framework for local authority interests in companies, will be brought into force shortly. Any housing companies set up by local authorities would have to operate within this framework.

Housing Associations

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will review current arrangements for the administration of the housing association grant and the monitoring of financial and service delivery performances by housing associations.

Mr. Baldry: These matters are the statutory responsibility of the Housing Corporation, in respect of housing associations registered in England, and Housing for Wales —Tai Cymru—in respect of associations registered in Wales.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will issue guidelines to housing associations in Wales on tenant participation within housing association management committees.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I have been asked to reply. Housing for Wales is on course to issue guidelines to housing associations in Wales during this financial year.

Intentionality

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek the repeal of the intentionality clause in the Housing Act 1985.

Mr. Baldry: The Government have no immediate plans for further legislative change, although the operation of the homelessness legislation is monitored closely.

Mortgage Debts

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to provide funding for local authorities and housing associations to enable them to take on mortgage debts.

Mr. Baldry: No.

Homelessness

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek to amend section III of the Housing Act 1985 to cover all homeless people.

Mr. Baldry: The Government have no immediate plans for further legislative change, although the operation of the homelessness legislation is monitored closely.

Compulsory Competitive Tendering

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many tenants' organisations and individual tenants have responded to the consultation paper, "Competing for Quality in Housing"; and how many of these were in favour of compulsory competitive tendering.

Mr. Baldry: A total of 104 tenants' organisations and six individual tenants have responded to the Government's consultation paper, "Competing for Quality in Housing". A wide range of views were expressed on various aspects of the Government's proposals, including a substantial body of opinion that competitive tendering would lead to an improvement in standards.

Private Rented Housing

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will introduce a new improvement grants system for landlords in the private rented sector;

(2) if he will introduce a new improvement grants system for landlords in the private rental sector.

Mr. Baldry: No, but we continue to keep the grant system, including provisions relating to private landlords, under review.

Housing Needs

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the localised housing needs assessment research initiative currently carried out in England; and how much funding is provided by his Department to each initiative.

Mr. Baldry: Information about local housing needs assessments is not held centrally; funding is a matter for individual local authorities.

Subsidised Housing

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average subsidy from central and local government expenditure, including housing benefit for (a) council tenants, (b) housing association tenants and (c) private sector tenants, for the last period for which records are available.

Mr. Baldry: The information is as follows:

Council tenants: £970 in 1990-91, comprising rent rebates and the housing element in housing revenue account subsidy.
Housing association tenants: £550 in 1990 (estimate from a sample survey; rent allowances only).
Private sector tenants: £320 in 1990 (estimate from sample survey: rent allowances arranged over all rent-paying tenants).

Building Research Establishment

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish key performance targets for the Building Research Establishment.

Mr. Baldry: The Building Research Establishment has been an executive agency since 2 April 1990. The following key targets have been set for 1992-93:

—£19,000 net contribution to the Exchequer
—income to cover full economic costs on a trading basis
—non-Exchequer component to be 9·4 per cent. of total net income from research commissions
—a new unit cost ratio for research and technical consultancy commissions to be applied. (The ratio is a measure of the agency's overhead costs.)

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT AGENCY

Aid Target

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects the 0·7 per cent. gross national product target level for overseas aid to developing countries to be reached by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have not set down a timetable for reaching the 0·7 per cent. target. Progress towards the target will depend upon our economic circumstances and on other priorities for public expenditure.

Aid Funds

Ms. Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy, when allocating aid funds for eastern Europe, that resources will not be diverted from development projects in sub-Saharan Africa.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 5 November 1992]: The provision of economic assistance to central and eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union has not been at the expense of aid to developing countries. Future allocations of resources will be made in the light of the outcome of the public expenditure survey which cannot be anticipated.

Ms. Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy that emergency aid should not affect long-term development projects.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 5 November 1992]: We provide emergency aid in response to specific humanitarian requirements, with the objective of minimising loss of life. This funding is provided separately from that for long-term development projects, although these sometimes help reduce the damage caused by natural disasters.

Timber

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the effect on the work of the Overseas Development Administration on the phasing out of the use of timber from unsustainable sources.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The most effective way of ensuring that timber comes from sustainable sources is to promote and support the sustainable management of forests. This is a central objective of many ODA-supported forestry projects. Individual projects are monitored to assess their performance against objectives. We are also supporting the International Tropical Timber Organisation, which promotes sustainable forest management with the objective of the production of internationally traded timber being from sustainable sources by the year 2000.

Development Budget

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will estimate what percentage of the overseas development budget is spent in (a) each of the EC nations' currencies and (b) United States dollars; and if he will make a statement on the impact on his Department's budget of the change in the value of the pound sterling in relation to those currencies.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: About 0·04 per cent. of the gross external assistance programme is spent in other EC nations' currencies and about 3·6 per cent. in United States dollars. Given that exchange rates move up as well as down during the course of a year, it is not possible to say what impact recent changes in the value of sterling will have.

Angola

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the renewed fighting in Angola and on the steps he is able to take to help the international community to arrange a ceasefire.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We deplore the renewal of violence in Angola and fully support the efforts of the United Nations special representative there to consolidate the ceasefire arranged by the United Nations Secretary-General on the night of 1 November. We continue to work actively to this end in the United Nations and with EC partners and, in Angola, through our ambassador in Luanda.

Somalia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 21 October, Official Report, column 320, what percentages of the United Kingdom and EC food for Somalia have come from EC food surpluses; and what commodities have been sent.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 5 November 1992]: A list of the commodities provided under United Kingdom food aid to Somalia was given in my reply to the hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington) on 29 October—columns 799-800. Information on commodities provided as EC food aid was contained in the letter sent to the hon. Member by my right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development on 22 September, a copy of which has been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Much of the food aid is provided through grants to NGO's, including the International Committee for the Red Cross, which are themselves responsible for the purchase from the most appropriate source, whether in the EC or elsewhere. The type of food provided for Somalia has not been determined by the availability of particular commodities in surplus in the EC, but rather by the requirements of those affected by the famine. The source of purchase is equally determined by timing, availability of food and transport, and price, rather than by the need to reduce EC surpluses.

No part of United Kingdom food aid for Somalia has come from EC intervention stocks. As to the percentage of EC food aid provided to Somalia from intervention, I shall write to the hon. Gentleman when we receive the information which we have requested from the European Commission, but I would not expect it to be a large proportion.

Zaire

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, what representations have been made to the Government of Zaire on the question of human rights; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding reply 5 November 1992]: The European Community and its member states made a joint statement on 10 September noting with satisfaction the election of Prime Minister Tshisekedi by the national conference and the acceptance of his Government by both the conference and the president. This represents a further step towards democracy in Zaire and we wish the Government success in working towards creating a climate which will allow peaceful progress towards free and fair elections and social and economic recovery.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Agencies

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list by grade the numbers of staff and their cost for 1991-92 and the estimated figures for 1992-93 for each executive agency for which he is responsible.

Miss Widdecombe: The information for each executive agency of the Department is shown in the tables.

[1] ITSA—denotes Information Technology Services Agency.

[2] Includes medical staff of equivalent grades.

Notes:

1. Staff numbers quoted refer to full time equivalent permanent staff.
2. Staff numbers for 1991-92 have been calculated by averaging the quarterly staff in post figures.
3. The increase in the Benefits Agency staff numbers UG1-6, in 1992-93 is mainly due to:
   (a) additional medical staff for the new disability benefits and an increased number of war pension claims: and
   (b) transfer of medical staff from the Department of Health (regional medical service).
4. Costs relating to overtime, casuals and ERNIC are included.

Furniture Regulations

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will amend the rules for the social fund to take account of the pending regulations relating to second hand foam furniture in order that those entitled to social funds can meet in full the cost of second hand goods compliant with safety standards.

Mr. Scott: No change is required. The amount of awards under the discretionary part of the social fund are not specified in the Social Security Contributions and Benefits Act 1992, or in the Secretary of State's directions or in his guidance to social fund officers. The guidance advises social fund officers to accept an amount requested by an applicant if it is within the broad range of prices that would be considered reasonable for an item of serviceable quality.

Income Support

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what plans he has to make income support payable by direct credit transfer;

(2) under what circumstances income support can currently be paid direct into a claimant's bank or building society account; and what guidance is available on such direct payments for (a) Benefits Agency staff and (b) individual claimants.

Miss Widdecombe: The administration of Income Support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. Andrew Bowden, dated 5 November 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking what plans he has to make Income Support payable by direct credit transfer; under what circumstances Income Support can currently be paid to a bank or building society account; and what guidance is available to both staff and customers.

The Citizen's Charter committed us to making the facility to have benefit paid by Automated Credit Transfer (ACT) as soon as possible. The Benefits Agency also sees the ACT facility as a means of improving service to its customers. ACT is already available for a range of benefits, including Retirement Pensions and Child Benefit. As far as Income Support is concerned the introduction of ACT requires the adaptation of our computer systems, of our claim forms and of our literature. This will take some time, and the introduction of ACT for Income Support is planned for October 1993.

Currently, payment to a bank or building society can be considered where a customer has real difficulties in getting to a Post Office and has no one to act as an agent or appointee. An appointee is someone who is appointed to act on behalf of a customer who is unable to manage his or her own affairs.

All Districts have comprehensive written guidance covering arrangements for customers who may have difficulties, for example someone with health or mobility problems who has no 'carer' or regular visitor; these include direct payments where a bank or building society agree to the arrangement. The customer is, however, advised that the bank or building society may charge for the service.

In such cases, guidance to customers is provided via detailed correspondence. In addition (and generally) notifications and leaflets issued to customers advise them to contact their local Benefits Agency Office if they require further advice, disagree with a decision or have anything else they wish to raise.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many households in each parliamentary constituency in Coventry qualify for payments under the cold weather payments scheme.

Mr. Scott: The administration of social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. Geoffrey Robinson, dated 5 November 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking how many households in each Parliamentary constituency in Coventry qualify for payments under the cold weather payments scheme.

The four constituencies in Coventry are all covered by the Agency's Coventry District, which consists of two offices, Coventry East and Coventry West. The boundaries of the constituencies do not correspond with those of the Agency's offices and it is not possible to give a figure for each constituency except at disproportionate cost. However, based on figures for those claiming Income Support in August 1992, it is estimated that 19,700 customers in the Coventry District may qualify for a cold weather payment should the area be triggered.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the delay in processing the disability living allowance claim of the Woolwich constituent, national insurance No. LW 263446C about whom the hon. Member for Woolwich wrote to him on 4 September.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief execitive of the Benfits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. J. Austin-Walker dated 5 November 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the nine months delay in processing the Disability Living Allowance claim of the Woolwich constituent, National Insurance No. LW 263446C.

I should explain that the claim to which you refer has now been considered by an adjudication officer and the decision notified direct to your constituent on 29 October.

I offer my sincere apologies for the delay in dealing with your constituent's claim. My reply to your letter of 4 September to the Minister of State for Social Security and Disabled People explains the position in greater detail.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Social Fund

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications for social fund payments have been made in the Euston district office in each month of the past year; and how many were (a) granted money, (b) offered a loan and (c) refused.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Mr. Bichard to Mr. Jeremy Corbyn, dated 5 November 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about Social Fund payments in Euston District.

Details of applications to the discretionary part of the Fund, grant awards, loan offers and refusals for discretionary payments at Euston District in each month of the past year are in the Annex attached.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Local Offices

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when his Department's new Finsbury Park local office will be opened; and if he will make a statement on the future of the Highgate DSS local office.

Mr. Burt: The provision of new, and the future of existing, local DSS offices is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. Jeremy Corbyn, dated 5 November 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the new Finsbury Park local office and the future of the Highgate office.

Finsbury Park

The main work on the new Finsbury Park local office was completed on 23 October 1992. Full completion, following the installation of computer cabling, is expected to be achieved by 17 November and the intention is to open to the public on 30 November 1992. Until then customers will continue to be served from the existing premises.

Highgate

The search for a new building to rehouse the Highgate office continues and our service will, therefore, remain at Archway Tower for the time being.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Pensioners

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the proportion of (a) all pensioners, (b) single male pensioners, (c) single female pensioners, (d) pensioner couples, (e) single women aged 75 years or over and (f) single men aged 75 years or over, who are in receipt of an occupational pension on the basis of the most recent family expenditure survey data available; and for each group, what is the mean and median amount received.

Miss Widdecombe: The most recent year for which information is available is 1988. The table sets out the information requested.

Proportion of pensioner units in receipt of an occupational pension 1988

Group	Percentage with an occupational pension (per cent.)	Mean amount of occupational pension for those in receipt (£ per week)	Median amount of occupational pension for those in receipt (£ per week)
Single men aged 65-74	66	42·70	24·90
Single men aged 75 and over	[1]60	[1]47·30	[1]29·60
All single men aged 65 and over	63	44·80	26·40
Single women aged 60-74	53	41·90	25·80
Single women aged 75 and over	39	32·70	18·40
All single women aged 60 and over	46	38·00	21·00
Pensioner couples	70	68·00	33·90
All pensioner units	57	54·10	27·20

[1] Based upon a sample of less than 100 cases.

Notes:

1. Estimates are based upon data from "Occupational Pension Schemes 1987", a survey by the Government Actuary (HMSO) and the 1988 Family Expenditure Survey. Pension amounts are at 1988 levels.
2. Pensioner couples are defined as couples in which the husband is over state pension age; pensioner units are defined as pensioner couples or single people over state pension age.
3. Figures in square brackets are based upon a sample of less than 100 cases.

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what number and proportion of all pensioners had no income from any source other than from state benefits for each of the last 10 years.

Miss Widdecombe: The table sets out information for the 10 years ending in 1988, the latest year for which information is available.

Year	Percentage of pensioners with no income other than state benefits	Number of pensioners with no income other than state benefits (Thousands)
1979	22	1,500
1980	22	n/a
1981	21	1,400
1982	20	n/a
1983	18	1,250
1984	21	1,450
1985	17	1,200
1986	19	1,300
1987	16	1,150
1988	16	1,150

Notes:

1. Estimates are based upon data from the 1979-1988 Family Expenditure Surveys.
2. Estimates relate to pensioner units. They are defined as single people over state pension age or couples in which the husband is over state pension age.

3. Accurate estimates of the number of pensioner units in 1980 and 1982 with no income from sources other than state benefits could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the actual weekly amount received by all pensioners as (a) total social security benefits, (b) occupational pensions and (c) savings income for each of the last 10 years; what were the gross and net weekly total figures; and what was the real terms increase over the last 10 years.

Miss Widdecombe: The table sets out information for the 10 years ending in 1988, the latest year for which information is available. Information about average income from earnings is also included as net income must be derived from total gross income.

Notes:

1. Source: Family Expenditure Survey.
2. Component incomes by source are rounded to the nearest 10p.
3. Components may not sum to totals owing to rounding.
4. Percentage increases are calculated using unrounded figures.
5. A pensioner unit is defined as a single person over state pension age or a couple in which the husband is over stage pension age.

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many and what proportion of all pensioners, single pensioners and pensioner couples have total incomes (a) £1, (b) £2, (c) £3, (d) £4 and (e) £5 above income support levels.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is in the tables. As this question seeks to establish pensioners' incomes in relation to income support levels the criteria for assessing pensioner entitlement to income support have been used, i.e. "pensioners" are taken to be those aged 60 or over, and the average income bands exclude income derived from sources which would not be taken into account for income support—eg. housing benefit or attendance allowance.

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many and what proportion of pensioners receive income support.

Mr. Burt: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 3 November at column 152.

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the latest estimate of the number of pensioners entitled to claim income support and housing benefit who do not do so.

Mr. Burt: We will publish the latest available estimates for take-up of income-related benefits shortly.

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of pensioner households have been dependent on state benefits for at least 75 per cent. of their income in each of the last 10 years.

Miss Widdecombe: The table sets out information for the 10 years ending in 1988, the latest year for which information is available. Data on pensioners' income is not available in household form so it is provided on the basis of pensioner "units".

Notes:

1. Estimates are based upon data from the 1979-1988 Family Expenditure Surveys.
2. Estimates relate to pensioner units. They are defined as single people over state pension age or couples in which the husband is over state pension age.

European Community

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the number of civil servants in his Department whose main task is work related wholly or mainly to the European Community.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 3 November 1992]: All staff are expected to be able to deal from time to time with the domestic implications of EC legislation or activities. Other than that there are currently 20.5 staff in the Department whose sole or main task is dealing with work directly generated by the European Community or the United Kingdom's current presidency of the Council of Ministers. In addition a number of staff in the Benefits Agency and Contributions Agency are engaged in the payment of benefits to, and collection of national insurance contributions from, people living abroad, including in the European Community.

WALES

Regional Selective Assistance

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to paragraphs 67-8 of Cm 2074, if he will publish figures of the percentage of regional selective assistance projects which did not start in each of the years 1989, 1990, 1991 and the first half of 1992; and what was the percentage undershoot on the jobs actually achieved compared with the forecast made at the time of regional selective offer for each of the years 1989, 1990, 1991 and the first half of 1992.

Mr. David Hunt: Aggregate information on project start dates is not readily available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. As noted in paragraph 66 of Cm 2074, the Welsh Office departmental report contains information on employment actually achieved by projects which are largely completed.

Welsh Language

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, (1) how many staff posts there are within his Department at the present time; and how many of these posts (a) require the speaking of Welsh to be a prerequisite, (b) consider the speaking of Welsh to be desirable and (c) consider linguistic capacity in neutral terms;

(2) how many staff are employed in each section of his Department; and how many staff members in each section speak Welsh;

(3) how many members of staff are currently employed by the Welsh Office on a part-time and full-time basis; how many staff members do not speak the Welsh language; and how many are currently attending Welsh learner courses;

(4) if he will make it his policy to offer paid time-off work to employees wishing to attend courses to learn Welsh.

Mr. David Hunt: There are currently 2,318 permanent staff employed in my Department, of whom 220 are part time. All staff who would like to learn Welsh are strongly encouraged to do so. Training is through courses and the use of distance learning packages. Paid time off and departmental sponsorship are available. The numbers involved are not held centrally. The general staffing requirement is for there to be adequate numbers of Welsh-speaking staff in all areas to meet the needs of clients. There are currently nine specific posts which require a good working knowledge of Welsh.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total publicity budget of his Department for the latest year for which figures are available; how much of the budget has been designated for publicity literature; and, of that proportion, how much has specifically been spent on Welsh language publicity materials.

Mr. David Hunt: Publicity expenditure in 1992-93 is planned to be about £2,500,000. No designation for publicity literature is possible as the allocation of funds to different media often takes place only as projects develop.

Of the £726,890 spent on publicity materials this year, £153,180 was on Welsh only and £404,382 on bilingual material.

Coal

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if, pursuant to his oral reference to the plan for German coal of 21 October, Official Report, columns 526-27, he will place in the Library a copy of the German plan 2005.

Mr. David Hunt: A copy of Kohlekonzept 2005 has been placed in the Library of the House today.

River Dee

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will institute a review of the River Dee fishing byelaws as they impinge upon those River Dee fishermen who fish for fluke, mullet, cockles and shrimps; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will institute an investigation into the connection between the safety of River Dee fishermen in 14 ft boats and the implementation of the fishing byelaws; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I will write to the hon. Gentleman.

Manufacturing

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of the work force in Wales was engaged in manufacturing in (a) 1979 and (b) at the latest date.

Mr. David Hunt: In June 1979, 30·5 per cent. of employees were employed in manufacturing. In June 1992 the figure was 23·1 per cent.

The table gives a breakdown of manufacturing employment for these two years with, for comparison, employment figures for energy and water supply industries.

Maneot Community Hospital

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the future use of the former Maneot community hospital.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The future use of this former hospital will be a matter for the prospective Gofal Cymuned Clwydian community care NHS trust. The trust application included the hospital site as part of the estate which will form the NHS trust. The trust intends to use the former hospital as its administrative headquarters. This proposal was welcomed by the health authority and it is expected that the NHS trust staff will occupy the site by the end of the year.

Pit Closures

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the impact of pit closures in east Clwyd upon communities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: As the hon. Gentleman will know, a review of the proposed closure of 21 pits is under way and a moratorium has been announced on these proposals whilst the review takes place. My Department is in discussions with the North East Wales training and enterprise council, the Welsh Development Agency and local authorities on measures to promote economic diversification and employment opportunities in the area.

Service Industries

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of the work force in Wales is engaged in the service industries for 1979 and at the latest date.

Mr. David Hunt: In June 1979, 55·4 per cent. of employees were employed in the service industries. In June 1992 the figure was 68·6 per cent.

The table gives a breakdown of employment in the service sector for these two years.

Traumatic Brain Injury

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what provision there is in each county of Wales for patients suffering traumatic brain injury.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This information is not held centrally. Health authorities are responsible for assessing and meeting the local needs of their residents guided by the principles and targets of the protocol for investment in health gain on injuries, issued by the Department in June 1992.

Investment, Clwyd

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures are being taken to attract outside investment into Clwyd.

Mr. David Hunt: Considerable success continues to be achieved in attracting inward investment to Clwyd, and 47 projects were recorded in 1991-92 promising over 2,300 jobs. A wide range of measures will continue to be taken to build on that success, including the provision of industrial sites and infrastructure, and targeted approaches to companies. A conference on EC research and development has been arranged to take place in Clwyd shortly which will help to focus interest in the county from other parts of Europe.

River Pollution

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what measures are being taken to tackle the industrial pollution of Welsh rivers;

(2) what measures are being undertaken to tackle the agricultural pollution of Welsh rivers.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information on the many initiatives being taken to tackle industrial and agricultural pollution of rivers is contained in the Government's White Paper on the Environment "This Common Inheritance" and in the first and second year reports thereon, copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

Homelessness

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many people were accepted by local authorities in Wales as homeless between (a) January and September 1992 and (b) January and September 1991;

(2) how many homeless inquiries were made to local authorities in Wales under part III of the Housing Act 1985 between (a) January and September 1992 and (b) January and September 1991.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Homelessness data for the period January to September 1992 are not yet available. Data for January to September 1991 are given in the table:

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will issue guidelines to local authorities limiting the use of bed-and-breakfast hostels to house homeless people;

(2) if he will issue guidelines to local authorities clearly defining their obligations on the treatment of homeless applicants.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: These matters are covered in the "Homelessness Code of Guidance for Local Authorities", a revised edition of which was issued by the Department on 15 August 1991.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many local authorities in Wales currently operate a 24-hour homelessness service.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This information is not held centrally.

Tenants

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many local authorities in Wales have approved tenants' relations officers to assist private rented sector tenants.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many new lets have been created in the private rented sector in Wales in each year since 1985; and how many such lets have been short term in each of those years.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information is not available centrally.

Rural Housing

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to (a) increase the proportion of housing association grants currently allocated to rural areas and (b) allow a decrease in the borrowing requirements of rural housing associations.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I have no plans to do so.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy that improvement grants for rural houses in Wales are issued only on the basis of a commitment that the property will stay in local ownership for a predetermined period and that the property is the only and principal home of the applicant.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Home renovation grants are available where the property is the only or main home of the applicant. We have no plans to change these rules.

Council House Sales

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much money has been recouped from the sale of council houses in Wales in each of the last five years; and how much of this money has been redistributed for social housing provision.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: In-year receipts from the sale of council houses are set out in the table. Information on the spending of usable receipts by authorities on social housing provision is not held centrally.

Housing Research

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the localised housing needs assessment research programmes currently operational in Wales; and how much funding is provided by his Department to each programme.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information about these assessments is not held centrally; funding is a matter for individual local authorities.

Evictions

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many private rented sector tenant evictions have occurred in Wales in each year since 1985.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information is not available centrally.

Rented Housing

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to develop an integrated strategy for rented housing in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I look to local housing authorities to develop integrated strategies across all housing tenures.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total number of homes available in Wales for rent in (a) the public sector and (b) the private sector in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The total number of homes available for rent are shown in table 1.3 of "Welsh Housing Statistics No. 12 1992" a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Housing Associations

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to make funds available to local authorities and housing associations to provide sell-and-stay schemes to low-income home owners living in poor condition houses.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Our renovation grant system is designed to assist low-income home owners without a change of tenure.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to instruct Tai Cymru to encourage housing associations in Wales to purchase properties from the existing housing stock in addition to encouraging new building.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Housing for Wales already encourages housing associations to purchase from existing stock where it is appropriate and cost effective to do so.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will establish statutory minimum space and quality standards for housing association housing provision in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: It is for Housing for Wales to decide upon appropriate space and quality standards for housing association provision in Wales.

Independent Housing Advice

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what funding is currently granted by his Department to independent housing advice services in Wales; and what plans he has to increase the level of funding.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Department has allocated £377,877 in grant aid to independent housing advice services in Wales for the 1992-93 financial year.

In addition, the Department has allocated a total of £556,036 to the Home Improvement Agency initiative in Wales which provides help and advice on home improvements, maintenance and repairs to elderly and disabled home occupiers.

Applications for future funding will be considered in the light of available resources.

Health Authorities

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list the attributes he regards as essential for candidates for the post of membership of health authorities in Wales;

(2) what inquiries he made under the procedure specified in paragraph 52 of Questions of Procedure for Ministers before making the appointments to Welsh health authorities announced on 30 October.

Mr. David Hunt: Appointments are made on the basis of aptitude and merit. Individual candidates possess a range of attributes and I select those with the most appropriate combination of abilities and experience for each particular post. In doing so, I take account of such matters as expertise in running organisations, previous committee experience, and the extent of other public service work that candidates have undertaken.

Prior to the introduction of the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 there was a statutory obligation to consult various specified organisations about health authority appointments. No such requirement presently exists, and I did not publicly invite nominations. It is however, my continued intention to comply with paragraph 52 and accordingly I welcome any suggestions from the Opposition parties and others as to names of those who might be considered suitable for appointment.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in each local education authority in Wales are eligible to apply for grant-maintained status; how many in each case have held ballots under section 61 of the Education Reform Act 1988; how many ballots in each case resulted in votes to seek grant-maintained status, and how many of these have been the subject of section 12 or 13 reorganisation proposals; how many ballots in each case resulted in votes against seeking grant-maintained status and how many of these have been subject to section 12 or 13 notices; and what are the totals in each category.

Sir Wyn Roberts: All primary and secondary schools in Wales are eligible to apply to become grant-maintained schools. Details of the number per authority can be found in table 1·02 of Welsh Office publication "Statistics of Education in Wales: Schools No. 5, 1991", a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

To date, four primary schools and 10 secondary schools have balloted on whether to proceed with an application to the Secretary of State for grant-maintained status. All the primary schools and six of the secondary school ballots resulted in a majority in favour of applying for grant-maintained status. Of these, two of the primary schools and three of the secondary schools were the subject of section 12 or 13 reorganisation proposals. None of the secondary schools where the vote was against applying for grant maintained status was the subject of section 12 or 13 notices.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales in how many ballots in Wales under section 61 of the Education Reform Act 1988, where a simple majority of parents voted in favour of seeking grant-maintained status, the proportion of such parents was (a) above 69 per cent., (b) between 60 and 69 per cent., (c) between 50 and 59 per cent., (d) between 40 and 49 per cent., (e) between 30 and 39 per cent. and (f) below 30 per cent. of the number of parents eligible to vote.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information is as follows:

	Per cent.
i.above 69	2
ii.between 60 and 69	3
iii.between 50 and 59	3
iv.between 40 and 49	1
v.between 30 and 39	nil
vi.below 30	1

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many ballots, in Wales, on grant-maintained status have resulted in participation rates (a) above 79 per cent., (b) between 70 and 79 per cent., (c) between 60 and 69 per cent., (d) between 50 and 59 per cent. and (e) below 50 per cent.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information is as follows:

	Per cent.
i. Above 79	3
ii. Between 70 and 79	4
iii. Between 60 and 69	5
iv. Between 50 nd 59	2
v. Below 50	Nil

Mental Handicap

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish for each district health authority for the current financial year (a) the planned capital and revenue expenditure on mental handicap—learning disabilities—services and (b) the value of assets relevant to mental handicap—learning disabilities—services listed in capital asset registers.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is not held centrally.

Clinical Scientific Services

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many audiology scientists are employed in Wales; and how many are employed within each health authority.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Complete information is only available centrally on the total number of clinical scientists in post. Breakdowns of these figures into detailed occupation category are not considered reliable.

Singleton Hospital

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 23 October, Official Report, column 388, if he will list the 19 representations in support of trust status for Singleton hospital.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: It is not my right hon. Friend's policy to publish, or otherwise publicly identify, the individual representations that he has received as a result of public consultations on NHS trust applications.

EDUCATION

Pre-school Education

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the average of the proportion of three and four-year-olds in pre-school education in each local education authority; and what is the national average.

Mr. Forth: The percentage of three and four-year-olds attending maintained nursery schools or nursery classes in maintained primary schools in each local education authority in England in January 1991 are given in Statistical Bulletin 5/92 which is available in the Library. In England in January 1991, 25 per cent. of the three and four-year-old population were in such schools or classes.

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the number of nursery places available per 1,000 children for each local education authority in England and Wales for the years 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Forth: The information requested is not collected centrally. Details of the number of pupils in nursery schools and classes in each local education authority in England in January 1991 is contained in Statistical Bulletin 5/92 which is available in the Library. Information for January 1992 is not available. Information on schools in Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Birmingham Schools

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what review he has made of the quality of education in schools in the city of Birmingham; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend is kept informed about the quality of education in Birmingham through a variety of sources, including material which is published nationally. My right hon. Friend has made it clear on a number of occasions that he considers there is significant room for improvement.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in each local education authority in England are eligible to apply for grant-maintained status; how many in each case have held ballots under section 61 of the Education Reform Act 1988; how many ballots in each case resulted in votes to seek grant-maintained status, and how many of these have been the subject of section 12 or 13 reorganisation proposals; how many ballots in each case resulted in votes against seeking grant-maintained status and how many of these have been subject to section 12 or 13 notices; and what are the totals in each category.

Mr. Forth: I refer the hon. Member to the following tables. A reply to the question of how many schools which voted against grant-maintained status have been subject to section 12 or 13 notices would incur disproportionate cost.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many ballots in England on grant-maintained status have resulted in participation rates (a) above 79 per cent., (b) between 70 and 79 per cent., (c) between 60 and 69 per cent., (d) between 50 and 59 per cent. and (e) below 50 per cent.

Mr. Forth: The participation rates for ballots on grant-maintained status in England have been as follows: 90 above 79 per cent.; 172 between 70 and 79 per cent.; 259 between 60 and 69 per cent.; 171 between 50 and 59 per cent. and 57 below 50 per cent. The Education Reform Act 1988 requires that all first ballots with a participation rate of under 50 per cent. be reheld.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list those schools which required a second ballot of parents as part of the grant-maintained status procedure; which schools achieved a 50 per cent. turnout of parents voting in the second ballot; what was the outcome of the second ballot; and in the case of those schools voting yes, what was his decision on the application for grant-maintained status.

Mr. Forth: The information requested is as follows:

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many copies have been distributed and, in each case, at what cost of the booklets (a) "School Governors—How to Become a Grant-Maintained School", (b) "Grant-Maintained Schools—Questions Parents Ask", (c) "Grant-Maintained Schools—What it Means for Staff", (d) "Grant-Maintained Schools—Questions Staff Ask", (e) "Grant-Maintained Schools—Experiences During the First Year" and (f) "Education into the Next Century".

Mr. Forth: The total numbers of booklets which have been printed to fulfil expected demand and the current costs of producing each booklet are as follows:

Total printed	Current cost per booklet £
(a) 180,000 since April 1992	0·1800
(b) 1,290,005 since March 1990	0·0800
(c) 193,000 November 1990—September 1992	[1]0·0900
(d) 140,000 since September 1992	0·0700
(e) 350,000 since June 1991	0·0900
(f) 2,750,000 since August 1992	[2]0·0592

[1] Booklet is no longer produced. This is the cost when it was last produced.

[2] Estimated.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many grant-maintained schools' folders have been produced for the distribution of booklets; and what was the cost of (a) the design and (b) the production.

Mr. Forth: A total of 90,000 folders have been produced to date. The cost of design was £487·63 and artwork production was £489·98. The printing costs were approximately £29,000.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list, in rank order, the 10 local education authorities with most schools which have been approved for grant-maintained status; and for each local education authority, the number of schools which have been approved, the political control of the local education authority and where the local education authority ranks in spending per pupil for all local education authorities.

Mr. Forth: The information requested is as follows:

LEA	Number of GM schools approved	Political control	LEA schools, ranking by per pupil funding, 1990-91
Kent	35	Conservative	108
Essex	33	Conservative	80
Lincolnshire	23	Conservative	101
Norfolk	16	Conservative	76
Gloucestershire	16	No overall control	102
Surrey	15	Conservative	56
Berkshire	11	No overall control	65
Bromley	11	Conservative	27
Cambridgeshire	10	Conservative	97
Hillingdon	10	Conservative	18
Northamptonshire	10	Conservative	103

Note: The ranking is according to each LEA's net institutional funding per nursery, primary and secondary school pupil in 1990-91, the latest year for which information on actual spending is available. Per pupil funding is derived from LEAs' returns of their expenditure to the Department of the Environment and of their pupil numbers to the Department for Education. The LEA with the highest per pupil funding would be ranked as 1, that with the lowest per pupil funding as 108 (Isles of Scilly is excluded).

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education in how many ballots in England under section 61 of the Education Reform Act 1988, where a simple majority of parents voted in favour of seeking grant-maintained status, the proportion of such parents was (a) above 69 per cent., (b) between 60 and 69 per cent., (c) between 50 and 59 per cent., (d) between 40 and 49 per cent., (e) between 30 and 39 per cent. and (f) below 30 per cent. of the number of parents eligible to vote.

Mr. Forth: The proportion of eligible parents voting in favour of grant-maintained status in ballots where a result in favour was obtained has been as follows: above 69 per cent. in 75 ballots; betweeen 60 and 69 per cent. in 86 ballots; between 50 and 59 per cent. in 155 ballots; between 40 and 49 per cent. in 155 ballots; between 30 and 39 per cent. in 99 ballots and under 30 per cent. in 15 ballots.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many grant-maintained schools include in their admissions policy an element of priority for the children of staff working in the schools.

Mr. Forth: Information about the admission policies of all grant-maintained schools is not readily available in this form. But since 1 November 1991, my right hon. Friend has approved applications for eight grant-maintained schools to amend their admissions policies so as to give some priority to children of their staff.

Schools Branch

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many staff are employed in schools branch 4, division B at his Department; what was the cost of the branch in 1991-92; and what is the budgeted cost for 1992-93.

Mr. Forth: There has been some restructuring of the branch during this year. As of 5 November there were 21 civil servants employed in schools branch 4 division B. The running costs of the division in 1991-92 were £706,000 and the budget for 1992-93 is £800,000.

School Sports Facilities

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will estimate the possible effect of the elimination of claimed surplus places in maintained schools on sports facilities in general and on statutory or recommended minimum acreages of playing fields.

Mr. Forth: The Department is currently consulting local education authorities on the scope for removing surplus places, on the basis of its estimate that in 1991 there were up to 1·5 million surplus places in England. Decisions on the disposal of playing fields consequential upon school rationalisation are for LEAs.

School Visits

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the schools which he and his ministerial colleagues have visited in their official capacity since assuming their different offices.

Mr. Patten: I, my noble Friend the Minister of State, and the Parliamentary Under-Secretaries of State, my hon. Friends the Members for Mid-Worcestershire (Mr. Forth) and for Carshalton and Wallington (Mr. Forman) have visited 57 schools so far during our periods in office, made up of 1 nursery;

21 primary schools, including 1 middle school;
30 secondary schools, including 3 grant-maintained schools;
2 special schools;
3 CTCs and 2 sixth form colleges.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Committee Meetings

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when is the next K4 committee meeting.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The K4 committee will not come into being until the treaty on European union enters into force.

Sunday Trading

Mr. Ray Powell To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to receive the judgment of the European Court of Justice on the B & Q cases.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I hope that the court will deliver its judgment soon.

Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what guidance he proposes to give local authorities on the enforcement of the Shops Act 1950;

(2) how he proposes to ensure that the Shops Act 1950 is fairly enforced in the pre-Christmas and new year trading periods.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General has recently made clear what steps local authorities can take to enforce the law, Official Report, 11 May 1992, column 368; 15 July 1992, column 707.

Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) pursuant to his oral answer on 22 October to the hon. Member for Hendon, South (Mr. Marshall), Official Report, column 558, when he expects to make his promised statement to the House;

(2) what procedure and time scale he intends to follow to ensure that Parliament is freely enabled to decide on the nature and extent of any changes to the Shops Act 1950.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend intends to make a statement soon which will deal with these matters among others.

Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to his oral answer on 22 October to the hon. Member for Hendon, South (Mr. Marshall). Official Report, column 558, how many of the stated representations received in favour of Sunday trading have come from pre-printed colour postcards supplied by the Shopping Hours Reform Council.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Of the 4,433 written representations received, 4,086 were postcards in the form described in the question.

Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the Sunday trading laws of other EC member states.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand that nearly all other EC member states place some restrictions on Sunday trading.

Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations on Sunday trading he has received during the current year from small business organisations.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have received 35 written representations from business organisations. Our records do not enable us to distinguish between them according to size.

Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met representatives of the Keep Sunday Special campaign; and when he next expects to do so.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I last met representatives of the Keep Sunday Special campaign on 23 September 1992. We agreed to meet again before the Government bring before the House any proposals for reforming the Shops Act 1950.

Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what information he has on the incidence of shop theft and damage on the Sundays in the period from November 1991 and for similar periods in the previous five years;

(2) what information he has on the incidence on crimes against shop staff (a) in the current year and (b) in comparable periods for the previous five years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We do not hold such information centrally.

Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many times in the past 12 months he or his ministerial colleagues or his officials has met representatives of (a) the Shopping Hours Reform Council, (b) the Keep Sunday Special campaign, (c) OPEN, (d) the Pro-Sunday Coalition, (e) Union of Shop, Distributive and Allied Workers and (f) Sort Out Sunday, respectively.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have had four meetings with the Shopping Hours Reform Council in the last 12 months; four with the Keep Sunday Special campaign; one with OPEN; and two with Sort Out Sunday. We have had no meetings with either the Pro-Sunday coalition or USDAW in that period.

Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when was the last time his Department issued a circular to local authorities on the Shops Act 1950;

(2) when he plans to issue the next circular to local authorities on the Shops Act 1950.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The last circular to local authorities about the Shops Act 1950 was issued on 17 July 1981. We have no plans to issue another.

Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what consultations he has held with residents associations on the subject of Sunday trading;

(2) what consultations he has held with (a) the British Retail Consortium, (b) churches, (c) ethnic minority groups, (d) the Jewish community, (e) consumer organisations, (f) consumers, (g) trade unions and (h) employees and other trade associations in the retail sector on the subject of Sunday trading.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Home Office Ministers have consulted a large number of groups and organisations about the law on Sunday trading. Over 75 meetings have been held since January 1988 with a range of different groups.

Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what studies he has commissioned into the impact on small shops of the Sunday trading activities of multiple food retailers since November 1991.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A study has been commissioned to review the economic effects of changing Sunday trading patterns.

Immigration

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for the last year how many individuals have been refused leave to remain or requested to leave the United Kingdom; and how many have actually left.

Mr. Charles Wardle: In 1991, 16,300 applications for variation of leave were refused. Comprehensive information on those leaving following refusal, or on the outcome of subsequent appeals or reconsideration of the case, is not readily available.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) visitors, (b) short-term students and (c) would-be students were refused (i) entry clearance and (ii) entry to the United Kingdom by country and for each month since January 1991.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 29 October 1992]: The available information is given in the tables. It is not possible from the information available centrally to ascertain how many of the persons covered by tables 2 and 3 were seeking entry as visitors, short-term students or would-be students, but it is likely that the large majority of them were.

Prison Service

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 26 October, Official Report, column 453, what assessment he has made of the change in costs of catering in prisons resulting from the introduction of contracts with commercial companies.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The dietary allowances for inmates are the same in all prisons including those where catering has been contracted out. Catering has only been contracted out in new prisons, therefore for these prisons there is no historical data on which to assess changes in other costs associated with catering. Future assessments of different methods of providing catering will balance the quality of the service against the costs.

Banknotes

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether he will make a statement on forgeries of banknotes;

(2) how many forged (a) £5, (b) £10, (c) £20 and (d) £50 banknotes he estimates have been released in the United Kingdom during the past 12 months.

Mr. Charles Wardle: It is not possible to estimate accurately the number of forged notes of different denominations in circulation, but it is unlikely to exceed a small fraction of 1 per cent. of the total number of bank notes in circulation.

The national criminal intelligence service works with the police both to seize the forgeries before they circulate and to identify and bring to justice those who are responsible for this criminal activity.

Asylum

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many asylum seekers (a) came to the United Kingdom, (b) wilfully destroyed their documentation and (c) arrived with inadequate documentation in the last year for which figures are available;

(2) what percentage of asylum applicants apply at the port of entry; and of those what percentage have been seen to destroy their nationality documents;

(3) how many of those who claim asylum enter the United Kingdom (a) without documents, (b) as visitors, (c) students and (d) pre-entry cleared asylum seekers.

Mr. Charles Wardle: For information on the total asylum applications to the United Kingdom by location, I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him on 20 October 1992 at columns 261-62.

In the first half of 1992, 26 per cent. of all asylum applications to the United Kingdom, excluding dependants, were made at ports. Available information on these cases, as a percentage of total port asylum applications is given in table A.

About 75 per cent. of all applications were made in-country. Available information on these cases is given in table B.

Table A

Applications made at ports for asylum in the United Kingdom, excluding dependants, January to June 1992

Percentages

	Percentage of total port applicants
With genuine documents	33
With forged documents	15
With mutilated documents	3
With no documents	48

Table B

Applications made in country[1] for asylum in the United Kingdom, excluding dependants, January to June 1992

Percentages

	Percentage of total in-country applicants
Applicants who were admitted to the United Kingdom as visitors[2]	53
Applicants who were admitted to the United Kingdom as students[2]	5
Other in-country applicants[1 3]	43

[1] Includes also a small number of applications recorded as made overseas; this number may be underrecorded.

[2] Includes those who applied after their leave as a visitor or student had expired.

[3] Includes also, inter alia, applications made by illegal entrants, cases with no documents, and cases where the immigration status is not known or not yet recorded.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 20 October, Official Report, columns 261-62, what proportion of the figures quoted in respect of exceptional leave to remain represent second or subsequent applications for (a) extension of leave and (b) upgrade to asylum.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The figures referred to are just of first grants of exceptional leave following determination of the asylum application. They exclude decisions on applications for subsequent extensions of exceptional leave or for upgrading to asylum.

Court Escort Service

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made in selecting a contractor to operate the court escort service in Humberside and the east midlands.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: On 5 February my right hon. Friend the then Home Secretary announced that invitations to tender for the provision of the court escort service in Humberside and the east midlands, under provisions contained within the Criminal Justice Act 1991, had been issued to 12 private sector contractors. The contract will cover all prisoner movements to and from court except for those of high security prisoners.

After carefully considering all the proposals submitted, the Government today signed a contract with Group 4 Court Services Ltd. for the operation of the court escort service within the designated area. The signing follows a three-month development phase, during which representatives of Group 4 have visited prisons, police stations and court premises in the area to familiarise themselves with all the agencies concerned and their requirements from the service to be provided.

The new service is due to start in April 1993 using staff who are statutorily and contractually required to be properly trained and vetted. It will free up prison and police officers to concentrate on duties more appropriate to their particular skills and training.

The Government will, in due course, consider extending the contracting out of court escorting to other areas of the country.

Consultants

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all of the reports his Department has commissioned from external consultants in each of the past three years; for each of the past three years, how many reports from external consultants to his department led to further consultancy work being commissioned, stating for each of these who were the original and subsequent consultants and briefly describing the subject matter of the consultancy work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Information on reports produced by external consultants working in the Home Office during the past three years could only be obtained at a disproportionate cost.

Channel Islands

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will now provide a substantive answer to the written question of 22 October from the hon. Member for Walsall, North regarding when the documents relating to the wartime Nazi occupation of the Channel islands will now be released;

(2) when he now intends to release into the public domain the present classified document relating to the Nazi occupation of the Channel islands.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answers 5 November 1992 and 22 October 1992]: The review of Home Office records relating to the wartime Nazi occupation of the Channel Islands should be completed shortly. I will make a statement about the results of the review later this month.

European Community

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of civil servants in his Department whose main task is work related wholly or mainly to the European Community.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 3 November 1992]: Approximately 60 officials spend all or most of their time on work within the European Community or between the member states. A number of others spend smaller proportions of their time engaged in this area of work.

DEFENCE

Press Releases

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make available on request to hon. Members his departmental press releases on the day of release.

Mr. Rifkind: The main method of distributing the MOD's and other Government Departments' press releases is through the Central Office of Information's electronic news distribution service. This ensures that material becomes available to hon. Members and noble Lords through the computerised parliamentary on-line information system (POLIS) at the same time that it is released to the media.

In addition, my Department sends press releases to the House of Commons Library by facsimile as soon as practicable after electronic distribution. Copies are also sent direct to Opposition defence spokesmen and to the Clerk of the Select Committee on Defence.

I believe that these are the most cost-effective means of keeping each House informed of press announcements.

Nuclear Warheads

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom experience of the disposal of fissile nuclear materials recovered from dismantled nuclear warheads.

Mr. Aitken: The United Kingdom has the appropriate facilities for, and extensive experience in, the dismantling of redundant nuclear warheads. Fissile material recovered is re-used where this is necessary and possible; otherwise, the material is stored in safe and secure facilities.

United States Military Bases

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what United Kingdom health, safety and environmental legislation applies to United States military bases and storage depots in Wales.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: All relevant United Kingdom health, safety and environmental legislation applies to United States military bases in Wales.

Atomic Weapons Establishments

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current status of the A91 building at AWE Aldermaston; and on what date it is expected that this building will become operational.

Mr. Aitken: A project definition study into the scope of the work needed to overcome the corrosion problem is under way, and is due to report by the end of March 1993. This study will confirm the date on which the building will become fully operational.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the present status of the programme to appoint a contractor to operate the atomic weapons establishments.

Mr. Aitken: Three tenders were received on 1 September 1992 and are being evaluated. We expect to announce the successful tenderer in early 1993.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the distinction made by his Department between the separate buildings of the A90 complex at AWE Aldermaston; when each of these will be fully operational; what buildings and facilities at AWE Aldermaston will be superseded by the A90 complex; and which of these buildings and facilities will be demolished.

Mr. Aitken: A90 is the designation of the new plutonium processing building at AWE Aldermaston and its immediate support facilities. The plutonium processing laboratories in A90 and their support systems are currently going through a comprehensive commissioning process prior to becoming operational. A90 will replace Aldermaston's existing plutonium processing facilities, which will them be progressively decommissioned and, if necessary, demolished.

Departmental Vehicles

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State For Defence what was the cost of the truck cargo heavy duty vehicles recently delivered to his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: Around £11 million.

Nuclear Installations Inspectorate

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which facilities owned or operated by his Department are inspected by the nuclear installations inspectorate; and from which areas in these facilities the nuclear installations inspectorate inspectors are excluded.

Mr. Aitken: The only facilities falling into this category are the royal dockyards at Devonport and Rosyth which are owned by my Department but operated by contractors. These are licensed sites under the Nuclear Installations Act 1965 and are therefore subject to inspection by the nuclear installations inspectorate. Arrangements for such inspections are a matter for the contractors and the inspectorate who may have access to all facilities covered by the licence.

RAF Greenham Common

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future use of RAF Greenham Common.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In the wake of the United States Air Force's decision to withdraw from RAF Greenham Common, alternative defence uses for the station are being investigated. It is not yet possible to say whether the station will be retained or declared surplus to defence requirements although I expect firm decisions to be announced shortly.

Imber

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will reconsider his Department's requirement for the village of Imber and the lands that surround it.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The level of training in the United Kingdom is likely to increase as a result of the return of combat units from Germany. The Department's requirement for the Salisbury Plain training area including Imber village and surrounding lands is expected to continue for the foreseeable future.

Experiments on Primates

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many scientific procedures have been carried out on primates in laboratories under the control of his Department in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Aitken: This is a matter delegated to the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment under its framework document. I have therefore asked the chief executive to reply direct to the hon. Member.

Letter from G. Pearson to Mr. Harry Cohen, dated 6 November 1992:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking how many scientific procedures have been carried out on primates in laboratories under the control of his Department in each of the last 10 years (Questions 16, Order Paper 29 October 1992) has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. As information on the number of scientific procedures carried out on primates can assist a potential aggressor in assessing the current state of development of our medical countermeasures against the threat of attack by chemical or biological weapons, it is not in the national interest to provide such information.

3. It is important to consider the use of animals in scientific procedures in the context of the role and function of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment. Our role is to carry out research to ensure that the Servicemen and Servicewomen of our Armed Forces are provided with adequate protective measures against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them. The United Kingdom does not possess chemical or biological weapons and all work related to such weapons ceased in the late 1950's. Nevertheless, we do have to recognise that other countries still produce and maintain considerable stocks of chemical weapons; they were possessed by Iraq during the Gulf war. It is vital that the protective measures provided for our Service personnel should have been developed and tested to ensure that they are effective and safe. Such work, which may involve the use of animals for experimental purposes is of considerable importance to the nation.

4. The number of experiments carried out in any one year at CBDE is relatively small and is less than one half of one per cent. of all animal experiments carried out in the United Kingdom. No animal experiments are carried out in order to improve weapons or ammunition or to practice surgery.

5. Animal experiments are only carried out after careful consideration has been given to alternatives. Where none are found to be an adequate substitute, it is essential to carry out some experiments involving animals; the majority involve mice, rats or guinea-pigs. It is important to select an animal that is representative of man and for some studies the marmoset or monkey is the most appropriate animal. Such studies with marmosets or primates are particularly important in evaluating a proposed new medical countermeasure prior to assessment of its acceptability in man. We have also been active in the area of environmental enrichment as this is very beneficial to the animals concerned.

6. All experiments involving the use of animals at CBDE fully meet the spirit and the letter of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986. CBDE is a registered place under the Act and all experiments are done under Home Office approved project licences by staff holding a personal licence. Unannounced visits are made by the Home Office Inspectors to satisfy themselves that the requirements of the Act are met.

Our aim is to provide the Armed Forces with medical countermeasures that meet the same standards of safety as the drugs supplied to the public.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in what category of nuclear waste are glove boxes that have been used for handling plutonium at Aldermaston and Burghfield atomic weapons establishments; and if he will make a statement on the means by which glove boxes that have been used for handling plutonium at AWE Aldermaston and AWE Burghfield are disposed of.

Mr. Aitken: Decommissioned glove boxes which have been used for handling plutonium are categorised as intermediate level waste (ILW). Such waste is currently stored on site at AWE in special containers and buildings, pending decisions on a national disposal method for ILW.

Nuclear-Powered Warships Safety Committee

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the annual budget of the nuclear-powered warships safety committee.

Mr. Aitken: About £38,000.

Nuclear Weapons (Safety)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he make a statement on his Department's progress in implementing the recommendations contained in the Oxburgh report on nuclear weapons safety.

Mr. Aitken: The Minister of Defence has accepted all the recommendations of the Oxburgh report and is proceeding with their implementation.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the annual budget of the nuclear weapons safety committee.

Mr. Aitken: About £37,000.

Nuclear Plant (Decommissioning)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the expenditure by his Department, in current and in then-year prices, since 1979, on the decommissioning of nuclear and nuclear-related plant and installations of his Department; and from which subheads of which votes this expenditure was accounted.

Mr. Aitken: I will write to the hon. Member.

Nuclear Strategic Force

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the expenditure by his Department on the nuclear strategic force in current and in then-year prices, for each year since 1979.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Estimated costs—in millions of pounds—of the nuclear strategic force from 1979-80 to 1992-93 are shown in the table. Figures for years up to and including 1991-92 are derived from tables published in the statistical volume of the annual statement on the Defence Estimates prior to 1992. The estimate for the current year is the product of an ad hoc exercise to identify the capital and operating costs associated directly with the strategic deterrent.

	Outturn at outturn prices[1]	At 1992-93 prices[1]
1979-80	126	318
1980-81	165	354
1981-82	269	519
1982-83	327	585
1983-84	382	645
1984-85	384	610
1985-86	509	770
1986-87	658	949
1987-88	882	1,205
1988-89	1,072	1,385
1989-90	1,158	1,415
1990-91	1,480	1,683
1991-92	[2]1,445	1,510
1992-93	—	1,245

[1] Outturn prices have been uprated using defence specific deflators.

[2] The 1991-92 figures are based on a breakdown using 1991 Supply Estimates.

Nuclear Accident Response Organisation

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the role and function of the Nuclear Accident Response Organisation; what is its annual budget; how many personnel are assigned to it; in what year it was first established; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The role and function of the Nuclear Accident Response Organisation is to ensure, in conjunction with the appropriate civil agencies, an effective response to safeguard the general public and MOD personnel in the unlikely event of an emergency involving defence nuclear materials. In addition to a small full-time staff in MOD Headquarters, it would draw upon the skills of a range of teams and personnel from units and establishments across the armed forces and the MOD to respond to the particular circumstances of an incident. Contingency arrangements to deal with a range of accidents have existed for as long as the MOD has used nuclear material. The annual cost of the seven full-time MOD staff in MOD HQ is some £230,000. Details of costs and numbers for the specialist teams and personnel which might be called upon, and who are largely involved in other duties in normal circumstances, are not held centrally.

Trident

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the designation of the warhead used for the British Trident programme.

Mr. Aitken: The Trident warhead has no special designation.

Nuclear Weapons (Transport)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent information his Department has received about the consequences of a possible accident between a nuclear weapons convoy and a petrochemical transporter on the M25, M1, M6, M4 or A1; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Nuclear weapons are transported by road only in specialised military vehicles and are always carried in containers that are designed and tested to resist the effects of severe impact and prolonged fuel fire, such as could occur in the situation mentioned. A fire tender always accompanies nuclear weapon convoys. The recent review of nuclear weapon safety conducted by my Department's chief scientific adviser confirmed that these arrangements

> "give a high degree of confidence in the safety and security of the load even in the case of a severe accident", and confirmed that internal containment and protection are satisfactory. A copy of this review is in the Library of the House.

Precision Cleaning

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps his Department is taking to reduce the level of solvent used by the armed forces for precision cleaning.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: MOD is investigating possible alternatives to ozone-depleting chlorinated solvents currently used for the precision cleaning of delicate instruments, surfaces made of metal, plastic or glass or combinations of materials where cleanliness is of critical importance. Alternative cleaning agents will be introduced into service as soon as their technical suitability has been determined. The amount of ozone-depleting solvents being procured is being reduced by this Department in line with the requirements of the Montreal protocol.

Gibraltar

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those buildings in Gibraltar, in the ownership of his Ministry, of historic or architectural interest, which will now be surplus to requirements when "Options for Change" is fully implemented.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The future disposition of our remaining forces in Gibraltar is currently under review, as is the extent of the estate necessary to support those forces. Meanwhile, the Gibraltar Heritage Trust, formed in 1989 by the Government of Gibraltar, is carrying out a revision of the buildings it has listed as being of architectural or historic interest. It is, therefore, not yet possible to predict which historic buildings in MOD ownership will be surplus to our requirements.

RAF Chilmark

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) service and (b) civilian jobs are affected by the proposed closure of RAF Chilmark; what are the principal tasks carried out there; where they will be carried out in future; what net savings are anticipated over the next 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: This is a matter for the RAF Maintenance Group Defence Support Agency under its chief executive, Air Vice-Marshal French. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from N. Carter to Mr. John Home Robertson, dated 5 November 1992:

1. In the absence on duty of the Maintenance Group Defence Support Agency Chief Executive, Air Vice-Marshal French, I am responding to your recent Parliamentary Question, Number 7307F.

2. The principal tasks of RAF Chilmark are the storage and maintenance of RAF non-guided aircraft weapons and ammunition, together with the bulk storage of RAF packed petroleum products. Following the closure of RAF Chilmark, the weapons and ammunition storage and maintenance task will be transferred to Army Department Ammunition Storage Depots in the UK, whilst the petroleum stores task will be transferred to an RAF Equipment Supply Depot—either at RAF Quedgeley, RAF Carlisle or RAF Stafford. The outcome of current studies will determine which depot this will be.

3. Fourteen Service and 250 civilian jobs will be affected by the closure of RAF Chilmark. The Conventional Armament Study Team's report estimated the net savings accruing from the closure of RAF Chilmark as £44 million over 10 years.

Plymouth Urban Development Corporation

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 27 October, Official Report, columns 612-13, from what vote and subhead it is proposed to find the £20 million to be transferred to the proposed Plymouth urban development corporation; what are the normal financial channels for transfer of his Ministry's funds to such a corporation; on what previous occasions funds have been transferred from his Department to an urban development corporation or local authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is currently intended that MOD funding for the proposed Plymouth urban development corporation (UDC) is made available by means of four annual transfers of funds to the DOE effected as part of the public expenditure survey (PES) process. The funding required will be deducted from the Department's overall PES settlement rather than charged to specific MOD vote sub-items. There is no record of funds being transferred from the MOD for a similar purpose in the past to either other UDCs or local authorities.

RAF Ground Training

Mr. Temple-Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals there are for the rationalisation of ground training in the Royal Air Force.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As part of our programme to create a more efficient structure for the RAF under "Defence for the 90s", a comprehensive study into the RAF's ground training organisation has been carried out. The aim of the study is to eliminate spare capacity and maximise efficiency by meeting future requirements for trained manpower in the most cost-effective way.

The proposals resulting from the study involve concentrating aircraft engineering training at RAF Cosford; recruit and administration training at RAF Halton; and, subject to further review, ground communications training at RAF Locking. It is proposed to close RAF Swinderby by July 1993; RAF Hereford by July 1994; and to reduce RAF Newton to an enclave by March 1995. It is also proposed wherever practicable to market test support services at the remaining stations.

The proposed future organisation will provide better value for money in terms of cost savings and suitability to meet our future training requirements.

All possible measures will be taken to minimise civilian redundancies at the locations concerned. Any staff leaving prematurely under voluntary or compulsory redundancy terms would receive appropriate compensation and be eligible for the services provided by the MOD redundancy counselling and outplacement service.

These proposals are subject to consultation with trade unions and a final decision will be taken in the light of any representations. A consultative document has been passed to the trade unions and is being made available to all members of staff at the stations concerned today. I have arranged for a copy to be placed in the Library of the House.

Chile

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which defence research agency, or other defence establishments have been used in the past 10 years by the armed forces in Chile.

Mr. Aitken: The information requested is not available centrally, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 9 November 1992

DEFENCE

RAF Hercules

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many relief flights have been made by RAF Hercules aircraft into Sarajevo airport; how many Hercules aircraft are devoted to this task; what information he has on the number of flights by other nations' air forces; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As at [illegible] November, RAF Hercules aircraft have made a total of 193 flights into Sarajevo. We have made available to the UN High Commissioner for Refugees four C-130 Hercules aircraft for use in accordance with Security Council resolution 758. The airlift co-ordinated by UNHCR and United Nations protection forces began on 3 July when one of our Hercules aircraft left Zagreb for Sarajevo. The other three aircraft remain on standby at RAF Lyneham. The information we have on total flights by other nations as at 5 November 1992 is as follows:

Country	Number of flights
Algeria	1
Belgium	28
Canada	160
Denmark	18
France	290
Germany	218
Greece	5
Italy	149
Kuwait	2
Netherlands	13
Norway	10
Portugal	1
Saudi Arabia	4
Spain	6
Sweden	27
Tunisia	1
Turkey	21
United States	309
MED du MONDE (Contractor)	1

RAF Missiles

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many RAF service and civilian jobs will be lost as a result of the move of in-depth maintenance of RAF missiles to royal naval armament depots; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Some depot level maintenance of RAF missiles has been carried out at Royal Navy armaments depot—RNAD—facilities for many years efficiently and effectively. Our plan to move more work to RNADs is expected initially to save in the order of 16 service and three civilian posts. Some service posts are planned to be civilianised once the new arrangements are established.

Sentry Aircraft

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether RAF E-3 Sentry aircraft are to receive an equivalent advanced passive sector system refit to that to be provide[illegible] equivalent USAF and NATO E-3 aircraft.

Mr. Aitken: RAF E-3D Sentry aircraft already have an advanced passive sector system equivalent to that to be provided for United States Air Force and NATO aircraft. There is no requirement for a refit.

Ministry Committees

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the committees that operate within his Ministry, giving the objective and membership in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: The principal committees operating within the Ministry of Defence are listed in a publication entitled "The Ministry of Defence", a copy of which is available in the Library. The current edition is, however, out of date and is being revised. I have, therefore, also placed in the Library an updating paper listing the main MOD committees, their objectives and membership. A number of other committees exist in the Department or are convened from time to time as required, but these could be included in the paper only at disproportionate cost and effort.

Ministry Land

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the sites of Ministry land that have been sold to wildlife or landscape conservation organisations in each of the past five years, giving the name of the sites, to whom they were sold, the hectarage involved and whether the land was designated for conservation purposes; and what was the type of designation in each case.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

HMS Drake

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost to his Department of running HMS Drake; how much was spent in each of the last five years on hyperbaric medicine at HMS Drake; how many patients have attended in the past two years; and how many patients were sent from HMS Drake to the diving diseases research centre at Fort Bovisand in each of the past two years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The cost of running HMS Drake in the financial year 1991-92 was £27 million. No money has been spent on hyperbaric medicine at HMS Drake in the last five years. A total of 16,976 patients attended HMS Drake in 1991 and to date in 1992, 21,475 patients have attended. No patients have attended for hyperbaric treatment at HMS Drake or been referred to the diving diseases research centre at Fort Bovisand in the last two years.

Mr. W. L. Martin

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) when he expects to pay Mr. W. L. Martin of Blackdown goat farm, Loddeswell, Kingsbridge, compensation for the loss of a cow resulting from a low-flying helicopter on 5 February; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when he expects to reply to the two letters written by Mr. John Janes of Messrs. How and Janes, solicitors, Fore street, Kingsbridge, South Devon, regarding the claim for compensation submitted by Mr. W. L. Martin of Blackdown goat farm, Loddeswell, Kingsbridge.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A letter was sent to Mr. Martin's solicitors, Messrs. How and Janes, on 28 October offering a sum in payment of his claim.

Redundancies

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the redundancy terms offered to civilian employees of the Ministry of Defence and contracted employees made redundant as a result of reductions in defence expenditure or relocation and rationalisation.

Mr. Aitken: Civil servants' redundancy payments are made under the terms of the principal civil service pension scheme and the benefits are based on reckonable service and pensionable pay. Generally, those aged 50 or over receive an immediate payment of their superannuation lump sum and an annual compensation payment, in lieu of and equal to their pension, and calculated using enhanced reckonable service. They also receive a compensation lump sum of up to six months' pensionable pay. Those under 50 have their pension benefits preserved to the minimum retirement age and receive an immediate compensation payment of up to three years' pensionable pay. A commercially run redundancy counselling and outplacement service has been set up to help civil servants who have been made redundant identify new opportunities.

My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State will write to the hon. Member about the redundancy terms offered to contracted employees.

17 Training Regiment, Royal Artillery

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what estimate he has made of the number of civilian redundancies that will occur if the 17 Training Regiment, Royal Artillery, moves from Woolwich;

(2) if he will make a statement on the future of the 17 Training Regiment of the Royal Artillery in Woolwich.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No final decision has been made on the future of 17 Training Regiment.

Queen Elizabeth Military Hospital

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to make a statement on the future of the Queen Elizabeth military hospital in Woolwich.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Eltham (Mr. Bottomley) on 19 October 1992, Official Report, column 158.

Departmental Properties

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many houses and flats in the ownership of his Department are currently vacant in each of the London boroughs; and how many have been vacant for more than three months, more than six months and more than one year;

(2) if he will list the number of residential properties in the ownership of his Department in each of the London boroughs showing separately the number of houses and flats.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State will write to the hon. Member.

Trident

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his oral answer of 27 October to the hon. Member for Motherwell, North (Dr. Reid), Official Report, columns 860-61, suggesting a figure of 500 warheads, if he will now publish the number of nuclear weapon warheads to be deployed on Trident by the United Kingdom.

Mr. Rifkind: No. We have long emphasised that our Trident submarines will enter service carrying no more than 128 warheads each, but that the actual number to be deployed will be decided in the light of circumstances at the time.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Bailiffs

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what representations he has received on the organisation and management of bailiffs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: On 30 October 1992, when the consultation period closed, 98 responses to the consultation paper on the organisation and management of civil enforcement agents had been received by this Department. Some additional late responses are also expected. The views expressed are now being considered, but have not yet been analysed in detail.

Magistrates

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many magistrates there are in England and Wales; how many are (a) women, (b) from the ethnic minorities and (c) ethnic minority women.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The total number of magistrates in England and Wales at 1 January 1992 was 29,441 of whom 13,336 were women. The total number from the ethnic minorities is not recorded centrally but of 2,017 appointments made in 1991, a total of 97—4·8 per cent.—were from the ethnic minorities, of whom 40 were women. All these figures include appointments made by the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will give the political balance for each magistrates bench in England and Wales.

Mr. John M. Taylor: This information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Duchy Accounts

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on what date he expects to publish the latest accounts of the duchy.

Mr. Waldegrave: Duchy of Lancaster accounts are placed in the Library of the House in late January.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Civil Servants

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many civil servants are currently employed by all Departments and agencies at each of the grades from grade 7 upwards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The table shows the total number of non-industrial civil servants at each of the grades from grade 7 upwards, as employed by all Departments and agencies, at 1 April 1992.

Grade	Staff[1] in post
1	36
2	130
3	487
4	280
5	2,557
6	4,569
7	13,321
Total	21,379

[1] Full-time equivalents (part-time staff are counted as half units).
Source: Mandate and departmental returns.

These grades represent just over 4 per cent. of the non-industrial civil service.

Banking Supervision

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to appoint the head of the new investigations unit in connection with banking supervision from a firm which has not been criticised by the Department of Trade and Industry inspectors.

Mr. Nelson: The appointment of the head of the new special investigations unit is a matter for the Governor of the Bank of England.

Banknotes

Mr. Janner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will consult the Governor of the Bank of England concerning changing the colour of the new £20 and £10 banknotes so as to avoid confusion between them.

Mr. Dorrell: The design of Bank of England notes is the responsibility of the Bank. It advises that it has no plans to change the colours of the new £20 and £10 notes, which are predominantly purple and orange-brown respectively. As well as different overall colours, the distinguishing features of the new notes include a bold coloured symbol on the front, different historical portraits on the reverse and different sizes, both in terms of height and width.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will consult the Governor of the Bank of England concerning the redesign of United Kingdom banknotes or the use of different paper so as to reduce the risk of forgeries.

Mr. Dorrell: The design of Bank of England notes is the responsibility of the Bank. It advises that it has no plans to redesign its banknotes or to use different paper. The existing designs and the paper used take full account of the need for security against counterfeiting.

Tobacco

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 30 June, Official Report, column 467, what is the expected loss of United Kingdom revenues from tobacco duties arising from the removal of fiscal frontiers; what increased level of tobacco imports this represents; and what action he will take in response to these changes.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 5 November 1992]: The removal of fiscal frontiers will improve trade opportunities for both imports and exports. However, commercial imports of tobacco and other excise goods will remain subject to United Kingdom rates of duty before they can be sold in the United Kingdom and there will therefore be no change in the volume of commercial imports or exports arising from the difference between United Kingdom rates of duty and duties in other member states.

The removal of fiscal frontiers is expected to result in an increase in levels of cross border shopping for personal consump[illegible]. An estimate of £250 million for the revenue loss associated with personal importation of all excise goods was included in my right hon. Friend's 1992 Budget judgment—see "Budget Report and Financial Statement 1992-93", page 56.

To adapt to the new circumstances of the single market, Customs have developed a new control strategy based on flexible anti-smuggling teams. As the focus of controls on EC trade is moved away from the physical frontiers, these mobile teams acting on intelligence, focused risk assessment and profiling will replace traditional systematic Customs checks at ports and airports.

Financial Services (Regulation)

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, what discussions he has had with the Financial Intermediaries, Managers and Brokers Regulatory Association on the operation of self-regulation arising from the Financial Services Act 1986.

Mr. Dorrell: [holding answer 6 November 1992]: Matters relating to FIMBRA and the other bodies recognised by the Securities and Investments Board under the Financial Services Act are primarily for the board.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Modernisation

37. Mr. Connarty: To ask the Lord President of the Council what proposals he has to modernise the operations of the House.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to the oral answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway).

Electronic Voting

42. Ms. Hoey: To ask the Lord President of the Council what consideration he has given to changing the system of voting in the Chamber by the introduction of an electronic system.

Mr. Newton: None.

Departmental Select Committees

43. Mr. Barnes: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many reports have been produced by Departmental Select Committees arising out of work undertaken by these bodies in the 1987-1992 Parliament; and how many of these reports dealt exclusively with Northern Ireland matters.

Mr. Newton: Departmental Select Committees agreed to 317 reports, excluding special reports, during the 1987-1992 Parliament, of which five dealt exclusively with Northern Ireland matters.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

East Timor

3. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 28 October to the hon. Member for Norwood, (Mr. Fraser) Official Report, column 697, what steps he has taken as chairman to refer the question of human rights in East Timor to the European Foreign Affairs Council.

Mr. Goodlad: None. European Community Ministers have considered and expressed a view on this subject, most recently in the presidency's statement to the 47th session of the UN General Assembly.

Plutonium

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish the framework guidelines implemented by Her Majesty's Government to cover the transfer or retransfer of plutonium from the United Kingdom to foreign states under article 9 of the International Atomic Energy Agency INFCIRC/254/REVI part 1, on nuclear export controls.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that the then Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs gave to the then hon. Member for Birmingham, Northfield on 31 March 1976. The relevant paragraphs state:

"When considering the export of nuclear equipment, material or technology we shall study each case on its merits. Our first consideration will always be the provisions of the Non-Proliferation Treaty, the Euratom Treaty, and whether or not the prospective customer has concluded a Safeguards Agreement with the International Atomic Energy Agency.

Our detailed requirements will include the application of IAEA safeguards or comparable safeguards which are verified by the IAEA to exported nuclear equipment and material: an assurance that whatever we export will not be used to manufacture nuclear explosives for any purpose: an assurance that our exports will be adequately protected against the possibility of theft or sabotage; and assurances that if the equipment or material that we export is re-exported then the new purchaser will be required to give the same assurances on safeguards, non-explosive use and physical protection as were given by the original customer."—[Official Report, 31 March 1976; Vol. 908, c. 513.]

The safeguards requirement in these guidelines was subsequently expanded by the statement issued by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on 24 September 1991:

> "As part of our policy of seeking further to strengthen the barriers against nuclear proliferation, the British Government has decided with immediate effect to adopt a policy of full-scope safeguards as a condition of supply. This means that in future Britain will not allow the export of any significant new nuclear supplies or materials to any country, other than the nuclear weapon states, where there are any unsafeguarded nuclear installations."

Tunisia

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make an estimate of the number of British tourists who visited Tunisia during the past year.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: There are no detailed figures available from Government records of the numbers of British tourists visiting Tunisia in the past year. However, the Tunisian tourist office in London says that 120,326 British tourists visited Tunisia in 1991 and that it expects that around 200,000 British tourists will have visited Tunisia by the end of 1992.

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration he has given to the reports of Amnesty International in March and October concerning human rights abuses in Tunisia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are aware of the Amnesty International reports and have raised the question of human rights with the Tunisian Government.

Nuclear Non-proliferation Treaty

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those states that have ratified or acceded to the non-proliferation treaty since 1 January, including the date of ratification or accession for each state.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The following states have become parties to the non-proliferation treaty this year:

	1992
Estonia	7 January
Latvia	31 January
China	9 March
Slovenia	7 April
Uzbekistan	7 May
France	3 August
Azerbaijan	22 September

	1992
Namibia	2 October
Niger	9 October

Israel

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to invite Prime Minister Rabin of Israel to visit London.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: As I told the House on 28 October, at column 1008, the Israeli Prime Minister will visit London in December.

Regional and Minority Languages

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are Her Majesty's Government's intentions regarding signing the European charter for regional or minority languages.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We are still considering whether to sign the European charter on minority or regional languages.

St. Helena

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy not to approve the proposal to establish a clothing manufacturing plant on St. Helena unless it has the support of the local population.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We understand that the proposal did not gain the support of St. Helenians. It has accordingly been rejected by the Saint Helena Government.

Angola

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken within the international community to help bring about a return to peace and constitutional rule in Angola following the recent election; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have been working closely with the United Nations Security Council and our EC partners, as evidenced by United Nations Security Council resolution 785 adopted on 30 October and an EC statement issued on 4 November, copies of which have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

In Luanda, our ambassador and his staff were instrumental in supporting the efforts of the United Nations Secretary-General to broker the cease fire which came into force on 1 November. They continue to be very active in support of efforts by the United Nations special representative in Angola to consolidate the cease fire.

IAEA

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much money has been allocated by Her Majesty's Government to the International Atomic Energy Agency to undertake monitoring work in relation to the non-proliferation treaty in 1992-93; what plans he has for the allocation of money for this purpose in the future; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 8 July 1992 at Official Report, column 211. For 1992-93 the United Kingdom has contributed £5·1 million to the Agency's regular budget. The Government will continue to meet its obligations as a member of the agency. Financial provision for the payment of future subscriptions will be sought through the main Supply Estimates.

EDUCATION

Parents in Partnership

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has received concerning the future of Parents in Partnership; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: I have received several letters from Parents in Partnership about future funding arrangements. This Department undertook to provide transitional funding for a limited period. Now that the three-year period has come to an end, it is for the London boroughs to support local and regional voluntary groups as they see fit.

St. Paul's Secondary School, Abbey Wood

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has received regarding the future of St. Paul's Roman Catholic secondary school in Abbey Wood; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has received one letter about St. Paul's school and I have replied to one previous question. I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Eltham (Mr. Bottomley) on 19 October, Official Report, column 8.

Schools, Chelmsford

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list, for each school in the Chelmsford parliamentary constituency, the amount of money given to each school under the local management of schools formula in the last financial year and the current financial year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: Details of schools' budget shares are contained within part 2 of the section 42 budget statements prepared and published by each local education authority. A copy of the statements for 1991-92 and 1992-93 published by Essex county council have been placed in the Library.

Determination of budgets for a local authority's schools has to be in accordance with the local management of schools formula devised by the LEA within the national policy framework.

Examination Results

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much his Department plans to spend on the compilation and publication of comparative tables of school examination results.

Mr. Forth: We now estimate that the total cost to the Department of compilation, publication and distribution to meet the expected demand for school-by-school comparative tables of examination results will be some £1·4 million.

Consultants

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list all of the reports his Department has commissioned from external consultants in each of the last three years; for each of the last three years, how many reports from external consultants to his Department led to further consultancy work being commissioned, stating for each of these who were the original and subsequent consultants and briefly describing the subject matter of the consultancy work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forman: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Leeds, Central (Mr. Fatchett) on 15 July, Official Report, column 727. The majority of consultancies listed for the years 1989, 1990 and 1991 in my earlier reply led to reports, some of which were for internal use; some of which were published. The following consultancies—asterisked—were either renewed or led to further work being commissioned:

		Consultancy Commissioned
1990
*90/7.	Peter Pierce-Price	Quality assurance of BCCTIS 2000 Contract renewed on 31 March 91 and 31 March 92

University Staff

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) how many readers and professors there are in each of Britain's universities;

(2) whether he will publish a list showing the numbers of (a) academic and (b) non-academic staff at each university.

Mr. Forman: The latest published details of academic staff are contained in "University Statistics 1989-90, Volume One, Staff and Students", published by the Universities Statistical Record—USR—and in "The Academic Staff in Polytechnics and Colleges: 1991", an information document published by the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council—PCFC. I understand that copies of the USR publication are available in the Library and copies of the PCFC document will be placed in the Library. Details of non-academic staff at individual institutions are not available centrally.

PRIME MINISTER

Library and Information Services

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Prime Minister what inter-departmental co-ordination of Government policy towards library and information services exists; and what steps he is taking to improve such co-ordination.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for National Heritage liaises with colleagues on library and information matters where these are not within a specific departmental interest. Department of National Heritage officials have close working relations with other Government Departments. The National Heritage Secretary is considering how far these links need to be strengthened, and will initiate action as necessary.

Security Services

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what is his policy in regard to permitting serving members of the security services to give evidence in court cases held in the United Kingdom on matters related to their responsibilities.

The Prime Minister: There is no objection of principle to serving members of the security and intelligence services giving evidence in court cases held in the United Kingdom on matters relating to their responsibilities, subject to considerations of the public interest, including protection of identification, and to the condition of relevance being satisfied.

European Parliament

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what is Her Majesty's Government's policy in regard to examining reports produced by the European Parliament committees.

The Prime Minister: Departments in London closely follow European Parliament—EP—developments on subjects within their responsibilities. Councils in Brussels take account of EP resolutions relating to their current business. Each Foreign Affairs Council considers resolutions recently approved by the European Parliament and the presidency draws attention to resolutions of particular importance.

Edinburgh Summit

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister whether Her Majesty's Government will support the proposals to be made at the Edinburgh summit by the Government of Denmark.

The Prime Minister: The proposals submitted by the Danish Government on ratification of the Maastricht treaty will form the basis for our discussions with other member states. Our objective is to agree the framework for a solution at Edinburgh.

Indonesia

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Prime Minister if he will review the Government's opposition to an arms embargo against Indonesia.

The Prime Minister: No. I do not believe that a review is necessary.

European Union

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what opportunities exist for citizens of the United Kingdom to make suggestions to the European Commission for proposals to the Council under the provisions of the treaty on European Union.

The Prime Minister: Any citizen of a member state may make suggestions to the Commission.

Maastricht Treaty

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister what proposals he will put forward to enable the Danish request for exemption from part two of the treaty on European union, concerning citizenship, to be met.

The Prime Minister: A memorandum was presented by the Danish Government to Community member states on 30 October. This will now be discussed within the Community.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister in what areas of policy covered by the treaty on European union will the Commission's role be solely advisory.

The Prime Minister: There are provisions in the treaty on European union for the Commission to be consulted on a proposal by another party; for example, article 168a—court of first instance—and article N—amendment of the treaty.

Government Employees

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Prime Minister what is the number of persons employed in general Government using the figures for (a) 1961 and (b) 1991; and what is the percentage increase that the 1991 figure represents.

The Prime Minister: The information required is available in the Central Statistical Office publication "Economic Trends", December 1991—Table D of "Employment in the public and private sectors". A copy is available in the Library.

Public Record Office

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Prime Minister how many papers his Department has currently withdrawn from the Public Record Office; if he will list their titles; and when he estimates that they will be returned.

The Prime Minister: About 30 files of papers on open deposit at the Public Record Office are currently requisitioned for departmental use in London as permitted under the legislation, but the number may change from day to day. They have mainly been requisitioned for purposes of official historical research. A member of the public applying for access to any such file has only to cite its title and number, by reference to the shelf lists held at the Public Record Office, and arrangements can normally be made for its early return to the public reading room for as long as may reasonably be required.

Health Pay Review Boards

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to suspend the health pay review boards; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 6 November 1992]: The Government see a continuing role for these review bodies, whose advice it has greatly valued. We have made clear to the review bodies, and more generally, the importance we attach to tight control over public spending and borrowing. As part of this, the Government will be seeking to maintain firm downward pressure on growth in the pay of public sector employees, including those whose pay is subject to the recommendations of the pay review bodies.

President Yeltsin

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make representations to President Yeltsin concerning the Russian seal cull at his forthcoming meeting; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 5 November 1992]: The Russian authorities are well aware of public concern in the United Kingdom about seal culling. The EC banned the import of harp and hooded seal pup skins in 1983. The United Kingdom persuaded the Community to extend the ban indefinitely in 1989.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what official visits the Minister for Overseas Development has made over the last three weeks; what visits she plans over the next three weeks; which countries she visited; and for how long in each case.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The information requested is as follows:

Official Visit	Days
Last three weeks	Duration of visit
Geneva	1
Russia and the Ukraine	3
Japan	4
Brussels	1
Next three weeks	Expected duration
Spain	1
Brussels	1½
New York	2

The durations of the visits do not include time spent travelling to the destination.

Tanzania

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current level of aid to Tanzania broken down by project.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Gross bilateral aid to Tanzania in 1991 was £40·344 million. Of this, £957,000 was project aid, £17·977 million programme aid, £13·196 million technical co-operation, and £8·214 million other types of aid, such as flows from the Commonwealth Development Corporation.

The table lists the capital and technical co-operation projects currently supported.

Tropical Forestry

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what efforts have been undertaken by the Overseas Development Administration to press for the reform of the tropical forestry action plan.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In many international meetings since November 1990 the Overseas Development Administration has argued strongly for the reform of the tropical forestry action plan. Our aim continues to be to make it more responsive to the needs of local people and forest conservation and to focus it more on capacity building and policy development in developing countries. We have also argued for the establishment of a broad-based consultative group to oversee its operations.

Somalia

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the latest situation in Somalia generally and in the Republic of Somaliland in particular in the light of the resignation of Ambassador Sahnoun; and what representations the British Government have made to the Secretary-General of the United Nations as a result.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development met representatives from non-governmental organisations on 3 November to discuss the situation in the light of Ambassador Sahnoun's resignation. The security and relief situation in central and southern Somalia is volatile. In the north, the situation is more settled.

Acting bilaterally and on behalf of our Community partners, we have impressed upon the United Nations Secretary-General and his new special representative in Somalia, Mr. Ismat Kittani, the need for United Nations troops to be deployed quickly and for the United Nations' 100-day plan to continue. We have assured Mr. Ismat Kittani that we shall give him our full support.

TRANSPORT

Coal Imports

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what port facilities are currently under construction for the purpose of handling bulk imports of foreign coal; and what public funds are being spent on these facilities or related rail or road infrastructure improvements.

Mr. Norris: The development of bulk handling facilities suitable for importing foreign coal is a matter for individual ports. I understand that such facilities are under construction at present at Gladstone dock, Liverpool, Royal Portbury dock, Avonmouth, and Kingston Terminal, Hull.

There are no improvements to the road network directly related to these developments. The provision of rail infrastructure is a matter for the commercial judgment of British Rail, However, the Department of Transport will be paying for widening a railway bridge across the M5, under a legally binding agreement with British Rail entered into when the M5 was being built. The current estimated cost is £2·35 million.

At Hull, construction of associated rail facilities is being assisted under section 8 of the Railways Act 1974 in recognition of the environmental benefits of distributing the product by rail rather than by road. The grant agreed was £226,000.

Bus Services

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many companies in Scotland have (a) started operating bus services and (b) ceased operating bus services since the implementation of the Transport Act 1985.

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many companies in England and Wales have (a) started operating bus services and (b) ceased operating bus services since the implementation of the Transport Act 1985.

Mr. Freeman: I have been asked to reply.

Information on the number of operators of local bus services is not available.

Public Transport (Women)

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what guidelines are currently provided by his Department to transport planners and providers concerning the provision of safe public transport for women.

Mr. Norris: The remit of my Department's standing panel on assaults on bus staff has been extended to include the monitoring of data on assaults on bus passengers and possible remedial measures. The panel has recommended that bus operators install radios and video cameras in their vehicles to protect both employees and passengers.

We have also co-sponsored the passenger guidance leaflet published by the Suzy Lamplugh Trust, "Travel Safely by Public Transport". The leaflet contains practical safety tips for women using all forms of public transport.

Travel Cards

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will make it his policy that whole system travel cards should continue to be provided within the proposed franchising system after rail privatisation;

(2) if he will make it his policy to extend the requirement on carriers to participate in the west midlands travel card scheme beyond the current three-year provision.

Mr. Freeman: Travel cards are attractive to customers and have marketing advantages for operators. Our objective following privatisation is that travel cards should be sufficiently attractive commercially that franchisees will wish to participate in them.

Preston-Colne Railway

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects British Rail to be in a position to run new rolling stock on the Preston to Colne line.

Mr. Freeman: The service is already operated by modern Pacer units.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the quality, speed, comfort and reliability of the train service between Preston and Colne.

Mr. Freeman: These matters are primarily for the British Railways Board. However, I understand that, while services have operated reasonably well over recent months, there is still room for improvements. British Rail's passengers charter provides for compensation to be paid to passengers where performance falls significantly below agreed standards.

London Underground

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what stage London Underground Ltd.'s discussions on its proposals for the East London line extensions with the local boroughs along the route of the project have reached; and when, subject to the project meeting his Department's criteria, he expects London Underground Ltd. to seek parliamentary and planning approval under the powers contained in the Transport and Works Act 1992.

Mr. Norris: Over recent months, London Underground Ltd. have held a number of formal borough consultation meetings to discuss the principle of the project. These have been supported by meetings addressing specific issues. The project is currently being considered by the boards of London Underground and London Transport and no decision has yet been taken on when any powers should be sought.

Rail Privatisation

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how he proposes Rail Track will raise investment income to maintain and extend the network; and if he will make a statement on the impact of franchise costs.

Mr. Freeman: Investment will largely be financed over its life from charges to operators. However, the Government are also ready to provide direct support for investment in the railway for schemes which, although not earning an adequate financial return, provide a satisfactory cost-benefit return when wider benefits are taken into account. The benefits of investment, as well as the costs, for franchisees will of course differ from case to case.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the effect of his privatisation proposals for British Rail on exploitation of the opportunities to improve the north-south rail service in the Coventry travel-to-work area and Coventry station.

Mr. Freeman: I expect the introduction of franchising to enable private sector operators to respond more flexibly to customer need.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to ensure that the financial regime governing the post-privatisation rail service will require local service and local economic factors to be taken into consideration in investment decisions.

Mr. Freeman: Privatisation will help the railways to give passenger and freight customers the services they expect. The Government have made clear that they fully recognise the social and other benefits of regional and commuter passenger services and are committed to providing continuing subsidy to support them.

Railway Regulator

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will state the statutory provision governing the operation of the railway regulator with effect from 1 January 1993.

Mr. Freeman: We shall shortly lay before the House regulations under section 2 of the European Communities Act 1972 to implement European Council Directive 91/440 on 1 January 1993. The regulations will provide for the establishment of an international rail regulator to oversee access to the rail network by international services.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Housing Benefit

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the net income left currently after payment of tax and national insurance, and deduction of housing benefit, community charge benefit and where applicable family credit, for (a) a single person in employment and (b) a family with children, of whom one adult is in employment, for every extra £1 of earnings while benefit entitlement remains, and how this would change were the housing benefit tapers to be adjusted to (i) 50 per cent., (ii) 55 per cent., (iii) 60 per cent., (iv) 70 per cent., (v) 75 per cent. and (vi) 80 per cent.

Mr. Burt: The information requested is in the tables. The following assumptions have been made:

1. The single employed person is over age 25.
2. The family with children contains two children aged 6 and 4.
3. The starting level of gross earnings in each case is that which gives a net income after housing costs around the level of net income after housing costs if in receipt of income support.

All other assumptions are as in the published tax benefit model tables.

Asylum

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what provision exists for financially assisting those seeking political asylum in the period between entry and the receipt by his Department of the standard acknowledgement letter proving identity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: Income support is available to asylum seekers under the urgent cases rules from the date of their claim until their immigration status has been determined by the Home Office.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to speed up the delivery of cold weather payments this winter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: No such plans are necessary as delays are already at a minimum. Last year's improvements to the cold weather payments scheme introduced automatic payments without the need to claim. As a result girocheques are posted on average within 11 days of a period of cold weather being declared, which is a considerable improvement on any previous scheme.

Early Retirement Pensions

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will ask the Occupational Pensions Board to review the imposition of early retirement reductions in many pension schemes.

Miss Widdecombe: No. It is a well-established principle that a member of an occupational pension scheme who retires before the scheme's normal retirement age usually receives a reduced pension. The amount of any reduction, which is calculated on an actuarial basis, is determined according to the rules of the scheme.

Community Care Grants

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if community care grants from the social fund are payable to help people without furniture or cooking facilities who are being rehoused from local authority temporary accommodation for the homeless.

Mr. Scott: Yes. People in these circumstances may receive a community care grant; but, as with all applications to the social fund, it is for the social fund officer to decide whether a payment can be made after taking account of all the factors in each case.

HEALTH

Health Inequalities

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made, and what specific measures have been taken to reach the World Health Organisation's target of a 25 per cent. reduction in health inequalities by the year 2000.

Dr. Mawhinney: The "Health of the Nation" Green Paper—Cm. 1523, appendix 1—reviewed progress towards the World Health Organisation "Health for All" targets. As illustrated in the subsequent White Paper—Cm. 1986—the Government have taken and are taking a wide variety of measures to continue the improvements in health that have been achieved across the board, and particularly to focus on people at greater risk.

Benzodiazepines

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) residential and (b) day centres have been set up over the past year to help people withdraw from benzodiazepines.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not held centrally.

Hospital Beds

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many beds are bed-blocked at each of the general hospitals in London.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Tomlinson Report

Ms. Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish her financial analysis on the capital cost of implementing the recommendations of the Tomlinson inquiry.

Dr. Mawhinney: We received Sir Bernard Tomlinson's report on 15 October, and we shall consider its recommendations carefully. We shall publish our proposals for action, and their financial implications, in the new year.

Ms. Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish the detailed evidence on which Sir Bernard Tomlinson based his view that St. Thomas's and Guy's hospital should merge on to one site without detriment to patient care in south London.

Dr. Mawhinney: Sir Bernard Tomlinson's report refers to meetings with more than 1,000 people, and to 127 written submissions. Sir Bernard distilled this material into the strategic report requested by Ministers.

Krypton-85

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what studies have been conducted by her Department into the health effects of Krypton-85.

Mr. Sackville: Assessments of the dose to a local population resulting from a release of the currently allowed does limit of Krypton-85 have been made by the National Radiological Protection Board, the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution. I am advised that the dose at this level would be of the order of one microSievert per annum and may be regarded as negligible in relation to the average natural background dose from all types of natural radiation of 2,200 microSievert per annum.

Vaccination

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she intends to make vaccination against Hepatitis B part of normal national health service vaccination procedure; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Hepatitis B immunisation is already recommended for a number of at-risk groups, and is kept under constant review, with expert advice from the joint committee on vaccination and immunisation and the advisory group on hepatitis. The continuing decline in laboratory reports of the disease is very welcome.

Hyberbaric Medicine

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what percentage of the budget of each regional health authority is spent on research into hyperbaric medicine; and what information he has on expenditure on hyperbaric medicine of other EC countries for each of the last three years;

(2) what percentage of the budget of each regional health authority has been spent on hyperbaric medicine for the last three years.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the extent of Government funding of research into hyperbaric medicine.

Dr. Mawhinney: The main agency through which the Government support biomedical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant-in-aid through the Office of Science and Technology under the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. I understand that the MRC is currently funding a number of research projects into hyperbaric medicine at its clinical research centre at Northwick Park.

The Department of Health is not currently funding any research into hyperbaric medicine.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the start-up cost for each of the second and third wave hospitals and national health service unit trusts; and if she will state which budget has met this cost in each instance.

Dr. Mawhinney: In the second wave, £226,000 was allocated to each NHS trust as a start-up cost. This non recurring revenue addition, top sliced from vote 1, hospital and community health services, is paid to regions to help cover expenditure incurred by trusts during their shadow running period—the period immediately prior to their operational date when they have no access to money of their own. This covers shadow board costs, legal expenses connected with the transfer of assets, employment of staff and other miscellaneous expenses.

A similar sum will be allocated to third wave trusts.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 3 November, Official Report, column 180, how much grant was paid to each national health service unit applying for trust status for (a) training and (b) development costs during the application process.

Dr. Mawhinney: Training and development grants were not paid to individual units.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 3 November, Official Report, column 180, how much of the revenue grant paid to trusts during their shadow running period was for (a) shadow board costs, (b) legal expenses, (c) employment of staff and (d) miscellaneous expenses.

Dr. Mawhinney: This allocation is not broken down centrally and is for the trusts themselves to determine, depending on their individual circumstances.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 3 November, Official Report, column 180, how much each trust has spent on (a) shadow board costs, (b) legal expenses, (c) employment of staff and (d) miscellaneous expenses; and if she will define what costs are included under miscellaneous expenses.

Dr. Mawhinney: The amount spent by each trust on these individual items is not held centrally. Miscellaneous expenses include any expense connected with tasks necessary to take over full operational responsibility from 1 April.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 3 November, Official Report, column 180, how the revenue grant to trusts during their shadow running period is calculated.

Dr. Mawhinney: The amount allocated for top-sliced funding to meet start-up costs and consultation costs is divided on an equal basis and paid to successful trusts in each wave.

Birth Statistics

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health further to her answer of 30 October, Official Report, column 936, if she will list by Benefits Agency district the number of live births during 1989, 1990 and 1991.

Mr. Sackville: The boundaries of some Benefits Agency districts split postcodes and the data requested are therefore not available in the form requested.

NHS Staff

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the number of redundancies among national health service staff by profession, that have taken place in each region for each of the last three years.

Dr. Mawhinney: Data on redundancies in the national health service are not collected centrally, other than in respect of staff who are both over 50 years of age and have at least five years' reckonable service for superannuation purposes. These data are not broken down by grade.

Qa Business Services Ltd.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the operation of the Qa Business Services Ltd. pension scheme.

Dr. Mawhinney: Administration of the Qa pension fund, following the collapse of Qa Business Services Ltd., is being undertaken by the independent trustees, Bradstock Financial Services Ltd.

Grants

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish her Department's policy on the issuing of grants under its section 64 general scheme; and if she will make a statement on changes to the policy agreed for the last 12 months.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 29 October at columns 842-43. Copies of the notes of guidance for applicants for 1993-94, together with the covering letter I sent to all voluntary organisations receiving, or applying for, a section 64 general scheme grant, have been placed in the Library.

NHS Costs

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 3 November, Official Report, column 180, how much was spent by each region (a) on statutory consultation costs and (b) on conveyancing costs; and how much was spent by each trust (i) during their shadow running periods and (ii) on training and developmental costs.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not held centrally.

Regional Health Authorities

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to make a statement on the future of regional health authorities.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We are consulting interested parties over the future relationship between Ministers, the NHS Management Executive and NHS authorities and trusts.

Computerised Records

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish the guidelines issued by her Department on the use of computerised patient records by general practitioners; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: No specific guidelines have been issued on the use of computerised patient records by practitioners. General practitioners are required by their terms and conditions of service to keep adequate patient records on forms supplied by family health service authorities. We will be reviewing the extent to which these terms of service should be amended to take account of new technology.

Drugs

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much was spent on drugs in the national health service for 1990-91 and 1991-92; what is the latest estimate for expenditure in 1992-93; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Expenditure on drugs by the family health services in England amounted to £2,080 million in 1990-91 and £2,317 million in 1991-92. Provision in main estimates for 1992-93 is £2,444 million. A revised forecast will be available at the time of the Chancellor's autumn statement.

The annual accounts of health authorities in England record total expenditure on drugs of £460 million for 1990-911 An equivalent figure for 1991-92 will be available later this year. Analyses of expenditure are not collected in-year and any estimate for 1992-93 would therefore be speculative.

London Ambulance Service

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish (a) the proposed terms of reference for the inquiry into the London ambulance service, (b) the membership of the inquiry team, (c) the timetable for the inquiry's work and (d) the likely publication date of the inquiry's report; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State gave the Member for Bromsgrove (Mr. Thomason) on 6 November at columns 445-46.

NHS Management Executive

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many times the chief executive of the National Health service Management Executive has visited the executive's headquarters in Leeds in the last six months.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Leeds headquarters of the National Health Service Management Executive—NHSME—have been occupied from 6 July 1992. The chief executive of the NHSME has visited the headquarters on six occasions since 6 July. His own office will be ready for occupation early in the new year.

Women's Refuges

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give an estimate on the numbers of places per 10,000 women in women's refuges throughout England and Wales for each year since 1979 and at present.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not held centrally. The Women's Aid Federation (England) Ltd. estimates that about 30,000 women and children are admitted to refuges each year. Refuge provision in Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Vitamins

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information is held by his Department about problems which have arisen in the United Kingdom in each of the past 10 years for which figures are available which have involved incidents of poisoning or illness following self-overdosing with vitamin, mineral or other dietary supplements.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases there have been in each of the last 10 years when individuals suffered adversely as a result of self-overdosing wtih (a) vitamin C, (b) multi-vitamins, (c) vitamin and iron supplements and (d) salt.

Mr. Sackville: I have been asked to reply.

This information is not collected centrally. The Government are considering whether a spontaneous reporting scheme for adverse reactions in association with use of dietary supplements should be established.

EMPLOYMENT

Wages Councils

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) pursuant to her answer of 3 November, Official Report, column 201, on the levels of wages received by those covered by wages councils, how many employers records were checked in the analysis, what was the date of the analysis, when it was carried out, how many wages councils were covered and what was the geographical distribution of the employers concerned;

(2) pursuant to her oral answer of 3 November to the hon. Member for Wallasey (Ms. Eagle), Official Report, columns 129-30, what was the source and date of the information about the proportion of people covered by wages councils who are paid more than the rate set by those councils.

Mr. McLoughlin: The estimate of around 3 to 4 per cent. of employees found to be underpaid is based on the annual statistics compiled by the wages inspectorate covering the inspection of some 30,000 establishments in all parts of the country. The estimate that two thirds of employees are paid significantly above the wages council minima is based on special information collected by wages inspectors in 1987 supplemented by up to date figures from the new earnings survey. The earlier information covered some 3,650 employers in all the inspectorate divisions. There are no separate details of the councils covered and their geographical distribution.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to her oral answer to the hon. Member for Strathkelvin and Bearsden (Mr. Galbraith) of 3 November, Official Report, columns 130, whether the other sources of income referred to include benefits, earned income or unearned income, respectively.

Mr. McLoughlin: The 80 per cent. of wages council workers referred to are in households with two or more wage earners.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to her answer of 3 November, Official Report, columns 199-200, what was the basis of her approximation that two thirds of wages council workers are women.

Mr. McLoughlin: The estimate is based on the Department's quarterly statistics of employees in employment for industry headings covering the main wages councils.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many cases of underpayment of wages council workers were discovered by the wages inspectorate in the last year for which figures are available; and what percentage this represented of premises inspected and of the number of workers in those premises.

Mr. McLoughlin: During 1991, the wages inspectorate discovered 12,812 cases of underpayment of wages council workers in 5,971 establishments. This represented 18·3 per cent. of all establishments checked and 4·5 per cent. of all workers covered by checks.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many cases of underpayment of wages council workers were reported to the wages inspectorate in the last year for which figures are available; and what percentage that represented of premises visited.

Mr. McLoughlin: In 1991, 1,486 complaints of underpayment were received from wages council workers, which resulted in visits to 1,195 establishments, 6·5 per cent. of the total establishments visited.

Health and Safety Commission

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many members the Health and Safety Commission has; how many of them are (a) women, (b) from ethnic minorities and (c) from ethnic minorities and women.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Health and Safety Commission currently comprises the chairman and nine other members. At present, one member is a woman and none is from an ethnic minority.

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many health and safety inspectors are (a) female or (b) from ethnic minority backgrounds; and in each case what proportion this figure is of the total number.

Mr. McLoughlin: At 1 November 1992, 209 or 14 per cent. of inspectors were women and 23 or 1·5 per cent. were from ethnic minority backgrounds.

Industrial Tribunals

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) chairs and (b) members of industrial tribunals are (i) women and (ii) from ethnic minorities.

Mr. McLoughlin: The figures are as follows:

	Number
Chairmen
Women	16
Members of the ethnic minorities	2
Lay members
Women	592
Members of the ethnic minorities	77

ENVIRONMENT

Hazardous Waste

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will make it his policy to make representations to the Council of Ministers in order to allow EC member states to ban unilaterally waste imports and exports;

(2) what action is currently undertaken by his Department to ensure that all transfers of hazardous waste from the United Kingdom for recycling in non-Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development Countries;

(3) if he will make representations to the Council of Ministers to secure that any ban on waste exports from the EC includes OECD green list wastes;

(4) if he will make it his policy to support measures to ban hazardous waste trafficking with developing countries;

(5) if he will make representations in the OECD to oppose the introduction of red, amber and green lists to cover transfers of hazardous wastes to non-OECD countries.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, North (Ms. Walley) on 27 October, Official Report, column 534, with the addition of the following.

Under the regulation, before any green list waste for recovery is exported outside the OECD, the country of destination will be asked to state whether it will accept shipments without going through the amber, red or Basel control procedures. Where the country of destination regards a green list waste as hazardous, shipments of that waste will be subject to the appropriate control regime.

Household Waste

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish the results of his Department's national household waste analysis project.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridgeshire, South-East (Mr. Paice) on 5 November, Official Report, column 374.

Urban Regeneration Agency

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will meet representatives from Staffordshire county council to discuss the proposed urban regeneration agency.

Mr. Robin Squire: We have no plans for a series of meetings with individual authorities to discuss the urban regeneration agency. We have just concluded a wide-ranging consultation exercise to which many local authorities, including Staffordshire, submitted their comments. These have been taken into account in preparing the legislation currently before the House. They will also form a useful input to our future work on the development of the guidance under which the agency will operate.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how he intends the urban regeneration agency to determine its strategy.

Mr. Robin Squire: The urban regeneration agency will determine its strategy in the light of its financial regime and the guidance we will issue to it.

Derelict Land

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy that there will be no transfer of resources from existing derelict land reclamation undertaken by local authorities to prestigious projects; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: I am well aware of the good work done by local authorities in reclaiming derelict land with the aid of grants from my Department. The urban regeneration agency will operate a new, unified grant regime to build on the success of derelict land grant and the other programmes it will inherit. It is, however, too early to take decisions on the agency's first work programme. This will be for the agency to determine in the light of guidance we will issue to it.

Leasehold

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many court orders have been made in each year since 1988 under part III of the Landlord and Tenant Act 1987, approving the compulsory acquisition of premises whose landlord has been found to be in breach of obligations owed to their leaseholders; and how many leaseholders in total have benefited from such orders.

Mr. Baldry: This information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many court orders have been made in each year since 1988 under part II of the Landlord and Tenant Act 1987 appointing a manager to act in respect of premises whose landlords have been found to be in breach of their obligations; and how many tenants in total have benefited from such orders.

Mr. Baldry: This information is not collected centrally.

Housing Inspectorate

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to establish an independent housing inspectorate with responsibility for enforcing basic standards on housing improvements.

Mr. Baldry: No, the basic standard on housing improvements is laid down by section 604 of the 1985 Housing Act as amended by the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 and the responsibility for enforcing this standard falls to the local housing authorities and ultimately to the courts.

Abandoned Mines (Water Pollution)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the National Rivers Authority assessment of data on water pollution from abandoned mines will include information on the 31 mines which British Coal had scheduled for closure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The content of the forthcoming report is a matter for the NRA. I am sure that the NRA will have regard to the circumstances of these mines.

Housing Waiting Lists

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice his Department issues to local authorities to ensure that housing waiting list criteria reflect social need.

Mr. Baldry: The allocation of local authority accommodation is entirely the responsibility of individual local authorities. Section 22 of the Housing Act 1985 requires authorities to give reasonable preference to people in housing need, such as those living in unsatisfactory conditions. It is for each authority to consider whether an applicant is in housing need.

Ozone Depletion

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he intends to put to international colleagues in relation to the Montreal protocol with regard to reductions in the use of methyl bromide.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 5 November to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes), Official Report, column 372.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what reductions he forecasts would be achieved in ozone damage as a result of (a) a 25 per cent. reduction in the use of methyl bromide by 1995 and (b) a complete phasing out of the use of methyl bromide by 1995.

Mr. Maclean: An international science panel has recently assessed current understanding of the impact of methyl bromide on the ozone layer at the request of the United Nations Environment Programme on behalf of the contracting parties to the Montreal protocol. Estimates of the impacts of methyl bromide were not made in the exact terms asked for but indicated that immediate elimination of anthropogenic methyl bromide would provide ozone layer protection comparable to that of an advance of the chlorofluorocarbon (CFC) and carbon tetrachloride (CCl_4) phase-out schedule by about one and a half to three years.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will ensure that the air conditioning system of the new headquarters of his Department does not use chlorofluorocarbons as an integral part of the system.

Mr. Maclean: Environmental considerations are taken fully into account in the selection of new buildings for the Government estate. In the case of the proposed new headquarters for the Department of the Environment, none of the buildings that have been evaluated uses chlorofluorocarbons in its air conditioning systems.

Environment Council

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions have taken place in the Environment Council during the United Kingdom presidency of the European Council of Ministers on the applications of the cohesion fund to environmental projects, as proposed by draft article 130d of the treaty of Rome, under the treaty of European union.

Mr. Maclean: None. Discussions on the draft regulations to establish the cohesion fund are being pursued in ECOFIN and the Foreign Affairs Council in the context of the review of the Community's future financing.

Council Tax

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the joint and several liability arrangements in respect of the council tax and the extent to which these differ from those in respect of the community charge.

Mr. Robin Squire: There is a separate personal community charge liability in respect of each individual. If payment is not received from a person, the local authority can also invoke joint and several liability to recover the amount due from his or her spouse or partner.

Under the council tax, there is only one liability in respect of each dwelling. The person responsible for this liability will generally be whichever resident of the dwelling owns or rents it. Joint owners or tenants will be jointly and severally liable. The spouse or partner of a liable person will also be jointly and severally liable if they are residents in the dwelling concerned.

Special arrangements apply to people who are severely mentally impaired. These mean that such people will not generally be held jointly and severally liable for the council tax on their home.

The principal difference between joint and several liability under the community charge and the council tax is therefore that under the former an individual may be liable for a bill relating to his or her partner, whereas under the latter an individual's liability relates to his or her own home.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to introduce measures to protect those people living in property which they occupy solely because of their employment from bills relating to the capial value of the property, under the council tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: An employee will be liable for the council tax on a dwelling provided by his employer only if he has his main home there; otherwise, the owner of the dwelling—normally the employer—will be liable. If the employee is liable, council tax benefit may meet up to the full amount of his liability if he is on a low income.

Habitats Directive

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to issue the consultation paper on the implementation of the habitats directive.

Mr. Maclean: Member states were formally notified of the habitats directive on 5 July 1992 and are obliged to bring into force the provisions necessary to enable them to comply within two years of that date. The Government are considering what additional measures are necessary to enable them to fulfil their obligations and my right hon. and learned Friend expects to consult on the Government's proposals within the next few months.

Rents

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what records he keeps of those number of times rent offices increase rents above those recommended by housing associations.

Mr. Baldry: This information is included in the statistical returns made to the Department by all rent offices, but is not currently separately analysed.

Waste Disposal Sites

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the waste disposal sites in Lancashire and their anticipated lifespans; and what is the Government's assessment of the likely requirements for new waste disposal sites over the next 15 years.

Mr. Maclean: Lancashire county council, as a waste regulation authority, maintains public register with details of currently operational disposal sites in its area and will be able to advise on their anticipated lifespans.

Responsibility for assessing the future waste disposal needs in Lancashire presently lies with the county council which is required to draw up a waste management plan for its area.

In due course, when the environment agency has been set up, we envisage that the Secretary of State will issue a statement of waste policies and priorities on the advice of the agency, which will consider waste disposal needs in each region, and across the country as a whole over the next 10 to 15 years. Copies of the Department's consultation paper "Waste Disposal Planning under an Environment Agency" which sets out these proposals in more detail, have been placed in the Library.

Rating Revaluations

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if it remains his policy to hold a revaluation of non-domestic property in 1995;

(2) what progress is being made in the preparation for a revaluation of non-domestic property in 1995.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Local Government Finance Act 1988 provides that there will be a revaluation of non-domestic property in 1995. This will be based on 1 April 1993 values. The Valuation Office agency is taking the necessary steps to achieve this.

Library and Information Services

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the standard spending assessment for library and information services for each relevant local authority in England and in total for 1990-91 and 1991-92; and what was the year-on-year uprating in each case.

Mr. Robin Squire: There is no separate standard spending assessment element for library and information services.

Water Pipes

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to review the working of the Water Act 1989, with particular reference to the charges levied on landowners for laying pipes when planning permission is gained; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: None. The conditions governing charges for the provision of mains water and sewerage services contained in the Water Act 1989 were consolidated in the Water Industry Act 1991.

Local Authority Housing

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the latest figures for vacant local authority dwellings for (a) England, (b) London and (c) each London borough; and how many in each case were available for letting, awaiting minor repairs, awaiting major repairs, awaiting sale, awaiting demolition or occupied by squatters.

Mr. Baldry: Local authorities report the number of their own dwellings which are empty in their annual housing investment programme (HIP1) returns.

The latest available figures, which are provisional at this stage, are for April 1992 and appear in columns A190, total vacant; A191, available for letting; A192, awaiting minor repairs; A193 and A194, awaiting major repairs; A195, awaiting sale; A196, awaiting demolition; and A20, dwellings in unlicensed occupation, of the "1992 HIP1 All Items Print", a copy of which is in the Library.

Safety for Women

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidelines are currently provided by his Department to buildings and estate designers to ensure that buildings and estates take women's safety needs fully into account.

Mr. Baldry: Documents approved by the Secretary of State for the purpose of the Building Regulations 1991 provide practical guidance on the design of buildings so that reasonable safety standards are secured.

Correspondence

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will answer the letter sent to him on 25 June by the director of the International Art Exhibition.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 2 November 1992]: Following consultations with colleagues in other Government Departments, a response was sent to the director of the International Earth Art Exhibition on 3 November.

Waterlogged Soil (Infant Mortality)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research his Department has commissioned on the relationship between waterlogged soils and variations in the infant mortality rate; what discussions he has had with the National Rivers Authority on this matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 5 November 1992]: The Department has not commissioned any research on this subject. I understand that the National Rivers Authority has received a copy of a report on the matter by two scientists and is investigating further.

Cryptosporidium

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects the expert group's recommendations made under the chairmanship of Sir John Badenoch for a collaborative research programme into cryptosporidium to report.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 5 November 1992]: The drinking water inspectorate published an interim report, "Cryptosporidium in Water Supplies—Progress with the National Research Programme", in July 1992. Copies have been placed in the Library. The programme of research extends into 1993 and a further report will be made when it is complete.

Water Supplies

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to provide that payments for water services to domestic properties should be by charges linked to the valuation bands used for the council tax.

Mr. Maclean: No. It is for individual water companies to decide on their preferred system of charging for their services, subject to the overriding requirement, contained in their licence of appointment, that their charges do not show undue preference to, or unduly discriminate against, any class of customers or potential customers. Our consultation paper, "Using Water Wisely", sought comment on a proposal that water companies should not be able to link charges to the valuation bands for the council tax. They will not, after the year 2000, be able to use rateable values from the former rating system.

WALES

Tenants

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will produce a charter for private rented sector tenants giving the tenants (a) first refusal to buy their houses, (b) the right to apply to the courts for a change of manager and (c) the right to apply to the courts for compulsory acquisition of the property by the local authority.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Department is preparing a guide for tenants in the private rented sector which will explain their rights and responsibilities. It will also emphasise the support and best practise standards which those tenants can expect from their local authorities.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will produce new guidelines for local authorities on harassment within the private rented sector, placing a duty on local authorities to follow up complaints.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: We have no plans to do so. Tenants already have statutory protection from harassment and illegal eviction under the provisions of the Protection from Eviction Act 1977.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to establish a tenants charter in Wales to include (a) specified rights for tenants to ensure that landlords undertake essential repairs within a set time scale, (b) the elimination of discrimination against tenants in receipt of benefits, (c) consultation and committee representation rights for tenants and (d) new safe tenancies established for tenants in properties having absentee landlords.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The principal elements of policy here are set out in the recently published charter for tenants of council housing in Wales, and the tenants guarantee appropriate to housing associations. A guide for tenants in the private rented sector is in preparation.

Housing

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will make it his policy to issue guidelines to local authorities on the compiling of standardised housing waiting lists, to include all names of those awaiting rented accommodation in the local authority area;

(2) if he will issue guidelines on the standardisation of allocation policies on housing provision, and for homelessness services, between local authorities in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Our position on allocation policies and standardised housing waiting lists is set out in the published "Agenda for Action on Housing in Wales". We have issued guidance to local authorities on the discharge of their statutory responsibilities on homelessness in the revised "Homelessness Code of Guidance for Local Authorities".

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many dwellings lacking one or more basic amenities exclusively house people over the age of 60 years in each (a) housing sector and (b) local authority area in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The estimated numbers of dwellings —based on the results of the 1986 Welsh house condition survey—which lacked the exclusive use of one or more basic amenities and which exclusively housed people over the age of 60 were as follows:

	Number
Owner occupied	13,700
Local authority/council/newtown	2,150
Private rented	4,700

An analysis of the total number of such dwellings in each authority is given in the table:

	Number
Aberconwy	200
Alyn and Deeside	300
Arfon	450
Blaenau Gwent	900
Brecknock	250
Cardiff	1,450

Vale of Glamorgan	100
Wrexham Maelor	450
Ynys Mon	550

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will establish a new formula for assessing affordability so as to develop a target level of housing costs for all tenures.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: We have no plans to do so.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to establish a central housing agency to co-ordinate public and social housing strategies in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: We have no plans to do so.

Pensioners

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many pensioner households in Wales have central heating; and what percentage of total pensioner households this represents.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Office of Population Censuses and Surveys has to date published only a selection of 1991 census results in the county monitor series, CEN 91 CM. Detailed information on households containing only pensioners is not yet available. The figures given are provisional as they are derived directly from rounded county statistics in the monitors. National level and more detailed results will be released by OPCS in November 1992 and in county reports this year and in 1993.

In Wales, an estimated 309,000 households with central heating in some or all rooms contained at least one pensioner and represented 76 per cent. of all households where pensioners lived.

Health Practices

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures are being taken to promote improved health practices in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Under the strategic intent and direction for the NHS in Wales 10 health gain priority areas have been identified, where the service and its partners will focus their efforts to improve the health status of the people of Wales.

The Welsh Health Planning Forum is preparing detailed protocols for investment in health gain. Eight reports have already been issued. This material has been widely recognised as first class by other parts of the United Kingdom and beyond and complements the pioneering work of the Health Promotion Authority for Wales.

The protocol forms the basis for the local strategies for health being developed by the district health authorities and family health services authorities in partnership with other local organisations, including local government. The second round of local strategies is now complete, and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will consider these early in the new year.

The various plans and strategies being developed by NHS Wales are being brought together into a unified 10 year strategy, so providing a clear and coherent framework for future action. This document, to be known as "Caring for the Future", is currently being discussed with a wide range of service interests. The aim is to publish it in December. Further debate on its key themes will take place next year.

The new health care environment introduced last year provides the appropriate structure for taking these important initiatives ahead in an efficient and effective way. The patients charter also plays a key role by ensuring that the NHS focuses clearly on the needs of individual patients.

Infant Deaths

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures are being taken to cut the death rate among those aged under five years in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The "Protocol for Investment in Health Gain: Maternal and Early Child Health", which was issued in August 1991 by the Welsh Health Planning Forum, highlights those interventions which have been shown clearly to be capable of achieving a worthwhile health gain in respect of early child health. The protocols assist health authorities to develop their local strategies for health. Further important aspects of child health—respiratory disease, physical and mental handicap, congenital heart disease, childhood cancers and injuries—are considered in protocols dealing with other health gain areas.

Babies

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures are being taken to reduce the number of babies born with major unexpected malformations or handicaps in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: One of the health gain targets of the "Protocol for Investment in Health Gain: Maternal and Early Child Health", is to reduce the number of children born with major unexpected malformations or handicaps by 10 per cent. by 2002 compared with 1995. This is being taken forward in local strategies for health.

Mothers and Children

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures are being taken to improve the quality of childbirth and early childhood for both mother and child in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The "Protocol for Investment in Health Gain: Maternal and Early Child Health", identifies where further investment could bring worthwhile health gain and indicates to health authorities where current practices might be improved and redirection of funds might be considered.

Nitrogen Dioxide

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress is being made in Wales to meet the target of reducing nitrogen dioxide emissions by 30 per cent. by the year 1998.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Various measures are being taken throughout the United Kingdom to reduce nitrogen dioxide emissions, including the fitting of low NOx burners to major coal-fired power plants and new standards for road vehicles. Details are provided in "This Common Inheritance; The Second Year Report"—cm. 2068—which the Government published last month.

Further records on nitrogen dioxide emission levels in Wales is also being produced by the Welsh Office.

In order to gain a better picture of the current position on nitrogen dioxide emission levels in Wales, the Welsh Office is funding a survey of the Principality.

Sulphur Dioxide

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress is being made in Wales to meet the target of reducing sulphur dioxide emissions by 60 per cent. by the year 2003.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Various measures are being taken throughout the United Kingdom to reduce emissions of sulphur dioxide, including retrofitting 800MW of power plant with flue gas desulphurisation equipment. Further details are provided in "This Common Inheritance; The Second Year Report"—cm. 2068—which the Government published last month.

Data on sulphur dioxide emissions are not separately available for Wales. However, information on atmospheric concentrations of sulphur dioxide is given in table 3.20 of the "The Environment Digest for Wales, No. 6 1991", a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Coastal Planning

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will amend the planning policy guidance note produced by his Department so as to include a reference to the role of ports and harbours under the general development order and the scope of the Crown Estates Commissioners in coastal planning.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The planning policy guidance note on coast planning—PPG20—was published in September 1992. There is presently no intention to amend it.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to amend paragraphs 8.6 and 8.9 of planning policy guidance notes on coastal zones so as to ensure that ecological impact criteria are applied to all sites.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: No. Guidance is given to local planning authorities in the planning policy guidance note on coastal planning. Further advice will be contained in the forthcoming guidance note on nature conservation.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what role is envisaged by his Department for non-governmental organisations in the collection of data and analysis on coastal resources prior to the preparation of development plans.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: It is for the local planning authority to determine what information it requires in the preparation of a development plan. The planning policy guidance note on coastal planning advises close involvement with a range of Government bodies. It also lists contact points in relevant voluntary organisations.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to encourage local authorities to adopt management policies and management plans for heritage coast areas in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: On 11 March 1992 the Government issued a statement setting out their position on heritage coasts. The statement, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House, supports the concept of preparing management plans. In addition the Government planning policy guidance note No. 20 "Coastal Planning", advises that local planning authorities should include policies for the protection and enhancement of heritage coasts in their development plans.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to encourage the adoption of coastal and estuarial management plans in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Government have stated in their response to the second report from the House of Commons Select Committee on the Environment, "Coastal Zone Protection and Planning" that they will encourage the preparation of management plans.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to amend the planning policy guidance notes produced by his Department so as to include a detailed report on his Department's coastal strategy; and how the strategy will be implemented.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: No. The planning policy guidance note on coastal planning, issued in September 1992, covers issues of relevance to the coastal zone. An interdepartmental group on which the Department is represented has been set up by the Government and this provides a mechanism for the continuing development of coastal policies.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to enhance the remit of the coastal strategic working group; and if he will make a statement on the effect of local government reform in Wales on the work of the working group.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I understand that the Assembly of Welsh Counties—AWC—is to submit advice to my right hon. Friend in the new year on the main strategic issues likely to affect Wales in the next 10 to 15 years. The work of the AWC's coastal strategy working group is expected to form an element of that report. A White Paper on local government reform will be published in due course.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to extend the remit of planning controls to cover the area below the low water mark in and around the coast of Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: In response to the second report from the House of Commons Select Committee on the Environment, "Coastal Zone Protection and Planning", the Government gave a commitment to review regulation of activities below the low water mark and to issue a discussion paper.

Minerals Permissions

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many times the powers introduced by the Town and Country Planning (Minerals) Act 1981 have been utilised in Wales in each year since 1981.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information on the use of the powers by mineral planning authorities is not collected centrally; but one order, to prohibit resumption of mineral working, has so far been submitted to the Secretary of State for confirmation and is currently under consideration.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will introduce legislation to reduce the life of mineral permissions from 60 years to 10 years;

(2) if he will make it his policy to place a statutory obligation on all new mineral permission applications to include conditions specifying the timing and content of subsequent reviews of such permission;

(3) if he will make it his policy to issue guidelines granting mineral planning authorities in Wales the right to revoke or substantially amend mining permissions without compensation where workings would (a) damage nationally-designated sites, (b) cause an unacceptable level of environmental change to important non-designated sites or (c) damage important water resources.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Responses to the consultation paper on old mineral permissions issued by the Government in March, in which various possibilities for dealing with problems were discussed, are under consideration. Further consultation is likely before detailed proposals are implemented.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to impose a statutory duty on mineral planning authorities in Wales to review all existing minerals permissions during the next four years; and if he will allow mineral planning authorities to request environmental assessments as part of such a review.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Responses to the Government's consultation paper on old mineral permissions issued in March, in which the possibility of a four-year review was discussed, are under consideration. Further consultation is likely before detailed proposals are implemented.

The Town and Country Planning (Assessment of Environmental Effects) Regulations 1988 do not apply to existing permissions.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to issue guidelines to mineral planning authorities on compensation levels and the use of enforcement powers.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Guidance on these issues can be found in mineral planning guidance note—MPG2—"Applications Permissions and Conditions", MPG4, "The Review of Mineral Working Sites", and planning policy guidance note 18, "Enforcing Planning Control".

Initial consultation has taken place on the operation of the provisions of the Town and Country Planning (Minerals) Act 1981 and the compensation arrangements under it.

Planning Policy

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to amend planning policy guidance note 7 produced by his Department so as to make reference to the design and quality expectations of industrial and commercial developments, including the utilisation of locally appropriate building materials, and the encouragement of the re-use of derelict buildings.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: No. Appropriate advice is already given in planning policy guidance note 7 and in annex A—design considerations—of planning policy guidance note 1.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will amend planning policy guidance note 7 to draw attention to the Town and Country Planning (Assessment of Environmental Effects) Regulations 1988.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The 1988 regulations are already referred to in paragraph 2.7 of the revised planning policy guidance note 7 issued in January this year.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will amend planning policy guidance notes to include a clear description of the special nature of rural developments.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: No. Planning policy guidance note 7, "The Countryside and Rural Economy", provides comprehensive policy guidance on development in the countryside generally, together with advice on the special considerations which apply in designated areas.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will delete the statement in planning policy guidance note 7 that planning authorities should consider the likely effect on the operation of the business when considering enforcement action.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Advice on enforcing planning control is found in planning policy guidance note 18. I see no reason to amend that guidance at present.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will amend planning policy guidance notes to indicate circumstances in which the use of development plan policies can be used to limit change of use rights.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Welsh Office circular 24/87 recognises that it may very exceptionally be appropriate for a local planning authority in determining a particular planning application to impose a condition restricting the use to which the land or buildings may subsequently be put. But development plans should not include policies which would generally restrict the freedoms available under the use classes order and the general development order to make certain changes of use without the need for specific planning permission.

Marine Unit

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will establish a specialist marine unit within his Department.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: No.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to issue guidance to local authorities on the practice of charging fees for pre-application advice on development proposals.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The courts have held that local planning authorities have no power to charge fees for providing pre-application advice about development proposals. The Government consider that pre-application discussions are beneficial and local planning authorities are encouraged to continue this practice.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the relationship between the proposed new independent national park authorities and the new unitary authorities proposed in the local government reform package.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Government's proposals for establishing independent national park authorities are set out in the Government's statement on the policies for national parks issued in January 1992. Detailed proposals on the structure of such park authorities and other related issues are presently under consideration.

Neath and Port Talbot Hospital

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the current status of the approval for the new Neath and Port Talbot hospital given by the Welsh Office in April 1991.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: My right hon. Friend's statement on 29 October made clear the continuing commitment to a new hospital on the Baglan site.

Mid Glamorgan Ambulance Service

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many patients were transported by Mid Glamorgan ambulance service; and how many ambulance journeys were logged by Mid Glamorgan ambulance service, in each year since 1987-88.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: No information is collected centrally on the number of patients transported by ambulance or the number of ambulance journeys made. However information on the number of patient journeys is collected and is given as follows.

Number of patient journeys[1] logged by Mid Glamorgan Health Authority

Year	Number
1987-88	300,866
1988-89	298,425
1989-90	197,933
1990-91	248,409
1991-92	277,691

[1] A patient journey relates to a single journey made by one person in an ambulance. Thus a return journey from a visit to a hospital is counted as a second patient journey and if an ambulance carried six patients at the same time it is counted as six journeys.

Heart Disease

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many deaths were attributable to heart disease in Wales in 1985, 1990 and 1991; what proposals he has to reduce heart disease in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The number of deaths to residents of Wales in 1985, 1990 and 1991, where the underlying cause of death was ischaemic heart disease—ICD 9th revision 410-414—was 10,265, 9,438 and 9,541 respectively (Source: Office of Population Censuses and Surveys).

In March 1985, Heartbeat Wales was launched as a national demonstration project to combat coronary heart disease. The project has since been subsumed into the comprehensive work programme of the Health Promotion Authority for Wales.

Additionally, in May 1991, the Welsh Health Planning Forum published advice to the NHS in Wales in the form of a protocol for investment in health gain in cardiovascular diseases. The protocol identifies where further investment could bring worthwhile health gain and indicates where current practices might be improved and redirection of funds might be considered. It is a key input in the production of local strategies for health by health authorities.

Typhoid Fever

[illegible] Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many cases of typhoid fever in Wales were reported in 1988, 1990 and 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The data requested are presented in the table:

Cases of typhoid fever reported in Wales

	Cases of Number
[1]1988	0
[1]1990	2
[2,3]1992	2

Sources: Office of Population Censuses and Surveys.

Mr. Stanley Gregory

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will set up an independent inquiry concerning the case of Mr. Stanley Gregory, who was injured recently whilst in the care of Cartrefi Cymru; what proposals he has to set out guidelines on staffing for community care; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Mr. Stanley Gregory, was unfortunately injured in an accident at his home in Forden, Powys on Thursday 22 October 1992.

I understand that immediately following the accident Cartrefi Cymru the organisation employed to provide care and support for Mr. Gregory initiated an investigation into the circumstances that led up to the incident. That report has been made available to the Welsh Office, Powys health authority and Powys social services department. I further understand that a joint investigation will be set up immediately between the social services department, the health authority and Cartrefi Cymru further to investigate the incident, review procedures and training programmes and make recommendations for the future in order that such accidents are prevented. In addition, Cartrefi Cymru is also reviewing its own procedures and guidelines. Mr. Gregory has been provided with, and will continue to receive, independent advocate advice as to his rights and position in this matter. Until these investigations and reports are finalised, it would be premature to instigate an independent inquiry. I will require the findings to be sent to the Welsh Office and will take any appropriate action if we are not satisfied as to the findings and conclusions.

Policy and guidelines on the support and accommodation for people with a mental handicap are set out in Welsh Office circular 1/91, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Housing Associations

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will make it his policy to strengthen the role of housing associations in making sensitive provision to meet special needs and community needs in Cardiff and the Vale of Glamorgan.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I am satisified that housing associations are already well aware of the sensitivities involved in providing such housing.

Domestic Rates

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many appeals are still outstanding relating to bills received under the old domestic rating system.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: There is one outstanding lands tribunal appeal.

Development Board for Rural Wales

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when the Development Board for Rural Wales first told the Welsh Office that the Comptroller and Auditor General was considering qualifying the Development Board for Rural Wales's accounts.

Mr. David Hunt: On 21 August 1991.

Business Rates

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many appeals were still outstanding on 1 November relating to bills received under the uniform business rate.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: In respect of the 1990 non-domestic rating list as at 31 October, the latest date at which the information is available, there were 22,600 outstanding proposals of which 20,300 had been passed by valuation offices to valuation tribunals as appeals.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Hazardous Waste

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will list the non-Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries to which the United Kingdom transported hazardous waste for recycling for the latest year for which figures are available indicating the volume of the waste transported to each country;

(2) how many transfers of hazardous waste were transported for recycling from the United Kingdom to non-OECD countries for the latest year for which figures are available; and what was the total tonnage of the waste transported.

Mr. Eggar: The principal non-OECD countries to which the United Kingdom transported hazardous waste for recovery, and the tonnage to each, are listed.Begins table

Countries	Tonnes
South Africa	6,998
Indonesia	1,652
Dubai	1,562
Thailand	1,410
South Korea	991
Hong Kong	688
Saudi Arabia	678
Taiwan	696
India	553

The total tonnage of such waste exported from the United Kingdom to non-OECD countries in 1991 was 16,300 tonnes. Information on the number of transfers of hazardous waste for recovery from the United Kingdom to non-OECD countries is not held centrally and would be available only at disproportionate cost.

As the figures that the hon. Member is seeking may be subject to restrictions of commercial confidentiality, I shall write to the hon. Member more fully as soon as the most accurate picture can be established.

Electricity

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the average price increase for domestic electricity in 1990-91.

Mr. Eggar: The average price increase for domestic electricity in 1990-91, over the corresponding period 12 months earlier, was 8·6 per cent.

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the cost per unit for domestic electricity consumption, adjusted for inflation, for each of the previous 10 years.

Mr. Eggar: The average prices per unit, including standing charges, for electricity supplied to domestic consumers for each of the last 10 years are given in the table.

Year	Pence per KWh at 1991 prices[1]
1982	8·31
1983	8·24
1984	7·96
1985	7·71
1986	7·55
1987	7·13
1988	7·01
1989	7·12
1990	7·11
1991	7·28

[1] Cash figures adjusted to 1991 price levels by excluding the effect of general inflation as measured by the GDP deflator.

Figures for 1992 are not yet available. However, increases in domestic electricity prices in April 1992 averaged about 2 per cent., well below the rate of inflation.

Institution of Electrical Engineers

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what response he has made to the survey of manufacturing industry by the Institution of Electrical Engineers; and what plans he has to commission further surveys from the institution.

Mr. Sainsbury: No formal response was asked for or has been made to the report from the public affairs body of the Institution of Electrical Engineers. However, my Department welcomes this interesting contribution.

Travel Agents

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will bring forward proposals for legislation under which all travel agents trading as public limited companies would be required to display their most recent balance sheet and profit and loss account in their trading offices.

Mr. Leigh: No.

Post Office Report

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his written answer of 2 November on the Kleinwort Benson report on the Post Office, if he will make available a copy of the report in confidence to the hon. Member for Neath.

Mr. Leigh: Any reports produced by the Government's advisers on the Post Office are internal Government documents. I do not intend, therefore, to make such documents available outside Government and I do not intend to make a copy of Kleinwort Benson's report on the Post Office available to the hon. Member for Neath.

Iraq

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what arrangements exist in his Department to trace whether nuclear materials originating from the United Kingdom have been exported for use in Iraq.

Mr. Needham: The Government have requested the United Nations Special Commission and the International Atomic Energy Authority to give us confidentially details of any evidence of involvement by British companies in Iraq's weapons of mass destruction programmes, including the supply of nuclear materials. Any indication of wrongdoing will be urgently investigated and if export controls have been breached, it will be a matter for the courts.

Cleaner Technology Group

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the inter-departmental group on cleaner technology was set up; and how many times it has met so far.

Mr. Eggar: The interdepartmental liaison group on cleaner technology was established in December 1991. It has met twice and is next scheduled to meet in January 1993.

Aerospace Industry

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he last visited British Aerospace at Woodford, Cheshire.

Mr. Sainsbury: During his time as President of the Board of Trade, my right hon. Friend has not visited British Aerospace at Woodford, Cheshire.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the total value of exports of aerospace products in each of the last 12 quarters for which figures are available.

Mr. Needham: The most recent available data for the total value of exports of aerospace products, quarterly, not seasonally adjusted, are from the business monitor overseas trade statistics.

We have used parts of divisions 7, 8 and 9 of the standard international trade classification (revision 3) which cover aerospace systems, propulsion devices and equipment.

Tunisian Imports

Mr. Shersby: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the value of imports from Tunisia for the most recent 12 month period for which figures are available.

Mr. Needham: In the 12 months ending September 1992, the value of United Kingdom visible imports from Tunisia was £42·3 million.

Departmental Properties

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list, for each local authority area in South Yorkshire, how many residential properties are currently owned by his Department; and if he will list, by location, those residential properties which are empty, giving the type of accommodation available, the length of time each property has been vacant, and its intended future use.

Mr. Eggar: My Department has no residential properties in south Yorkshire.

Business (Legislative Burdens)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will investigate a survey into costs imposed on small and rural businesses by legislation, local government requirements and Common Market directives; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Under the deregulation initiative, assessments of compliance and enforcement costs are among the factors taken into account by Ministers when considering proposals for new regulation and in negotiations on EC measures. There is also a continuing programme of work across Whitehall aimed at reducing significantly existing administrative and regulative burdens on business, particularly small businesses, whether imposed by central or local government or the EC. Currently, all regulatory departments are considering their programmes of work under the initiative for 1993 and beyond.

Biofuels

Mr. David Porter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will include in his review of energy policy a study into the viability of biofuels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The terms of the review were announced in the answer of my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade to my hon. Friend the Member for Broxtowe (Mr. Lester) on 26 October, Official Report, column 522-23.

EC Used Machinery Directive

Mr. David Porter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the steps he is proposing to take to investigate the impact on farmers of the proposed used machinery directive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: My Department has conducted wide-ranging consultations with sectors likely to be affected by a directive on used machinery, including the farming industry. We have concluded that no such directive is necessary and that new controls in this area could impose heavy costs. Following firm opposition from the United Kingdom and other member states, the European Commission has not put forward its proposal to the Council.

Reports

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will now place in the Library the Oakes report, the Boyds report and the Rothschild report commissioned by his Department.

Mr. Eggar: No. The reports were commissioned on a confidential basis and contain detailed information which is commercially confidential.

Agencies

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list by grade the numbers of staff and their cost for 1991-92 and the estimated figures for 1992-93, for each executive agency for which he is responsible.

Mr. Eggar: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the chief executives of the 10 agencies for which my Department is responsible. I have therefore asked Mr. Mike Hoddinott, Accounts Services Agency; Mr. David Durham, companies House; Mr. Peter Joyce, Insolvency Service; Dr. Richard worswick, Laboratory of the Government Chemist; Mr. William Edgar, National Engineering Laboratory; Dr. Peter Clapham, National Physical Laboratory; Dr. Seton Bennett, National Weights and Measures Laboratory; Mr. Paul Hartnack, Patent Office; Mr. John Michell, Radiocommunications Agency; and Dr. Doug Cormack, Warren Spring Laboratory to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. J. Mitchell to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 3 November 1992:

The President of the Board of Trade has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question of 27 October about staffing in the Radiocommunications Agency. The information you request is as follows:

Numbers of staff by grade in the Agency

Please note that while the left-hand column above lists staff actually in post at the end of March 1992, the right-hand column shows our "complement" for 1992-93. At any one time the number of staff in post is likely to be less than complement due to natural turnover. The latest figure available to me is that as at 30 September 1992 we had 530 staff in post.

Staff costs

In the time available I am able to give you only aggregated staff cost figures. They are as follows:

	1991-92 Actual spend £	1992-93 Forecast £
Salary and wages	9,809,336	11,127,570
ERNIC	753,971	795,560
Superannuation	1,643,501	1,845,362
	12,206,808	13,768,492

Letter from Mike Hoddinott to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 3 November 1992:

In response to your recent Parliamentary Question to the President of the Board of Trade regarding numbers of staff and costs within Executive Agencies, the information in respect of Accounts Services Agency is as follows:

Staff Grade	Numbers 1991-92	1992-93
Grade 5	1	1
Grade 7	2	4
Senior Executive Officer	4	4½

Total	91½	84½

The above figures relate to the average number of substantive staff in post for each year. The total cost of their remuneration, including superannuation contributions, was £1·4 million in 1991-92 and is expected to remain at the same level in the current year.

Letter from W. Edgar to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 30 October 1992:

I would refer to your Parliamentary Question dated 27 October to the President of the Board of Trade requesting that he list by grade the numbers of staff and their costs for 1991/92 and the estimated figures for 1992/93 for each Executive Agency for which he is responsible.

As the Chief Executive of NEL I provide the information requested in the schedule attached. I trust you will find this information to be satisfactory for your purposes.

Letter from R. D. Worswick to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 3 November 1992:

PARLIAMENTARY QUESTION 137: 27 OCTOBER 1992

To ask the President of the Board of Trade, if he will list by grade the numbers of staff and their cost for 1991-92 and the estimated figures for 1992-93, for each executive agency for which he is responsible.

The Laboratory of the Government Chemist is an Executive Agency within the Department of Trade and Industry and in 1991-92 employed 353 staff of which 271 were scientific grades and the remaining 82 were administrative support staff. The cost of salaries including ERNIC and superannuation came to £7,346,000. Details of staff numbers and cost by grade are shown on the attached annex.

The estimated figures for 1992-93 are as follows: 360 staff, of which 284 are scientific grades, and 76 administrative support staff. Total pay costs are estimated to be £7·9 million.

I hope this information is of help.

Letter from Dr. P. B. Clapham to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 2 November 1992.

I am writing in response to your Parliamentary Question addressed to the President of the Board of Trade requesting details of staff numbers and costs for each Executive Agency. I have been asked to respond concerning my own Agency, the National Physical Laboratory.

For 1991-92 the average number of staff was 826, and for 1992-93 it is expected that the average number will be a little under 800. The numbers in each grade are shown in the enclosed list.

The pay costs of these staff are as follows:

£'000	1991-92
Salaries and wages	16,195
Employers' National Insurance Contributions	1,202
Superannuation	2,680
Total	20,077

The forecast total for 1992-93 is about £20·5 million.

Letter from P. Hartnack to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 30 October 1992

I am responding for the Patent Office to your Parliamentary Question about the number of staff and their cost for 1991-92 and the estimated figures for 1992-93.

The Patent Office relocated from Central London to Newport, Gwent in 1991. The relocation was largely complete by December 1991 but in the course of the year staff numbers fluctuated because of the need to maintain our output in two locations for a period of about nine months. In the course of the year we also reduced the number of IT consultants employed by the Office, following the introduction of a new computer system.

Because of the wide variations in staff in post in 1991-92 it would be difficult to compute averages for the year broken down by grade. The attached table has therefore been prepared in response to your question showing actual numbers of staff in post on 31 March 1992, and our total staff costs for the financial year 1991-92, with corresponding estimates for the current financial year. The cost figures cover salaries, employers related national insurance contributions, overtime and the accruing superannuation liability charge.

Fact-finding Visits

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the fact-finding visits made in the last 12 months by the chief executive of each executive agency for which he is responsible; and what where the findings resulting from each visit.

Mr. Eggar: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the chief executives of the 10 agencies for which my Department is responsible. I have therefore asked Mr. Mike Hoddinott, Accounts Services Agency; Mr. David Durham, Companies House; Mr. Peter Joyce, Insolvency Service; Dr. Richard Worswick, Laboratory of the Government Chemist; Mr. William Edgar, National Engineering Laboratory; Dr. Peter Clapham, National Physical Laboratory; Dr. Seton Bennett, National Weights and Measures Laboratory; Mr. Paul Hartnack, Patent Office; Mr. John Michell, Radiocommunications Agency; and Dr. Doug Cormack, Warren Spring Laboratory, to arrange for replies to be given.

You recently put down a Parliamentary Question to the President of the Board of Trade asking him to list, fact finding visits made in the last 12 months by the chief executive of each executive agency; and what were the findings resulting from each visit. Following the answer given by Mr. Eggar, I am replying in respect of Companies House.

I visited the United States and Canada in late April, early May 1992. The visit was aimed at improving my understanding of quality management and image technology.

I visited the US Patents Office in Washington, the United Services Automobile Association (a major insurer) in San Antonio and the Province of Ontario's Ministry of Consumer and Commercial relations in Toronto and Thunder Bay. All three organisations use image technology and have pioneered its use in different ways. Although Companies House had decided recently not to continue with its own image project, it is still a longer-term possibility to replace our microfiche system. I gained a valuable insight into the use of image technology, both its problems and its benefits.

The USAA has a world-wide reputation for quality and it conducts monthly seminars to pass on this knowledge to other organisations wishing to improve their quality management. Companies House were at that time in the middle of their own total quality management programme and attendance at the seminar provided a valuable insight into how improvement could be brought about. Much was also learned about the USAA's introduction and use of image technology.

Letter from M. J. Michell to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 28 October 1992:

You have recently tabled two Parliamentary Questions to the President of the Board of Trade, concerning papers published and fact finding visits by the Chief Executives of DTI Agencies. The President has asked me to write to you on these matters in relation to the Radiocommunications Agency.

I have not myself published any papers since this Agency was established in 1990. However the Agency as such has published a large number of technical papers, reports and so forth. I am not sure this kind of publication is what you had in mind in your Question but I have enclosed details of publications over the past 12 months should these be of interest. I am also enclosing a copy of the Agency's latest annual report.

In the last twelve months I have not made any fact finding visits as such. During the course of my work I have visited a number of UK companies to discuss matters of business, as well as visiting different Agency establishments. I have made one overseas visit to Australia and New Zealand, to discuss with the authorities there certain radical changes in radio spectrum management policy they have introduced or are in course of introducing, in order that I may better advise Ministers on future policy in this country. As you may know, the Government has announced its intention of issuing a consultative document on future radio spectrum management in due course.

I hope this is helpful.

Letter from M. Hoddinott to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 30 October 1992:

In response to your recent Parliamentary Question to the President of the Board of Trade, I have been asked to advise you of fact finding visits I have made in the last twelve months as Chief Executive of Accounts Services Agency.

I have made no such visits. Visits have been made to colleagues in DTI and other Government Departments to discuss the delivery of the Agency's services and management or similar issues.

Letter from W. Edgar to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 27 October 1992:

I would refer to your Parliamentary Question tabled on 22 October to the President to the Board of Trade asking that he produce a list of the fact finding visits made in the last 12 months by the Chief Executive of each Agency for which he is responsible and that he identify the findings resulting from each visit.

As the Chief Executive of NEL I can confirm to you that I have not made any purely fact finding visits in the last 12 months. All my trips outside the office are, in the interests of maintaining a cost effective operation, of the multi-purpose variety whereby I visit clients, make presentations on NEL's capability, attend meetings with partners in various joint ventures and also include a host of other activities. Where fact finding/market research initiatives are required these are normally carried out and coordinated by the marketing department or operating divisions and are normally combined with a number of other tasks carried out simultaneously.

Letter from Dr. P. B. Clapham to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 27 October 1992:

I am writing in response to your Parliamentary Question addressed to the President of the Board of Trade requesting a list of fact finding visits made in the last 12 months by Agency Chief Executives. I have been asked to respond concerning my own Agency, the National Physical Laboratory.

I have not made any fact finding visits in the usual sense of the phrase. I have, however, attended two meetings in the last 12 months concerned with increasing the level of European collaboration within the sphere of the Agency's interests—primarily measurement standards. These discussions are 'on-going', so there are no specific findings to report. The final outcome will depend in part on the priorities placed on measurement and testing in the European Community's Fourth Framework Programme.

Letter from R. D. Worswick to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 28 October 1992:

I am writing to you in reply to your PQ about 'fact finding visits" made by the Chief Executives of the Department's Agencies.

Since my appointment as Chief Executive of LGC in May 1991 I have visited several organisations in the UK and Europe concerned directly or indirectly with the work of the Laboratory.

Further afield I led a high level mission on analytical instruments to Japan last year. I also visited the National Institute of Science and Technology in the United States.

I hope this is helpful.

Letter from P. Joyce to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 28 October 1992:

As Chief Executive of The Insolvency Service, I have been asked to let you have a substantive response to the Parliamentary Question (No. 125) which you tabled on 22 October 1992. This concerned 'fact finding' visits made by Chief Executives of Agencies.

The Insolvency Service has 36 offices throughout England and Wales, principally Official Receivers' offices, together with one in Edinburgh. I and my senior management colleagues will between us hope to visit all these offices in the course of any 12 months. These are not fact finding visits as such but rather the means by which I and my colleagues can keep in touch with what is going on at a local level. I and my senior colleagues also visit Insolvency Practitioners from time to time, which enables us to take the views of the insolvency profession on the practical application of insolvency law.

Letter from D. Cormack to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 26 October 1992:

Warren Spring Laboratory is a non-monopoly supplier of scientific and technical services to government and other customers, who themselves operate competitive tendering. We therefore only do what we can recover the costs of through contracts.

I have not been contracted to take part in any fact finding visits and consequently have not been involved in any, although I am aware that fact finding missions to foreign countries are from time to time organised by the relevant divisions of the Department of Trade and Industry.

Letter from P. R. S. Hartnack to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 27 October 1992:

I am writing in response to your Parliamentary Question number 125 of 22 October 1992 about fact finding visits. I have made no such visits in the last 12 months.

Letter from S. Bennett to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 27 October 1992:

I have been asked by the President of the Board of Trade to let you have details of any fact finding visits made during the last 12 months.

I have made no such visits in the last year.

Coal

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what guidance he has given to British Coal in respect of the introduction of compulsory measures in respect of pits where voluntary redundancy arrangements are already in place and volunteers are available.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 22 October 1992]: Following discussions with the Department, British Coal has given further details about its redundancy arrangements in a letter to the mining unions, dated 30 October 1992, which is reprinted in the November 1992 issue of "Coal News".

EC Funding

Mr. Milburn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many areas in the United Kingdom that are part of the United Kingdom's assisted areas map are recognised by the EC for regional development funding; and if he will list them.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 2 November 1992]: There are 89 whole travel-to-work areas (TTWAs) and four part-TTWAs in the United Kingdom which are both assisted areas and qualify for EC regional development funding.

The whole TTWAs include: in England—Accrington and Rossendale, Barnsley, Bishop Auckland, Blackburn, Bodmin and Liskeard, Bolton and Bury, Bradford, Bude, Darlington, Doncaster, Durham, Falmouth, Gainsborough, Grimsby, Hartlepool, Helston, Hull, Liverpool, Middlesbrough, Morpeth and Ashington, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, Newquay, Oldham, Penzance and St. Ives, Plymouth, Redruth and Camborne, Rochdale, Rotherham and Mexborough, Scunthorpe, Sheffield, Stockton-on-Tees, Sunderland, Telford and Bridgnorth, Walsall, Widnes and Runcorn, Wigan and St. Helens, Wirral and Chester, and Wolverhampton; in Scotland—Alloa, Arbroath, Ayr, Badenoch, Bathgate, Campbeltown, Cumnock and Sanquhar, Dumbarton, Dundee, Dunfermline, Dunoon and Bute, Falkirk, Forres, Girvan, Glasgow, Greenock, Invergordon and Dingwall, Irvine, Kilmarnock, Kirkcaldy, Lanarkshire, Lochaber, Newton Stewart, Skye and Wester Ross, Stewartry, Stranraer, Sutherland, Western Isles and Wick; in Wales—Aberdare, Bangor and Caernarfon, Bridgend, Cardiff, Cardigan, Ebbw Vale and Abergavenny, Fishguard, Flint and Rhyl, Haverfordwest, Holyhead, Lampeter and Aberaeron, Llanelli, Merthyr and Rhymney, Neath and Port Talbot, Newport, Pontypool and Cwmbran, Pontypridd and Rhondda, Porthmadoc and Ffestiniog, Pwllheli, South Pembrokeshire, Swansea, and Wrexham.

The part-TTWAs include: Birmingham, Coventry and Hinckley, Dudley and Sandwell, and Manchester.

Silverhill Colliery

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information he has received from British Coal about (a) its former strategic plan for the Silverhill colliery and (b) its prospective profitability for each of the next four financial years.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 2 November 1992]: The issues which the hon. Member raises are matters for British Coal.

Energy Review

Mr. Rooker: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to visit a coal mine during the period of the energy review.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 5 November 1992]: I have no such plans at present.

Customs Brokers

Mr. Denham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to support the proposal of the European Commission to establish a special fund to alleviate the problems that will be faced by employees of customs brokers following the completion of the European single market on 1 January 1993.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 5 November 1992]: The Government have serious reservations about the Commission's proposals. It would appear to duplicate assistance available from the EC structural funds: particularly under the cross-border Community initiative INTERREG—in Kent and Northern Ireland—and from January 1993, when assistance under objective 3 of the structural funds will be made available to all redundant customs agents, from the European social fund.

HOUSE OF COMMONS COMMISSION

Child Care

29. Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, pursuant to his answer of 29 June, Official Report, column 381-82, if he will outline the progress made towards the establishment of a day nursery in the Palace of Westminster or its precincts.

31. Mr. Barnes: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission what progress has been made towards the establishment of a day nursery in the Palace of Westminster for hon. Members and staff.

32. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, what progress he has made towards establishing a creche in the House.

33. Mr. Hain: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, if he will make a statement outlining progress on child care facilities for Members and staff in the Palace of Westminster.

34. Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, what progress is being made in the provision of nursery facilities for children of House of Commons staff and Members.

Mr. Beith: I refer the hon. Members to the oral reply I gave to the hon. Member for Vauxhall (Ms. Hoey) earlier today.

Disabled People

30. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, if he will make a statement on the policies of the House of Commons Commission with regard to the employment of people with disabilities.

Mr. Beith: The policy of the Commission remains as set out in its statement of April 1982—that disablement is no bar to recruitment to, or advancement in, the House of Commons service, and that every opportunity is taken to employ disabled people.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Vining Peas

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on vining peas and the vining pea areas within the set-aside regime for 1993; and if he will clarify the proposals.

Mr. Curry: We did not support the Commission's decision to make vining peas eligible for area aid under the new arable support regime. Following pressure from the United Kingdom and a number of other member states, we understand from the Commission that it now intends to reverse this decision. That would be a satisfactory outcome, and it is one for which we will continue to work.

Departmental Payments

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to co-ordinate the payments his Department makes to landowners under all the schemes for which he is responsible; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The Department operates a range of schemes which offer payments to landowners. These schemes have different purposes and take different formats reflecting those purposes. There is therefore limited scope for co-ordinating payments under them.

Biofuels

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research his Department is carrying out into the viability of growing biofuels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The Department is sponsoring research in a number of relevant areas, including work on improved varieties of traditional crops, such as rapeseed and on potential solid biofuel crops such as miscanthus. Agricultural aspects of liquid biofuel manufacture—for example, biodiesel and bioethanol—have generally passed the research stage. However, our economic and scientific research raises doubts about their ability to compete with fuels from fossil sources, even when grown with the benefit of area or set-aside payments. Biodiesel, for example, costs two or three times as much to produce as conventional diesel.

Set-aside

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to encourage pilot schemes of alternative uses of land currently under set-aside; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Land currently entered into the non-agricultural use or woodland options of the voluntary five-year set-aside scheme can be planted with trees or put to other appropriate alternative uses.

The EC regulations governing the new arable area payments scheme, under which land will be set aside for the first time from this winter, allow such land to be used to grow a wide range of crops for specified non-food uses, subject to suitable controls. Though optional for member states this year, we are implementing these arrangements in full from the outset.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on permanent and rotational methods of headland set-aside; and how he plans to protect viable headlands.

Mr. Curry: Set-aside of headlands and field margins can bring environmental benefits. We were able to secure provision in the Community rules for the set-aside of such areas provided they meet minimum width and area requirements.

Member states are required to apply appropriate agronomic and environmental safeguards to all land set-aside under the new arable area payments arrangements. Our management requirements are listed in the booklet on the area payments scheme, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House. These requirements will be reviewed to reflect the choice between rotational and non-rotational set-aside, which is due to be introduced in 1993.

Intervention Wheat Stocks

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a table of all intervention stocks of wheat held in each member state of the Common Market, stating the relative quality and cost of buying into intervention in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The latest data that are available on a member state basis are at 7 June 1992, when EC intervention stocks of wheat were as follows:

('000 tonnes)

Member state	Common wheat	Feed wheat
Belgium	121	0
Denmark	109	42
Germany	4,237	53
Greece	4	0
France	3,939	0
Italy	8	0
Luxembourg	3	0
Portugal	7	49
United Kingdom	0	9
Total	[1]8,430	153

[1] Total does not add due to rounding.

Currently there are around 6·64 million tonnes of common wheat and 200,000 tonnes of feed wheat in intervention in the EC.

Cereals purchased into intervention must meet the minimum quality standards as prescribed in EC Commission regulation 689/92. They are purchased at the intervention buying-in price applicable at the time of delivery, to which must be added the actual costs of physically taking the stocks into store. However, as some of this wheat has been in intervention for several years, it is not possible to estimate, with any degree of accuracy, the costs associated with purchasing it into intervention.

Foie Gras

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will show the volume of imports of foie gras into the United Kingdom and their countries of origin for each year since 1985.

Mr. Gummer: The information requested is shown in the table. For years from 1988 onwards, figures are for fresh or chilled fatty livers of geese and ducks only. For years 1985 to 1987, the available figures refer to fatty liver of geese and ducks whether fresh, chilled, frozen, salted or in brine.

Dietary Supplements

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received from (a) right hon. and hon. Members and (b) other individuals and organisations concerning the proposed European draft directive on dietary supplements; how many of those representations in each case have been broadly in favour of allowing such supplements to continue to be widely available to consumers; and how many have endorsed calls for the introduction of restrictions upon the sale of such products.

Mr. Soames: Responses to the consultation exercise earlier this year on the EC discussion paper on this subject, including those from consumers, enforcement authorities, the health food trade and manufacturers, generally favoured EC regulation in this area. Since then, from 1 April this year, the Department has received 147 representations from right hon. and hon. Members on behalf of their constituents, many of whose letters have been expressed in identical terms. Sixty-two letters have been received from individuals and organisations. All these representations have been broadly in favour of maintaining the status quo.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has about the expected scope of the forthcoming European directive on dietary supplements; and what information he has about the possible inclusion of salt and sugar.

Mr. Soames: On the basis of the discussion paper produced by the European Commission last December, I anticipate that the draft proposals will cover supplements in a concentrated form—that is, vitamin and mineral pills and, possibly, herbal extracts. There is no indication that salt or sugar would be within the scope of a directive on dietary supplements.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has concerning the retail value of those vitamin, mineral, and other dietary supplements which are consumed annually in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 8 July in the Official Report, column 234.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has concerning the number of individuals who use vitamin, mineral or other dietary supplements on a regular basis.

Mr. Soames: Data from the dietary and nutritional survey of British adults, 1986-1987, indicated that 13 per cent. of consumers took some kind of dietary supplement. However, I am aware that sales have been increasing and a recent report in the market research magazine "Market Intelligence", September 1992, gave a figure of 30 per cent. for households which had purchased vitamins or dietary supplements in 1992.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to seek derogation for the United Kingdom from the forthcoming European directive on dietary supplements.

Mr. Soames: We have made our views on future legislation known to the European Commission in the form of an outline draft directive on dietary supplements. In negotiations, we will press for a Community regime that strikes the right balance between ensuring public health and maintaining the availability of safe products for which there is clearly a strong public demand.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will meet the Society for the Promotion of Nutritional Therapy to discuss the forthcoming draft directive on dietary supplements.

Mr. Soames: Arrangements for this are already in hand. Moreover, my officials have already met with most of the interested parties, including this body.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the Food Safety Act 1990 and other legislation in preventing the marketing of dangerous food products, or the making of unsubstantiated claims about health benefits which may accrue through the consumption of particular food products.

Mr. Soames: Procedures are in place which aim to ensure that the Food Safety Act 1990 is enforced effectively and sensibly. The Government believe the Act is largely effective both in deterring the marketing of food products which might be unsafe and in allowing action to be taken against the marketing of products which are, or may be, in breach of its provisions. However, this is kept under review and, in particular, the Government are concerned that a small number of food supplements may pose a potential risk to health and also that consumers may be misled by unsubstantiated claims in relation to certain products. The Government have recently accepted recommendations from the independent Food Advisory Committee for the tightening of controls on claims which may be made for foods. These include the recommendations that a food must be able to fulfil the claim being made for it; adequate labelling information must be given to show consumers that the claim is justified and that manufacturers should be required to be able to produce for enforcement purposes information substantiating any claims, and that such information as is appropriate should also be available to interested parties, including consumers. A copy of the full recommendations is being placed in the Library of the House. The recommendations on claims are being taken forward within the European Community.

Diet

Mr. Hain: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what initiatives are currently being undertaken by his Department to encourage people to seek a balanced diet; and if he will indicate in each case the cost of that initiative.

Mr. Soames: A free booklet is available to the public advising on healthy eating as part of this Department's continuing Foodsense campaign. The publication contains dietary guidelines based on recommendations by the Committee on Medical Aspects of Food Policy. The costs related to the production of this publication so far amount to £99,000. In addition, this Department is involved in the nutrition task force, recently announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health which will draw up a co-ordinated action programme for achieving the dietary targets set out in "The Health of the Nation" White Paper. That programme will involve advising and encouraging the public to change the balance of their diet.

Methyl Bromide

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the report of the Advisory Committee on Pesticides, relating to methyl bromide will be published prior to the Montreal protocol negotiations starting on 17 November; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The Advisory Committee on Pesticides evaluation document on residues of methyl bromide in some vegetables is now available. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Sheep Dips

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many reports have been received in each of the last six years of adverse human reaction to sheep dip products licensed by his Department.

Mr. Soames: The information requested for each of the past six years is as follows:

	Number of reports received
1986	10
1987	11
1988	19
1989	9
1990	6
1991	138

For 1992, a total of 121 reports have been received up to 31 October. A significant proportion of the reports received since 1990 are historical cases where a suspected adverse reaction had occurred more than one year previously. These figures should be set in the context of in excess of 1 million dippings since 1985.

Ectoparasiticide Medicinal Products

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress is being made in his Department's review of licensed ectoparasiticide medicinal products.

Mr. Soames: Apart from sheep dips, the review of licensed ectoparasiticide medicinal products has almost been completed. For outstanding products, companies have been asked to provide the necessary data as soon as possible.

On sheep dips, since the announcement of the completion by the independent Veterinary Products Committee of the initial phase of its review, the Veterinary Medicines Directorate has had dicussions with the pharmaceutical companies concerned about further work that is required to bring the review to a conclusion. The companies have been asked to progress this work as speedily as possible. It is however, unlikely that the review of these products will be complete before mid-1993.

Bass

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to conclude his study into the effect on bass stocks of seismic surveys.

Mr. Curry: The Ministry expects to be able to publish a report by the end of summer 1993 which will include an assessment of a bass tagging programme undertaken on behalf of Elf Enterprise Caledonia Ltd.

The tagging programme, which was funded by Elf, was carried out by Fawley Aquatic Research Laboratories under the guidance of MAFF fisheries scientists.

Ozone Depletion

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give an undertaking to purchase only ozone-friendly fridges that do not contain chlorofluorocarbons or hydrochlorofluorocarbons for his Department.

Mr. Curry: The policy of the Department is not to purchase new fridges containing substances harmful to the ozone layer as set out in the Montreal protocol and its revisions.

When existing fridges containing substances harmful to the ozone layer are to be replaced, fridges which are understood to be ozone friendly will be purchased.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures have been taken to ensure that any ozone-destroying substances in use by his Department identified as controlled waste under the Environmental Protection Act 1990 do not reach the atmosphere.

Mr. Curry: The disposal of controlled waste is governed by the Duty of Care Regulations which came into force on 1 April 1992 under the Environmental Protection Act 1990. These regulations put a responsibility on producers of controlled waste to ensure that it is disposed of safely and legally. There is no Crown immunity from these regulations and the Department takes care to observe them.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many refrigeration and air conditioning systems in his Department are equipped with automatic leak detection systems.

Mr. Curry: Ten per cent. of buildings occupied by MAFF are provided with in-built refrigeration or air conditioning systems. Most installations have been in use for five or more years and none are currently equipped with automatic leak detection systems. All such installations are subject to a rigorous maintenance regime, performance is regularly monitored and defects are attended to promptly.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much funding has been allocated or spent to specifically deal with measures to reduce his Department's consumption of ozone-depleting substances.

Mr. Curry: It is not possible to say how much money has been spent across the whole Department in reducing consumption of ozone-depleting substances because the programme is funded from many budgets and cannot be separately identified.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which current uses of ozone-depleting chemicals by his Department are considered essential.

Mr. Curry: We would not consider any uses for which ozone-friendly alternatives are available and it is the Department's policy to purchase such alternatives wherever possible.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many catastrophic leaks of ozone-depleting substances have occurred within his Department buildings in the past five years.

Mr. Curry: None.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food by what date his Department's use of ozone-depleting chemicals will conform to European Community regulations on limits on these chemicals.

Mr. Curry: Both the Montreal protocol and the EC regulations seek to control the production, but not the use, of substances which deplete the ozone layer. However, the Department is playing its part in helping to phase out these substances by wherever possible not purchasing them.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he next expects to designate an environmentally sensitive area in (a) England and (b) Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: There are already 10 environmentally sensitive areas in England and two in Wales. My right hon. Friends the Minister and the Secretary of State for Wales plan to make announcements on the timing of further designations in the near future.

Fishing Industry

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food pursuant to his oral statement of 14 July, Official Report, column 1027, on the entry into force of limitations of days at sea, whether the effective steps to be taken by other EC states refers to days at sea limitations or to other means such as decommissioning schemes.

Mr. Curry: All member states must agree on multi-annual guidance programme targets. The contribution to be made by effort control and the overall targets themselves are still under discussion. "Effective Steps", therefore refers to action to achieve agreed targets.

Fishermen (Hairnets)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received over the terms of the proposed European legislation involving the possibility of fishermen being required to wear hairnets at sea.

Mr. Sackville: I have been asked to reply.

None. There is no such requirement.

The EC directive on health conditions for the production and placing on the market of fishery products, which come into force from 1 January 1993, requires those handling fishery products in working areas on factory vessels to wear clean working clothes and headgear which encloses the hair.

Agencies

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list by grade the numbers of staff and their cost for 1991-92 and the estimated figures for 1992-93 for each executive agency for which he is responsible.

Mr. Gummer: Responsibility for this matter is delegated to the Agricultural Development Advisory Service, the Central Science Laboratory, the Central Veterinary Laboratory, the Intervention Board executive agency and the Veterinary Medicines Directorate. I have asked their respective chief executives to write to the hon. Gentleman direct.

Letter from G. Stapleton to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 7 November 1992:

I refer to your recent Written Parliamentary Question to the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food about the number of staff by grade employed by executive agencies for which he is responsible and the associated staff costs for the 1991-92 and 1992-93 years. As the Minister promised in his reply I am now writing to let you have the information for this Agency.

The Intervention Board employed 999 staff during the 1991-92 year and our estimated projected manpower figure for the current year is 1,037 staff. I attach a table which provides a breakdown of these staff totals by grade.

I enclose a copy of the Agency's Annual Report which I hope you will find of interest. Page 23 provides details of our administration expenditure and you will see that staff costs, ERNIC and pensions, accounted for £15,394,000 during 1991-92. Our estimated forecast for the current financial year, which includes a factor for inflation, is £17,716,000.

Letter from Dr. T. W. A. Little to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 9 November 1992:

Question:

"To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, if he will list by grade the numbers of staff and their cost for 1991-92 and the estimated figures for 1992-93 for each executive agency for which he is responsible."

As you know the Minister has asked that Chief Executives of executive agencies for which he is responsible write to you direct with their answer to your question.

The number of staff by grade employed at the Central Veterinary Laboratory during 1991-92, and the estimated figures for 1992-93, are listed below at Annex 1.

The staff costs during 1991-92 were £10,561,000 and the estimate for 1992-93 is £11,467,000.

Letter from Dr. J. M. Rutter to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 29 October 1992:

To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, if he will list by grade the numbers of staff and their costs for 1991-92 and the estimated figures for 1992-93 for each executive agency for which he is responsible.

In his reply to the above question about Executive Agencies in MAFF, the Minister said that as this was a matter which was the direct responsibility of Chief Executives, he would ask them to write to you direct. I am doing so as Chief Executive of the Veterinary Medicines Directorate (VMD).

The numbers of staff by grade and their costs for 1991-92 are set out on pages 47 and 42 respectively of the VMD's Annual Report and Accounts, a copy of which was enclosed with my letter to you dated 26 October.

The estimated figures for 1992/93 are 91·5 staff and £2·202m staff costs; the actual figures will be included in the VMD's Report and Accounts for 1992/93 due to be published in July 1993.

Letter from Dr. J. M. Walsh to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 9 November 1992:

Parliamentary Question: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, if he will list by grade the numbers of staff and their cost for 1991-92 and the estimated figures for 1992-93 for each executive agency for which he is responsible.

ADAS was established as an executive agency on 1 April this year. The enclosed figures for 1991-92 are therefore based on the number of ADAS staff in MAFF at 1 October 1991. These figures do not include MAFF administrative staff who were also engaged on ADAS work, many of whom transferred across to ADAS from 1 April 1992. As the figure for 1992-93 is based on the number of ADAS staff in post on 1 October 1992 the figures for the two years are not directly comparable. The figures provided relate only to "non industrial" staff. About 135 "industrial" staff, e.g. farm workers and craftsmen, were employed by MAFF on ADAS work on 1 October 1991, compared to an ADAS staff in post figure of 98 on 1 October this year.

Letter from Dr. P. I. Stanley to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 29 October 1992:

To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, if he will list by grade the number of staff and their cost for 1991-92 and the estimated figures for 1992-93 for each executive agency for which he is responsible.

The numbers of staff employed by the Central Science Laboratory on a permanent basis, by grade, for 1991-92 and the estimated numbers for 1992-93 are as follows:

Grade	1991-92	1992-93
3	1·0	1·0
5	1·0	1·0
6	9·8	12·2

	1991-92	1992-93
Students	22·8	11·7
Casuals	29·4	36·0
Totals	52·2	47·6

Staff costs for 1991-92 are £7,141 million and are estimated for 1992-93 to be £7·9 million.

SCOTLAND

Coastal Erosion

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what planning policy guidance he gives to local authorities over coastal erosion.

Mr. Stewart: There is currently no planning policy guidance available to local authorities on the subject of coastal erosion. Following a review of the priorities for planning guidance, coastal planning has been identified as requiring attention and we accept the need to extend guidance in this area. Revised guidance will be drawn up to take forward the approach set out in the Government response to the Environment Select Committee's report on coastal zone protection and planning. A copy of the response has been placed in the library of the House.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many staff hours were involved in preparing to the Scottish local government reform proposals.

Mr. Lang: Preparation of the proposals has involved staff in many parts of the Scottish Office. Detailed information on staff hours devoted to particular subjects would take too many staff hours to calculate.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much was paid to Touche Ross for its consultancy report on the reorganisation of Scottish local government.

Mr. Lang: The figure is £38,000.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the cost of all the published documents, maps and videos which were produced at the launch of the Scottish local government reorganisation proposals.

Mr. Lang: The cost, excluding Scottish Office staff costs, of preparing and reproducing 15,000 consultation papers, 700 videos, 1,000 posters and 110,000 leaflets was approximately £115,000.

Environmental Protection

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many acres of land are held by each regional and island water authority; what percentage, in each case, falls within areas designated for environmental protection such as evironmentally sensitive areas and areas of natural beauty; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 2 November 1992]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Shettleston (Mr. Marshall) on 27 October.

Japanese Language

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many teachers qualified to teach the Japanese language are currently employed by education authorities in the maintained sector and teaching in secondary schools to (a) ordinary level and (b) higher level; and if he will make a statement on the teaching of Japanese in Scottish schools.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 26 October 1992]: The information requested is not held centrally. A small number of Scottish schools teach elementary Japanese as part of Japanese Studies courses. SCOTVEC also offers national certificate modules which include elements of the Japanese language. I have no plans to advise education authorities on the teaching of Japanese to Scottish Certificate of Examination standard, but I believe this is a subject worthy of further consideration, and I will keep it under review.

Local Enterprise Companies

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list, for each local enterprise company, the number of jobs each local enterprise company has created since coming into operation for (a) adult males, (b) adult females, (c) young males and (d) young females.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 6 November 1992]: Oversight of the activities of the local enterprise companies is the responsibility of Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands respectively. I have therefore asked the chairmen of these two bodies to write to the hon. Member about the information which he has requested. Such information as they are able to provide is likely to reflect the fact that it is individual employers who create jobs; and that the role of the enterprise bodies is to help foster the conditions for employment growth rather than direct job creation.

Regional Financial Assistance

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what amounts of regional financial assistance were given to industry in the parliamentary constituency of Greenock and Port Glasgow, by way of regional development grants, regional selection assistance and regional, enterprise grants, in each financial year since 1989-90; and what is the sum to be paid in the year 1992-93.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 4 November 1992]: The information requested is given in the table. Expenditure in the remainder of 1992-93 will depend on claims made by companies in respect of progress with projects which have been the subject of individual offers of grant.

Gross expenditure on regional assistance to industry in Greenock and Port Glasgow parliamentary constituency

(£000s)

	Regional selective assistance	Regional enterprise grants	Regional development grants[1]
1989-90	424·1	30·5	2,475·4
1990-91	3,565·3	15·7	2·168·5
1991-92	3·578·5	19·5	848·4
[2]1992-93	380·0	12·8	602·9

[1] Includes expenditure on original and revised regional development grant schemes. The revised scheme was closed to new applications on 31 March 1988.

[2] To 28 October 1992.

Common Fisheries Policy

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will make a statement on his policy on the European Commission's proposals to reform the common fisheries policy, (COM (92) 387 final);

(2) what assessment he has made of the European Commission's proposal to repeal Council Regulation (EEC) No. 170/83, and of the implications of such a reform of the common fisheries policy for the Scottish fishing industry; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what action he will take to ensure consideration of the interests of the Scottish fishing fleet when considering changes in the common fisheries policy.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 5 November 1992]: Fisheries Ministers agreed at the Councils held on 3 April and 9 June 1992 to maintain key elements of the common fisheries policy including relative stability and access to the 12 mile zone and the Shetland box. These elements have benefited our fishermen over the last 10 years. The chief changes in the Commission's proposed revision of Council Regulation 170/83 relate to multi-annual programmes integrating permitted catches and fleet structure, control, licensing and changes in the balance of decision making between the Council and the Commission.

We are considering the Commission's detailed proposal against the background of the earlier Council decisions with the overall objective of ensuring that fishermen in all parts of the UK can make of all the fishing opportunities obtained for them in 1983.

EC Funds

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much financial assistance has been awarded to (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow, (b) Glasgow and (c) Strathclyde by way of each of the four objectives of the European Community's European regional development fund in each of the past three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 5 November 1992]: Strathclyde region benefits from European regional development fund (ERDF) assistance objectives 2 and 5b only. Within each of these objectives assistance is awarded to the eligible area as a whole. For the years 1989-91, some £149 million of ERDF assistance was awarded to the Strathclyde integrated development operation under objective 2. Argyll and Bute district and part of Cunninghame district are instead eligible for objective 5b assistance awarded to the Highlands and Islands, for which some £54 million was made available in 1989-91. In addition, for 1990 and 1991, the European Comision made further ERDF awards to the west of Scotland of £6.8 million under RENAVAL and £0.2 million under RECHAR.

War Crimes Act 1991

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans there are for legal action against Antony Gecas under the War Crimes Act 1991.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: [holding answer 5 November 1992]: It is not the practice to disclose whether proceedings against any individual are contemplated.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

12. Mr. Milligan: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage whether he will consider merging the Broadcasting Complaints Commission and the Broadcasting Standards Council.

Mr. Brooke: I have no immediate plans to legislate for any changes in the status of either body but I will, of course, keep the matter under review.

22. Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement on the current arrangements for the management of the BBC.

Mr. Brooke: This is a matter for the BBC, within the terms of the present royal charter and the licence and agreement.

Mr. Milligan: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage whether he will make it his policy to use the opportunity of the review of the BBC charter to streamline the regulation of the broadcasting industry.

Mr. Brooke: I intend to publish a discussion paper in the next few weeks. This will set the framework for the public debate about the future of the BBC, including regulatory options. We shall want to hear the opinions of viewers and listeners, as well as those of the broadcasters and other interested parties, before we take decisions.

Public Libraries (Closures)

13. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many public libraries have been closed in the past year.

Mr. Key: Figures for the number of closures are not yet available for the past year.

Media Ownership

14. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what recent representations he has received on reform of the law on media ownership.

Mr. Brooke: The subject is raised in many of my regular meetings with broadcasters and the press.

"Managing England's Heritage"

15. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he became aware of the proposals of English Heritage outlined in the document "Managing England's Heritage"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: Following my appointment as Secretary of State on 25 September, I was briefed about English Heritage's strategy proposals and discussed them with Jocelyn Stevens, the chairman of English Heritage, on 1 October.

English Sports Council

16. Mr. Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage by what date the English Sports Council will be established.

Mr. Key: The successor bodies to the GB Sports Council, the United Kingdom Sports Commission and the Sports Council for England will be established on 1 October 1993.

Rugby League Clubs

17. Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to assist Rugby League clubs.

Mr. Brooke: My Department's main agency for distributing grant aid to sports bodies in England is the Sports Council who do not assist professional bodies. However, they gave £172,000 in assistance to the British Amateur Rugby League Association in 1991-92. The Foundation for Sport and the Arts has given over £750,000 in grant aid to Rugby League clubs since its establishment last year following a reduction in pool betting duty.

Victoria History of the Counties of England

18. Mr. Brandreth: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what representations he has received on the future of the Victoria History of the Counties of England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The Department of National Heritage has received four letters about the financial difficulties of the Victoria History of the Counties of England. I recognise the merits of this project, but it is for local councils to decide whether to continue their support for it, I am unable to offer support from my Department's funds.

British Library

19. Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when the British Library will open on its new St. Pancras site.

Mr. Key: The opening dates for the new building are currently being reviewed by the Department of National Heritage and the British Library.

Arts Funding

20. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is the amount of money being allocated to the arts in the current year; and what it was in 1979.

Mr. Brooke: For the current year the Government's grant in aid to the Arts Council of Great Britain is £221·2 million. For 1979-80 it was £63·125 million in cash terms or £153·1 million at today's prices. This represents a 44·5 per cent. increase in real terms.

Local authorities also contribute significantly to the arts. Although no reliable figures are yet available best estimates suggest that they contribute well over £200 million a year.

In addition, the arts receive funding from the private sector. For 1990-91, the latest year for which firm figures are available, annual business sponsorship reached £44·5 million to which can be added £12·5 million in corporate membership. My own business sponsorship incentive scheme has raised over £48 million for the arts since its inception in October 1984.

Bolsover Castle

21. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement on the proposals relating to English Heritage announced on 26 October as they affect Bolsover castle.

Mr. Key: English Heritage's new strategy for the 1990s envisages allocating three categories of importance to their historic estate, concentrating resources and improving facilities in the top two categories and passing properties in the third category to local management wherever possible.

Bolsover castle is to be in the first category and there are no plans to devolve its management.

Scottish Arts Council

23. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to seek an early meeting with the chairman and members of the Scottish Arts Council in order to seek their views on the role of the council and its relationship with the state.

Mr. Brooke: I have no plans at present to meet the chairman and members of the Scottish Arts Council but I look forward to doing so when the opportunity arises.

Cricket

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to provide assistance towards the development of cricket within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Brooke: All Government funds for sport are channelled through the Sports Council who allocate these according to their policies and priorities. In 1991-92, the Sports Council provided £130,000 to cricketing governing bodies and a further £428,000 in grand aid for various regional projects aimed at developing the game in the United Kingdom. In addition, since its establishment last year the Foundation for Sport and the Arts has provided over £2 million to cricket projects. The Government also welcome a range of initiatives such as "Kwik Cricket" and "Capital Kids Programme", which are aimed at promoting cricket for young people.

Pitchford Hall

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what further representations he has received since 20 October on Pitchford hall.

Mr. Key: My Department has received two further letters from member of the public, both written before 20 October, about Pitchford hall.

Tourism

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage from which country the greatest number of tourists visited Great Britain during the current year.

Mr. Key: In the first quarter of 1992, the latest for which statistics are available, the United States of America generated the greatest number of visits to the United Kingdom, with 504,000 visits, 15 per cent. of the total.

Departmental Properties

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list, for each local authority area in South Yorkshire, how many residential properties are currently owned by his Department; and if he will list, by location, those residential properties which are empty, giving the type of accommodation available, the length of time each property has been vacant, and its intended future use.

Mr. Key: None.

Industrial Heritage Sites

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list for the three counties of Yorkshire and for Humberside, what new initiatives he proposes to introduce to secure the preservation of sites of industrial heritage.

Mr. Brooke: Controls and grant mechanisms to protect the heritage are well established. English Heritage made special reference to our unique industrial heritage and maritime heritage in their recent strategy for the 1990s.

National Lottery

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the bodies with which the GAH Group consulted, prior to reporting to him on a national lottery.

Mr. Brooke: Many of the bodies contacted by the GAH Group responded on a confidential basis. I do not intend to publish a list.

Library and Information Services Council

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is the membership of the Library and Information Services Council; and how many meetings it held in 1991 and 1992.

Mr. Key: The Secretary of State appoints the members of his advisory body in their own right, but ensures that the full range of library and information interests is represented. The council met three times in 1991 and four times in 1992. The present membership is:

Sir Peter Swinnerton-Dyer
Brian Burch
Mrs. Gillian Cross
Chris Heinitz
Chris Koster
David Leabeater
Dr. Bob McKee
Mrs. Sylvia I. Martin
Nigel Oxbrow
John Sumsion
Stuart Brewer
Sir Charles Chadwyck-Healy
Miss Rosemary Gray
Dr. Phil L. Holmes
Dr. Brian Lang
Nigel S. Macartney
Mrs. Sally R. Marshall
Michael M. Messenger
Mrs. Sheila Pantry

Public Record Office

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many papers his Department has currently withdrawn from the Public Record Office; if he will list their titles; and when he estimates that they will be returned.

Mr. Key: My Department currently relies on other Government Departments for retrieval of records from the Public Record Office. They do not keep separate statistics on which papers are withdrawn for our use and, therefore, our records will be included in the numbers supplied by those Departments.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Ozone-destroying Substances

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will provide details from the maintenance and servicing record of the quantity and type of ozone—destroying chemicals used annually in his Department's refrigeration and air conditioning equipment for servicing and in leakages; and what proportion is removed for recycling;

(2) how many chlorofluorocarbon and hydrochlorofluorocarbon installations are contained within his Department's buildings;

(3) what quantity of HCFC 22 is purchased by his Department from ICI per annum;

(4) what the latest available figures are for his 3Department's total purchase of chlorofluorocarbons and hydrochlorofluorocarbons;

(5) how many chlorofluorocarbon domestic fridges are contained within his Department's buildings;

(6) what is the quantity of ozone-depleting substances recycled within his Department and returned to the manufacturer.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: This information is not recorded centrally.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) which current uses of ozone-depleting chemicals by his Department are considered essential;

(2) if he will given an undertaking to purchase only ozone-friendly fridges that do not contain CFCs or HCFCs for his Department.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We are currently reviewing our policy on the use of such chemicals and of goods containing them.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what action has been taken to ensure that ozone-destroying substances consumed by his Department are identified as controlled wastes when they are no longer in use;

(2) what measures have been taken to ensure that any ozone-destroying substances in use by his Department identified as controlled waste under the Environmental Protection Act 1990 do not reach the atmosphere;

(3) what proportion of his Department's consumption of ozone-depleting substances becomes controlled waste in terms of section 33 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Most waste, of whatever nature, from Home Office premises is controlled waste under the Environmental Protection Act 1990. Section 34 of the Act (the duty of care) which came into force on 1 April 1992 requires any person subject to the duty who has controlled waste to take reasonable steps to prevent its illegal management. There is no Crown immunity under the Act, and the Department takes care to ensure that controlled waste having its possession is consigned only to authorised persons for treatment or disposal. Information is not recorded centrally about the Department's use of ozone-depleting substances or the disposal of controlled waste.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many refrigeration and air conditioning systems in his Department are equipped with automatic leak detection systems.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The prison service's five major vegetable cold stores all have leak detection systems, and 26 air-conditioned vehicles operated by the prison service also have leak detection systems. Only one other unit, at the Emergency Planning College, is known to have such a system.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department by what date his Department's use of ozone-depleting chemicals will conform to EC regulations on limits on these chemicals.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Both the Montreal protocol and EC regulations seek to control the production but not the use of substances which deplete the ozone layer. However, the Department is playing its part in helping to phase out these substances by not purchasing or using them unless no suitable alternative is available.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many catastrophic leaks of ozone-depleting substances have occurred within his Department's buildings in the past five years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: None.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what targets have been set for the recycling of ozone-depleting chemicals within his Department's buildings.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: None.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance has been sought and received on alternatives or substitutes to the ozone-destroying chemicals in use by his Department.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My Department adheres to the guidance and specifications issued by the DOE and PSA, and pays close attention to relevant published research findings.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much funding has been allocated or spent to specifically deal with measures to reduce his Department's consumption of ozone-depleting substances.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Measures to reduce consumption of ozone-depleting substances are taken as part of the Department's general maintenance programme, and the costs involved are not separately identifiable.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how his departmental green Minister has promoted protection of the ozone layer with specific policy measures; and which possible measures have been considered and rejected, and on what grounds.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend has signed the declaration of commitment to responsible energy management on behalf of the Department; has set in hand a review of the Department's policy on the purchase of ozone-depleting chemicals and of goods manufactured with these substances; and is supervising the development of a green housekeeping strategy for the Department, in accordance with the commitments given in the 1990 White Paper, "This Common Inheritance" (Cm 1200), and subsequent White Papers.

Human Rights

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on Government measures to ensure the right to private and family life of all persons resident in the United Kingdom as set out in article 8 of the European convention on human rights.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Government are satisfied that the United Kingdom meets its obligations under the European convention on human rights, including those set out in article 8. The United Kingdom is committed, where it is found to be in violation of the convention, to ensuring that its arrangements are consistent with those obligations.

Fire Extinguishers

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many portable halon fire extinguishers are contained within his Department's buildings; and what measures are being taken to ensure their recycling and replacement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Records of portable halon fire extinguishers are not held centrally. Practice on their recycling and replacement is being reviewed in the light of the relevant DOE guidelines.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what provisions exist to explain their rights to asylum seekers at the port of entry; and what changes will occur to these arising from the passage of the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Bill.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Asylum seekers at ports are informed orally by the immigration officer, in a language with which they are familiar (through an interpreter if necessary), that their application will be treated in confidence, that it will be referred to the asylum division in Croydon, and that they are not obliged to leave the United Kingdom pending a decision. Asylum questionnaires contain a preamble supplementing these details in writing and inform applicants of the existence and function of the refugee legal centre. Detained asylum seekers have access to written information in ten languages.

The Asylum and Immigration Appeals Bill will not require any changes to these procedures.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the full text of the document or written advice given to someone who has been granted clearance abroad to enter the United Kingdom in order to make an asylum application.

Mr. Charles Wardle: There is no provision for receiving applications for asylum from abroad, but we are prepared to consider granting entry clearance for the purpose of making an asylum application where a person falls within the definition of a refugee in article 1A of the 1951 UN refugees convention and has close ties with the United Kingdom such as to make it the most appropriate country of refuge.

There is no standard document or written advice for use in such circumstances.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many asylum seekers have been granted entry clearance abroad in each of the years for which figures are available since 1979;

(2) how many individuals have (a) applied for and (b) been granted asylum status by the United Kingdom before they have reached the United Kingdom for each of the last 15 years;

(3) how many times in each of the years for which figures are available entry clearance has been granted abroad for the purpose of making an asylum application.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Available information on principal applications for asylum made abroad is given in table A. This information may be under-recorded.

There is no provision to grant asylum to a person who is not in the United Kingdom. Figures for those granted entry clearance abroad either for the purpose of seeking asylum in the United Kingdom, or as dependants joining refugees or people with exceptional leave here, are not separately identifiable in the statistics.

Figures for grants of settlement to south east Asian refugees, who form a distinct group dealt with under a specific programme, are given in table B.

Table A: Applications[1] [2] for asylum in the United Kingdom received by British posts abroad and referred to the Home Office for decision, 1986-91

Year	Number
1986	30
1987	35
[3]1988	35
[3]1989	30
[3]1990	35
1991	35

[1] Excluding dependants.

[2] Figures may be under-recorded. Rounded to nearest 5. 1991 figure is provisional.

[3] In addition, about 1,695 applications in 1988, 35 in 1989, 55 in 1990 and 15 in 1991 by nationals of Afghanistan to the British High Commission in New Delhi, and 40 applications in 1991 by nationals of Liberia to the British High Commission in Lagos, were processed locally.

Table B: Grants(1)(2) of settlement in the United Kingdom to south east Asian refugees

Year	Settlement grants
1979	3,150
1980	9,100
1981	2,000
1982	880
1983	1,220
1984	800
1985	530
1986	830
1987	440
1988	710
1989	720
1990	650
1991	480

(1) Includes dependants.

(2) All these grants were on arrival to the UK, except for a total of 2,700 during the years 1979-82 which were on removal of time limit.

Electoral System

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the number of people entitled to vote who were not on the electoral register for the current year.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is estimated that 4·3 per cent. of the eligible population are not included in the 1992 register of electors. This estimate is based on the 1981 census results with an allowance for subsequent births, deaths and migration.

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to publicise the availability of the postal vote for local and parliamentary elections.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A national television and newspaper campaign costing just under £500,000 was undertaken to let people know about postal and proxy voting arrangements at the recent general election. No decision has yet been taken about publicity for the next general election. The electoral registration form, form A, contains information about postal voting. We also produce publicity material for people who need an absent vote on an indefinite basis. Local government elections are the responsibility of local authorities and we do not provide publicity for absent voting at those elections.

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what publicity will be given to electors' right to check if they are on the draft register of electors when it is published at the end of November.

Mr Peter Lloyd: Electoral registration officers are required to place notices in prominent places within their area telling people where they can inspect the draft register and how to make a claim for their name to be included in the register. Many electoral registration officers also place advertisements in local newspapers. In addition, a press release about the publication of the draft register will be distributed shortly to all national daily and Sunday newspapers and the major television companies and through the Central Office of Information news distribution system.

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to introduce a voters charter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have no plans to do so.

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the expenditure on (a) electoral registration within the United Kingdom and (b) registration of overseas residents eligible for the United Kingdom electoral register in each of the last 10 years; and if he will also list the expenditure on electoral registration for both of the above categories in each local authority district areas as (i) a total figure in 1992 terms, (ii) as a percentage of local authority expenditure and (iii) on a per capita basis.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Details of spending by some local authorities on electoral registration on a per capita basis may be found in the report of a survey by OPCS, "Compiling the Electoral Register 1991", a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Rooker), Official Report, 30 October, column 931, if he will make it his policy to publish the list of members of the five working groups of the Home Office joint committee on electoral matters in the Official Report.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will require his working group on electoral affairs to give detailed consideration to (a) the concept of a rolling register, (b) additional powers for electoral registration officers to seek and find eligible citizens, (c) other countries' electoral registration procedures, (d) the impact of the poll tax upon levels of electoral registration and (e) the effectiveness of the current level of public spending on electoral registration.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Birmingham, Perry Bar (Mr. Rooker) on 30 October, Official Report, columns 931-32). Within those remits, the working groups will be able to consider any matters which are relevant.

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy for his working group on electoral affairs to take evidence from (a) Liberty, (b) Mencap, (c) the Royal National Institute for the Blind, (d) the Spastics Society, (e) Shelter, (f) CHAR and (g) other interested bodies.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have recently written to MENCAP and to MIND to seek their views on a draft practice note for electoral registration officers on the registration of mentally ill and learning disabled people. Before the general election we circulated to acting returning officers guidance produced by the RNIB on helping blind people to take part in the electoral process. We have also written to the Spastics Society offering to do the same in respect of people with physical disabilities.

Where appropriate, we will consult other voluntary groups about matters in which they have an interest; and we are always prepared to consider the views of such groups when they are submitted to us.

Island Prisons

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the breathing apparatus to be made available to island prisons; and if he will make a statement on the delay in providing the equipement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Governors of the three Island prisons were asked in October to assess the numbers of sets of short duration breathing apparatus required for their establishments as part of a service-wide initiative to replace smoke hoods. Parkhurst prison has been in possession of conventional breathing apparatus since 1988.

A programme of training is now planned and the Island prisons will be among the first to receive it in December 1992. Following training, equipment will be supplied to the establishments. The delay in the provision of equipment and training is a consequence of a delay in the signing of the relevant contract.

Gambling

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the most recent figures expressed as total expenditure and on a per capita basis, for gambling in the United Kingdom on (a) off-course and on-course betting, (b) gaming machines, (c) casinos, (d) bingo, (e) football pools and (f) small lotteries.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Estimated figures for net consumer expenditure on gambling (i.e., amount staked less winnings) in the financial year 1991-92 are set out in the table. Those for off-course betting, pool betting and bingo are based on returns to Her Majesty's Customs and Excise. Those for casinos and lotteries are taken from the annual report of the Gaming Board for Great Britain, although the latter includes only those lotteries registered with the Board.

The estimates for on-course betting and gaming machines cannot be calculated directly and should be treated with extreme caution. The turnover per head per annum is based on an estimated United Kingdom population of 57·4 million.

South Wales Police

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now agree to increase the establishment of the South Wales police force.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Applications for increase in police force establishments will be dealt with as soon as Ministers have decided on the level of resources for the police service for the coming financial year.

Chelmsford Prison

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many prisoners there were in Chelmsford prison at the latest available date;

(2) what further action is being considered to reduce overcrowding in Chelmsford prison.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: On 6 November there were 308 prisoners in Chelmsford prison. The establishment's certified normal accommodation (that is its uncrowded capacity) is 244. The prison service is considering how to meet the need for increased capacity in the prison, and I hope to be in a position to announce proposals on this in the near future.

Police Officers

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many and what percentage of police officers up to chief constable are (a) women, (b) from ethnic minorities and (c) ethnic minority women.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Prisoners' Mail

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what advice his Department has issued on the handling of prisoners' mail; to what extent the handling of mail is a matter for the discretion of the governor of each individual prison; and if he will set out the grounds on which mail may be withheld from prisoners.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Guidance to governors on the handling of prisoners' correspondence is set out in standing order 5 and circular instruction 10/1991, copies of which are in the Library.

Prisons (Drugs)

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to improve prison officers' training in dealing with drugs problems.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Training in the care and treatment of drug misusers has been available for the last two years through the sponsorship of courses at Ruskin college Oxford and we are extending this provision this year to a specialist course designed specifically for prison staff of all disciplines. In addition a series of seminars have been introduced to familiarise staff with the Guidelines on the Throughcare of Drug Misusers published in 1991. An increasing number of health care staff now hold nursing qualifications and we have given priority to providing funding to enable nursing staff to attend professional courses on drug and alcohol dependency nursing.

Provision has also been made for prison medical officers to undertake professional training in the treatment of addictive behaviour.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out his plans for tackling the problem of drug dealing and drug abuse in prisons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr Peter Lloyd: We have developed a wide range of measures for tackling drug dealing in prisons. These include the routine searching of prisoners (including those returning from home leave), their cells and other areas. Prisoners and their visitors will also be searched if there is reason to believe that they may have drugs in their possession. Visitors' hand luggage is routinely searched. The police are called in if intelligence suggests that a particular visitor intends to smuggle drugs in to a prison. We have increased the number of prison dogs trained to detect drugs. And the Prison Service College have produced a drugs training package, which has been sent to all prisons, to help staff detect and identify drugs that find their way into prisons.

Guidelines on the throughcare of drugs misusers were first published in 1987 and revised and republished in 1991 in the form of circular instruction 12/1991. In addition a multidisciplinary resource manual entitled "Caring for Drug users" was compiled and published last year. Copies of both these documents are available in the Library. The guidelines provide for all prisons to have in place effective arrangements for identifying drug users and providing clinical care and detoxification programmes where necessary. Prisons are also encouraged to make full use of community drug agencies to provide counselling and preventative training; to ensure that drug users are given every possible opportunity to identify themselves; and to ensure that, where necessary, contact is maintained with community based drug agencies following discharge.

Wolds Remand Centre

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if a race relations officer has been appointed at the Wolds remand centre; and what training has been given on racism and race issues to prison officers at the Wolds.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A race relations officer has been appointed at Wolds remand prison. All prisoner custody officers there must receive training in prisoner management which includes a minimum of four hours on racism and race issues during basic training and a further four hours of "anti-discriminatory" training during development training.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many inmates are currently held at the Wolds remand centre; and what percentage are from ethnic minorities.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: On 5 November 1992, 237 prisoners were unlocked at the Wolds remand prison. Of these 9·7 per cent. were registered as being from ethnic minorities.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons has inspected the Wolds remand centre since its opening; and whether he is afforded the same powers to investigate and comment on all aspects of the establishment as in state managed prisons.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons has not yet inspected the Wolds remand prison. He has exactly the same powers in respect of contracted-out prisons like Wolds as he has in relation to prisons managed by the state.

Criminal Injuries Compensation

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications were received by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board as a whole between 1979 to 1992; and how many and what proportion were made by (a) women, (b) members of ethnic minorities and (c) ethnic minority women; and if he will provide details of the percentage of applications successful in each category.

Mr. Jack: In the period 1 April 1979 to 31 March 1992 the board received 504,460 applications. I regret that the available records do not separately identify applications made by women or members of ethnic minorities.

Domestic Violence

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many domestic violence units have been established by the police in each of the police force areas per 10,000 women in their area.

Mr. Charles Wardle: This information is not collected centrally and could be obtained only at a disproportionate cost.

Blundeston Prison

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the disturbance at Her Majesty's Prison Blundeston on 17 September; what evidence there is that the disturbance was drugs-related; and what action has been taken subsequent to the disturbance.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: On 17 September there was a disturbance at Blundeston prison which consisted of a series of incidents amongst which were an assault by a prisoner upon another, three prisoners barricading themselves in an empty wing, and two fires. The fires were not related to the other incidents.

There is no firm evidence that the disturbance was drug related.

An inquiry has been held into these incidents as a result of which disciplinary charges have been laid against four prisoners; a charge under the prison service code of discipline has been laid against a prison officer; the prison's contingency plans have been amended and fire-fighting equipment replaced.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide a table showing for each police force area in England and Wales, and for the whole of England and Wales, the number of notifiable offences in the 12 months ended (a) June 1990, (b) June 1991 and (c) June 1992 and the percentage increase over the previous year in each case.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 27 October 1992]: The required information is published in table 6 of Home Office Statistical Bulletin 31/90, table 2 of Bulletin 18/91 and table 2 of Bulletin 31/92, copies of which are available in the Library.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a table showing, for each category of crime (a) the number of notifiable offences recorded in each police authority area in the year to March 1992, and England and Wales as a total, (b) the figure for the 12 months to March 1991 and (c) the percentage increases in each case.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 28 October 1992]: The information requested is contained in the following tables:

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will review the legal aid scheme to ensure that applicants can be fully represented in preparing submissions to the investors compensation scheme.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Those who meet the financial eligibility criteria may already seek legal advice and assistance in preparing their applications to the investors compensation scheme.

Sentencing

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what studies he has carried out into sentencing for similar offences in different parts of the country; and what plans he has to deal with disparities in sentencing for similar offences by different courts.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 9 November 1992]: I have been asked to reply.

Information about the sentencing practice of Crown court centres and magistrates courts petty sessional divisions is being published by the Secretary of State, in pursuance of his statutory duty under section 95 of the Criminal Justice Act 1991 to enable persons engaged in the administration of justice to become aware of the financial implications of their decisions. Volume I of an eight-volume publication on costs of the criminal justice system was published on 29 October. It provides information about sentencing including information about sentencing for similar offences, in the Crown court. The remaining volumes will provide information about sentencing in the magistrates courts and will be published shortly. The sentencing profiles revealed in these publications must be read with caution. They cannot reflect what may be underlying differences in the workload and case mix at different courts. Sentencing in individual cases is entirely a matter for the courts in the light of all the circumstances of the offence and subject to the decisions of, and any guidance from, the Court of Appeal. A substantial programme of training on good sentencing practice is provided for both judges and magistrates under the auspices of the Judicial Studies Board.

SCOTLAND

College Merger

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what decision he has reached on the formal date for the merger of (a) university of Strathclyde and Jordanhill college and (b) Queen's college and Glasgow polytechnic.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Secretary of State and I indicated in our letters approving the two mergers that the necessary steps would be taken to give effect to the mergers in the first half of 1993. My officials are in close touch with each of the institutions concerned about the precise timetable and legislative arrangements for implementing the mergers.

Public Record Office

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many papers his Department and the Lord Advocate's Department have currently withdrawn from the Public Record Office; if he will list their titles; and when he estimates that they will be returned.

Mr. Lang: Neither the Scottish Record Office nor the Lord Advocate's Department has withdrawn papers from the Public Record Office.

Legal Aid

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the average time between legal aid work being carried out by lawyers and legal aid fees being paid to them for (a) criminal and (b) civil legal aid for each of the past 15 years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The average times, in weeks, taken by the Scottish Legal Aid Board to process accounts for (a) criminal and (b) civil legal aid work in the years 1987-88 to 1991-92 and the situation at September 1992 are set out in the table. Prior to 1987, the payment of accounts for legal aid work in Scotland was the responsibility of the Law Society of Scotland and the figures for previous years are therefore not readily available. The board does not have figures available for 1987-88. The figures shown include periods of time when the board was awaiting responses from lawyers to its inquiries about accounts.

	(a) Criminal	(b) Civil
1988-89	7·55	13·26
1989-90	6·09	13·39
1990-91	5·06	11·65
1991-92	5·59	15·81
April-October 1992	4·44	9·08

School Transport

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement in relation to the provision of home-to-school transport following comments received on the consultation paper, "Competing for Quality: Competition in the Provision of Local Services", published in November 1991.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In Scotland, the majority of home-to-school transport is already provided by the private sector, either under competitive tendering arrangements or through other arrangements such as the issuing of bus passes to children. Taking account of the responses to the consultation paper, I have concluded that compulsory competitive tendering need not at this stage be extended to apply to all home-to-school transport. I will, however, keep this position under review.

Charities

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many charities, whose gross income does not exceed £25,000 per annum, will have to conform to the regulations specified in the Charities Accounts (Scotland) Regulations 1992; if he will list them; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 4 November 1992]: As a general rule, all Scottish charities must now prepare annual accounts conforming to the Charities Accounts (Scotland) Regulations 1992.

Where a charity's annual income is £25,000 or more, the statement of accounts must comprise a balance sheet, and an income and expenditure account, and must include a report of its activities. In cases where the annual income is less than £25,000 charities may elect to prepare simpler accounts.

No information is held centrally about the annual income of individual Scottish charities.

Health Service Expenditure

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish for each health board for the current financial year (a) the planned capital and revenue expenditure on mental handicap (learning disabilities) services and (b) the value of assets relevant to mental handicap (learning disabilities) services listed in capital asset registers.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 6 November 1992]: This information is not held centrally.

Hospital Food

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the minimum amount that may be spent per patient per day in purchasing food for in-patients in hospitals.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 9 November 1992]: There is no minimum amount. It is for each health board to decide on the amount which it considers appropriate to spend on catering services, including food provisions, to meet patient care needs. The board's decision will be informed by advice from dietitians on the dietary requirements of patients in the different care groups.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps are taken by his Department to ensure quality control for meals served to in-patients in hospitals.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 9 November 1992]: Quality control arrangements for meals served to patients is the responsibility of management teams in hospitals. The standards considered appropriate are specified in catering contracts and management teams are responsible for monitoring performance to ensure the contract specifications are met and maintained.

Water Services

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the expenditure by each regional council on (a) water and (b) sewerage service provision in each of the last five years.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 9 November 1992]: Revenue expenditure on water and sewerage services by each regional and islands council is given in the tables.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Forest Clearance

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to investigate the schemes on clearing natural forest to develop timber plantations funded by the Commonwealth Development Corporation in Cote d'Ivoire and Thailand; and if he will ensure that future moneys granted by the Overseas Development Administration in overseas aid do not fund the destruction of natural forests.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Before proposed investments are submitted to the Commonwealth Development Corporation's board for approval they are subject to appraisal, which includes explicit assessments of their environmental and social impact. We have no plans to investigate CDC forestry projects in Thailand. As part of our regular evaluation programme we expect to release shortly an evaluation report on the SODEFOR forestry project in Cote d'Ivoire in which CDC is a co-financier with the World bank and the Government of Cote d'Ivoire. We also expect to release shortly an evaluation synthesis report on six forestry projects including SODEFOR. Our policy is to help and encourage developing countries to manage their forests sustainably.

PRIME MINISTER

Economic Policy

Q9. Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the Government's new economic policy including his forecasts for growth in the financial years 1992-93 and 1993-94.

The Prime Minister: The Government's central objective remains to achieve sustainable and non-inflationary growth. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor set out details of the Government's economic policy in his Mansion House speech of 30 October. He will be announcing the Government's spending plans and publishing a new forecast for the economy in 1993 in the autumn statement.

Official Statistics

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what provisions are made to ensure that Ministers and others in Government service are not permitted to take personal advantage of access to official statistics before they are published.

The Prime Minister: "Questions of Procedure for Ministers" makes and the civil service code make it clear that both Ministers and civil servants should avoid any conflict of interest between their official duties and private interests. Ministers and civil servants are bound by the provisions of the Companies Securities (Insider Dealing) Act 1985. Copies of "Questions of Procedure" and the code are in the Library.

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 10 November.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 10 November.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Pit Closures

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister (1) when he arranged for the telephone line in his office for views on pit closures to be closed and callers told to write instead; and what arrangements he is making for more telephone lines to his office to enable the public to make calls, the substance of which can be logged for record purposes;

(2) if he will publish the telephone numbers to his office which members of the public may telephone if they wish to record protests about pit closures and other matters; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I do not propose to change the existing practice.

TRANSPORT

Radioactivity

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish details of radioactive sources or materials that are known to have escaped the official control regime while in transit within the United Kingdom and its territorial waters.

Mr. Norris: A database on accidents and incidents occurring in the transport of radioactive materials is maintained by the National Radiological Protection Board. I am placing copies of the relevant reports in the Library of the House.

Pedestrians

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to publish the advice on grade separation for pedestrians promised in departmental advice note 57/87, published in 1987.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Advice on footbridges is given in departmental standard BD 29/87, and advice on subways TD 2/78 and TD 3/79. The advice on subways is currently being updated and my Department expects to publish a revised standard in 1993.

I am putting copies of the relevant departmental standards in the Libraries of both Houses.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list, for each class of all-purpose road set out in table 2 of departmental standard TD 20/85, the maximum traffic flow at which he considers it safe for all pedestrians to cross in safety.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Advice on at-grade pedestrian crossings is given in departmental advice note TA 52/87 on the parameters and other factors to be considered when assessing the provision of pelican and zebra crossings.

A copy of the advice note is being placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total revenue expenditure in each of the English regions by his Department in the years 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Estimates of general Government expenditure on transport by English region for 1990-91 and 1991-92 are not yet available. However, estimates for the two preceeding years—1988-89 and 1989-90—are given in appendix E of "Public Expenditue Analyses to 1994-95; Statistical Supplement to the 1991 Autumn Statement", Cm. 1920. It is not possible to break down the figures between revenue and capital expenditure.

Road Schemes (Environmental Appraisal)

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which organisation he has consulted or will be consulting on the draft revision of the manual of environmental appraisal for new road schemes.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Department has consulted, or will be consulting other Government Departments, and all the statutory organisations with responsibility for the environment—English Nature, English Heritage, National Rivers Authority, and the Countryside Commission—where they have an interest. The standing advisory committee on trunk road assessment will also be consulted.

Lifeboat Service

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make any contribution towards the extra costs incurred by the Royal National Lifeboat Institution to meet additional responsibilities in areas like the Firth of Forth as described in the Defence Open Government document of October following the closure of RAF search and rescue helicopter bases at Leuchars and elsewhere.

Mr. Norris: The Royal National Lifeboat Institution provides an excellent service under its royal charter which is entirely supported by voluntary public subscription. It is a matter for the institution whether it would apply to the Government for any funding.

Train Drivers

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the statutory authority for the test and authority to drive a locomotive.

Mr. Freeman: There are at present no statutory requirements which cover the testing and authorisation of train drivers.

Departmental Properties

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list, for each local authority area in South Yorkshire, how many residential properties are currently owned by his Department; and if he will list, by location, those residential properties which are empty, giving the type of accommodation available, the length of time each property has been vacant, and its intended future use.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Department owns two residential properties in South Yorkshire—one each in the Doncaster borough council and Rotherham borough council areas.

One property is at 50 School road, Wales, Sheffield. It is a three-bedroom semi-detached house and has been empty since 11 November 1991. The property is in need of substantial structural repairs. Its future use will be decided when proposals to widen the M1 between junctions 28 and 32 are finalised.

The other property is The Bungalow, Grove avenue, Doncaster. It is a three-bedroom detached property, which the tenant vacated on 28 October 1992. Another tenant is to be sought.

Tunnels (Lighting)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to improve the lighting in tunnels on trunk roads in Greater London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The only tunnel on a trunk road in Greater London is the Blackwall tunnel. The lighting in the northbound bore of this tunnel was improved earlier this year and is now up to the British Standard.

A principal inspection of the southbound bore will take place in the spring of 1993. Consideration will be given at that time to the need for improvements to the lighting.

Local Authority Parking System

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement concerning the introduction of compulsory competitive tendering to the management and provision of services for the new local authority on-street parking enforcement system under the Road Traffic Act 1991.

Mr. Norris: In November 1991 the Department of the Environment consulted local authorities nationally about the extension of CCT to further services—"Competing for Quality—A Consultation Paper"—which included the provision and management of services for the new local authority on-street parking enforcement system under part II of the Road Traffic Act 1991. This information was supplemented by further details in the draft traffic management and parking guidance for London issued in March this year for consultation.

There was general agreement that the services should cover the provision of parking attendants, the clamping and removal, and the release, of vehicles found breaching the new decriminalised controls and the management of such services. Some concern was expressed about the timing of the introduction of CCT to these services. The London local authorities in particular felt that they needed time to assess the levels of enforcement that will be necessary to help them determine specifications for CCT.

To meet these concerns I have concluded that the services should not be subject to compulsory competitive tendering until 1 April 1995. Outside London, authorities will generally not be given the powers to apply the new parking enforcement system until experience of their operation in London has been gained. It is intended that CCT will also apply in those areas from 1 April 1995.

The requirement to introduce CCT for these services will be made by order under existing legislation. The order will be subject to formal consultation before coming to Parliament for approval.

Surveyor General's Organisation

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what conclusions he has reached following his consideration of the Surveyor General's Organisation as a possible candidate for executive agency status.

Mr. MacGregor: I have decided that the Surveyor General's Organisation—SGO—should be a candidate for executive agency status. The necessary preparatory work is in hand with a view to the organisation becoming an agency on 1 April 1994. The agency will be called the Marine Safety Agency. I intend shortly to issue a consultation document on the scope for increased private sector participation in the survey and certification work currently done by the SGO.

Airbags

Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to encourage the fitting of airbags to cars sold in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The single most effective measure for reducing accident injury is the wearing of a seat belt. This, in conjunction with a well-designed steering wheel, is much more cost effective than the fitting of airbags. While we are not therefore actively encouraging the fitting of airbags, we are participating in discussions on a European standard and are monitoring experience of the fitment of airbags worldwide.

Nudge Bars

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps are being taken to ensure the fitting of nudge bars to motor vehicles does not create added danger to pedestrians.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Government are working with the Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders on developing a code of practice on the design of nudge bars. The United Kingdom is also actively pressing within Europe for an EC directive to make the front of cars less harmful to pedestrians. When adopted, this will exercise some control over the fitment of nudge bars.

Jubilee Line

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his Department's estimate of the likely number of jobs that would be created in the United Kingdom by the building of the proposed Jubilee line extension; and when he expects to make an announcement about the future of the project.

Mr. Norris: The building of the proposed Jubilee line extension is estimated to create direct employment on-site on civil works for up to 5,000 people and off-site in manufacturing and supply for approximately five times as many more people. Talks are continuing on the promised £400 million contribution from the private sector. I cannot speculate on the timing of any announcement about the future of the project in advance of the conclusion of those talks.

Emergency Vessels

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many inspectors and related officials are presently engaged in the inspection of those emergency or standby vessels which are being assessed in terms of the revised code; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: Fifteen marine surveyors are engaged in such duties as part of their overall responsibilities, with some support from other officials.

Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the cost of building the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency offices in Swansea; and what that cost would be at today's prices.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I shall write to the right hon. Member.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

European Parliament

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make, before the Edinburgh summit, an estimate of the cost to the European Parliament of having more than one place of work.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We do not possess the information to make such an estimate.

Debt Write-offs

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy during the United Kingdom presidency of the EC to press for European fiscal and other measures to encourage European banks to write off commercial debt.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom, in common with its EC partners, is already encouraging commercial debt reduction through the Brady plan. This international agreement allows the IMF and World bank to devote some of their leading resources to facilitate voluntary debt reduction agreements between banks and debtors. As noted by the most recent International Monetary Fund—International Bank for Reconstruction and Development development committee communiqué, debt and debt service reduction arrangements that account for around 90 per cent. of the bank debt of the major debtor nations have now been reached.

Public Record Office

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many papers his Department has currently withdrawn from the Public Record Office; if he will list their titles; and when he estimates that they will be returned.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the ODA have 513 records on loan. To list them all would involve disproportionate cost. Government Departments have a statutory right under the Public Records Acts to recall records temporarily from the Public Record Office for administrative use. Records are returned as soon as departmental action has been completed.

Departmental Properties

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list for each local authority area in South Yorkshire, how many residential properties are currently owned by his Department; and if he will list, by location, those residential properties which are empty, giving the type of accommodation available, the length of time each property has been vacant, and its intended future use.

Mr. Goodlad: None.

NATIONAL FINANCE

BCCI

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the earliest date at which his Department was alerted to possible connections between Bank of Credit and Commerce International and terrorist organisations.

Mr. Dorrell: The Treasury was first made aware of such possible connections in July 1991.

Pit Closures

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington) of 21 October, Official Report, column 315, if he will now make it his policy to establish a study of the cost to be incurred by the loss of income tax, VAT and national insurance contributions and the payment of unemployment and other social security benefits in respect of the closure of the 31 pits originally indicated in the announcement of 13 October, so far as the figure can be assessed.

Mr. Dorrell: There is no means of accurately assessing these costs. To estimate the net cost of closing a pit it would be necessary to establish the costs of alternative courses of action. For example, the cost of subsidising a pit would have to be borne by electricity consumers, taxpayers or by diverting funds from other public expenditure programmes, all of which would have implications for employment elsewhere which are impossible to assess accurately.

Trinidad Agreement

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to extend the terms of the Trinidad agreement to cover Zambia and Zimbabwe.

Mr. Dorrell: Debt relief on Trinidad terms has been extended by the Paris club to a total of 10 of the world's poorest and most heavily indebted countries, including Zambia, but Trinidad terms are not intended for less-indebted, lower-middle income countries such as Zimbabwe.

Departmental Properties

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list for each local authority area in South Yorkshire, how many residential properties are currently owned by his Department; and if he will list, by location, those residential properties which are empty, giving the type of accommodation available, the length of time each property has been vacant, and its intended future use.

Sir John Cope: Departments of the Chancellor of the Exchequer do not own any residential property in South Yorkshire.

Debt

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to increase the proportion of developing country debt eligible for write-off from 50 per cent. to 66 per cent.

Sir John Cope: The Government were responsible for the Trinidad initiative to tackle the debt burden of the poorest and most indebted countries, and hopes that Trinidad terms can be developed further in the direction of our original proposals which were for a benchmark figure of two thirds reduction applied immediately to the whole stock of debt.

Public Record Office

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many papers his Department has currently withdrawn from the Public Record Office; if he will list their titles; and when he estimates that they will be returned.

Sir John Cope: Government Departments have a statutory right under the Public Records Acts to retrieve records temporarily from the Public Record Office for their own administrative use. Her Majesty's Treasury currently has 173 records out on loan. To list them all would involve disproportionate cost. Records are returned as soon as departmental action has been completed.

Trinidad Terms

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what efforts have been undertaken by his Department to persuade other creditor countries to join the Trinidad terms agreement.

Sir John Cope: The Government have given a strong lead in tackling the debt burden of the poorest and most indebted countries and was responsible for both the Toronto and the Trinidad initiatives. The Government are committed to the task of persuading its Paris club partners to agree further improvements to the Trinidad terms, including encouraging all creditors, without exception, to implement debt reduction under these agreed terms.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Stevenson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment has been made into the effect of value added tax changes that require payment on account rather than in arrears in Stoke-on-Trent, South; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: It is not possible to analysise by constituency area the effects of the requirement that the largest VAT payers should make payments monthly in arrears rather than quarterly in arrears. Overall, the change brings United Kingdom practice into line with that in most other EC member states, and offsets the cash flow loss to the Exchequer which would otherwise arise as a result of the reintroduction in this financial year of postponed accounting for VAT on acquisitions from other EC countries.

Savings

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the amount of (a) personal and (b) corporate savings in each of the years 1981 to 1991 inclusive; and what was the total amount of savings represented as a proportion of gross domestic product in each of these years.

Mr. Dorrell: The figures for savings, before deducting depreciation and stock appreciation, are as follows:

	Personal sector savings £ billion	Corporate sector savings £ billion	Total savings as percentage of GDP (A) at market prices
1981	22·3	28·0	19
1982	21·6	30·8	18
1983	19·9	35·4	19
1984	24·7	40·7	19
1985	25·9	42·7	19
1986	22·8	46·0	17
1987	19·6	54·7	18
1988	17·8	56·4	18
1989	23·5	54·5	18
1990	31·7	50·7	17
1991	39·8	46·5	15

North Sea Gas

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the effect on tax revenue (a) in total and (b) in percentage terms, of offsets against petroleum revenue taxation resulting from the project for the offshore transportation of gas from the central North sea via the central area transmission system to Teesside; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: I have made no such estimate.

Retail Prices Index

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the percentage change in (a) the retail prices index and (b) the health service prices index between September 1991 and September 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 6 November 1992]: The retail prices index rose by 3·6 per cent. and the health service prices index rose by 4·8 per cent.

Unlike the retail prices index, the health service prices index measures changes in input costs, whereas it is output costs which bear on the amount of health care delivered. Output costs in the NHS have over long periods moved in line with those in the economy, taking account of efficiency gains.

Auditors

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will bring forward proposals for legislation under which auditors of insurance companies would be prohibited from recruiting company directors.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I have been asked to reply.

I see no reason to do so. Ethical guidance issued by the professional accountancy bodies states that no one should take part in the audit of a company if he has, during the period on which the report is to be made or at any time in the two years prior to the first day of that period, been an officer, other than auditor, or employee of that company. Under part II of the Companies Act 1989, recognised supervisory bodies are required to have adequate rules and practices as to professional integrity and independence.

EDUCATION

Higher Education

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what percentage of 18-year-olds are in higher education in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) the United States of America and (c) Japan.

Mr. Forman: The readily available figures are given in the table and represent participation at all ages—generally 18 and over.

New entrants[1] to higher education, 1988

Country	(main ages on entry)	Participation rate[2] (percentage)
Japan[3]	18	37—52
United Kingdom[4]	18—21	37
United States of America[5]	18	33—65

[1] Includes full-time and part-time students entering higher education for the first time i.e. excluding postgraduate students and others already having a qualification in higher education.

[2] To aid comparison and overcome the problem of the varying lengths of courses in different countries, the participation rate is the percentage of all new entrants (defined above) to a derived relevant single year group. The latter is calculated by taking the total populations for the ages providing at least 70 per cent. of the new entrants and dividing by the number of ages involved. For the United Kingdom this is the population of ages 18 to 21 divided by 4. OECD recommend this procedure.

[3] The higher figure shown includes data for advanced special training schools (SENSHU') which may be equivalent to sub-degree higher education.

[4] Excludes the private sector and students from abroad. Includes nursing and paramedical students at Health Department establishments.

[5] The lower figure excludes students on two-year courses, some of which may not be equivalent to sub-degree higher education.

Public Record Office

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many papers his Department has currently withdrawn from the Public Record Office; if he will list their titles; and when he estimates that they will be returned.

Mr. Forman; Government Departments have a statutory right under the Public Records Acts temporarily to retrieve records from the Public Record Office for their own administrative use.

The Department for Education regularly withdraws records relating to closed voluntary schools to deal with legal issues surrounding the disposal of premises. At present, the Department holds 50 records; of which nine are for those purposes described above. The others are being scrutinised for early release to the public. To list them all would involve disproportionate cost.

It is unusual for this Department to withdraw records for more than two weeks and all are returned as soon as departmental action is complete.

Universal Education

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what contribution the United Kingdom is making to the UNESCO-co-ordinated initiative, "Education for All"; and what work his Department is doing towards achieving the objective of basic education for every child and adult around the world.

Mr. Forman: The Government support the objective of ensuring universal access to basic education. In the United Kingdom education is compulsory for all children of school age. The Government also recognise the importance of basic education for adults. Under the Further and Higher Education Act 1992, the further education funding councils will be under a duty to secure the provision of adequate facilities for literacy and numeracy teaching for adults.

The Goverment will also continue to promote education in developing countries in collaboration with other aid donors, including UNESCO, UNICEF and the World bank. The Overseas Development Administration aims to identify new projects which will improve the quality, availability and relevance of education in developing countries, with particular reference to promoting literacy for women.

Departmental Properties

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list, for each local authority area in South Yorkshire, how many residential properties are currently owned by his Department; and if he will list, by location, those residential properties which are empty, giving the type of accommodation available, the length of time each property has been vacant, and its intended future use.

Mr. Forman: The Department owns no properties in South Yorkshire.

School Phobia

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what research has been undertaken into school phobia; and what advice local education authorities receive in order to deal with this condition.

Mr. Forth: The most recent research on school phobia known to the Department is that undertaken by Mr. Nigel Blagg and summarised in his publication "School Phobia and its Treatment", published in 1987. The Department has not issued any guidance on the subject to date.

Nursery Education

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much money has been made available for nursery education under the capital grants system for grant-maintained schools for the financial years 1991-92, 1992-93 and how much has been allocated for 1993-94.

Mr. Forth: No money has been specifically set aside for nursery education under the capital grants system. All bids for capital grants are considered on their merits in the light of the funds available and the competing needs of all the schools in the grant-maintained sector.

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what guidance he has given to chairmen and governors of grant-mainted schools concerning the eligibility of nursery education projects for support funding under the allocation of capital grants to grant-maintained schools for 1993-94.

Mr. Forth: No specific guidance has been issued to cover nursery provision. The guidance offered to schools on capital bids applies throughout the grant-maintained sector, and as such includes nursery projects.

Workers Educational Association

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the current level of funding for the Workers Educational Association; and what is the projected funding for this organisation for the next financial year.

Mr. Forman: The Workers Educational Association in England is currently funded by a mixture of direct grant from the Department for Education and education support grant via local education authorities. In 1992-93 DFE grant is £2,266,000, while ESG funding, 70 per cent. of which is also provided by central Government, amounts to £1·3 million.

From 1993-94, the Further Education Funding Council for England will take over responsibility for the grant currently paid by the Department for Education. It will be for the council to determine the level of that funding in the light of the overall resources available to it. The ESG funding will continue in 1993-94 at the same level as in 1992-93.

Discretionary Awards

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what was the total expenditure, in each local education authority, for major discretionary awards in the last available financial year;

(2) how many local education authorities did not give major discretionary awards to students in the last financial year.

Mr. Forman: The available information is shown in the table. Three LEAs—Avon, Berkshire and Sunderland—were unable to provide information; one—Camden—made 149 discretionary awards at 50 to 100 per cent. of the mandatory rate; and two—Trafford and Isles of Scilly—made no such awards.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what action can be taken by students, in local education authorities where major discretionary awards have been cut or withdrawn, in order to finance non-degree or degree equivalent courses; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what steps he will take to ensure an equitable availability of major discretionary awards between local education authorities.

Mr. Forman: It is for each local education authority to determine its own policies and expenditure on discretionary awards in the light of local needs and priorities. The local authority grant settlement for 1992-93 allowed for a substantial increase in overall education spending. Students who are unsuccessful in obtaining discretionary awards may seek help from, for example, their institutions' access funds, sponsors such as employers, educational trusts or other sources.

Schools

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many local education authority schools were open and functioning in each year since 1979.

Mr. Forth: The table shows, for each year since 1979, the number of LEA-maintained schools in England which were open in January of each year.

[1] Provisional

Disabled Students

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what level of funding local education authorities receive in order to ensure access to education establishments for disabled persons.

Mr. Forth: Local authorities do not receive any grant specifically for this purpose. Central Government support for local authorities is virtually entirely through general grant, which is not hypothecated to particular purposes. Local authorities are thus free to determine their own spending priorities. Information on local education authorities' spending to ensure access to education establishments for disabled persons is not collected centrally.

University Admissions

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list, for the last five years, the figures for admission to British universities by type of school of those admitted; and if he will give both the aggregate figure and the figure for each university.

Mr. Forman: The number of United Kingdom domiciled candidates in Great Britain accepted through the UCCA scheme for entry to full-time and sandwich first degree courses at United Kingdom universities are shown in the table.

School Transport

Mr. Bates: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what action he proposes to take with regard to the proposal in the consultation paper "Competing for Quality: Competition in the Provision of Local Services" to introduce compulsory competitive tendering for transport centrally organised by local education authorities for journeys between home and school or college.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend, and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales, remain committed to imposing a rigorous competitive regime on local authorities' provision of vehicles for home to school and home to college transport. In the light of responses to "Competing for Quality", they have concluded that this can best be achieved by imposing on all authorities, not just those running their own transport fleets, a competitive tendering regime compatible with that already required by the Transport Act 1985 in respect of public transport subsidised by local authorities. This will enable authorities to continue to make co-ordinated, cost-effective arrangements for all transport provided from or assisted by public funds, as required by the 1985 Act. It will also mean that local transport operators will work under a single tendering regime.

The 1985 Act regime needs to be amended to provide for competition between private contractors and authorities' own work forces in accordance with the principles of the compulsory competitive tendering regime laid down in the Local Government Act 1988. This will require primary legislation, which will be brought forward at the earliest opportunity.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Battlefield Sites

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list, by county for the United Kingdom, the initiatives he proposes to introduce to secure the preservation of battlefield sites.

Mr. Brooke: The Government have invited English Heritage to prepare a register of battlefield sites in England to inform planning decisions which may affect them. The National Army museum is currently undertaking the research for the register on behalf of English Heritage. The register should be available for consultation early next year. Responsibility for the preservation of battlefield sites in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland rests with the relevant Secretaries of State.

Local Authority Services

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how the Government intend to proceed on the proposed extension of compulsory competitive tendering to local authority managed arts facilities and public library support services.

Mr. Brooke: The Government believe that the wider application of competition to the provision of local authority services will bring significant benefits in terms of the quality and value for money for the public.

Proposals to extend compulsory competitive tendering (CCT) to a range of local authority services, including arts facilities and library support services, were set out in the consultation paper "Competing for Quality", published in November 1991. I have discussed with my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales the responses to that document which referred to arts and library services, and we are agreed on the way forward in those areas.

On arts facilities, my Department received some 180 responses, mostly from local authorities and arts organisations. We are grateful for the helpful comments contained in those responses. In reaching conclusions, I have also taken into account the Audit Commission's report "Local Authorities, Entertainment and the Arts" (January 1991), which identified three principal weaknesses in local authority arts management: lack of policy objectives, absence of monitoring of performance and inadequate financial control.

On the evidence before me, I am satisfied that there is scope to improve local authority arts provision through the introduction of increased competition. However, I have also concluded from that evidence that there are appreciable differences between the management of arts facilities and that of most of the other services to which the extension of CCT has been set out in a written reply by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment. Particularly important considerations are the wide diversity between local authorities in the extent and type of arts facilities provided and the very long planning times required in drawing up arts programmes.

In view of these differences, I propose to commission consultants to undertake further studies in order to determine how competition might best be applied to this area of local authority management. In addition, to assist local authorities in clarifying and monitoring their service objectives, the Audit Commission will be invited to identify and disseminate models of good practice.

With regard to public library support services, we received 130 responses to the consultation paper from commercial library suppliers, individual librarians and members of the public as well as from local authorities. Many local authority responses drew on experience with existing contracts for library support services or on studies which they had already carried out into the potential for contracting out support work. I am grateful for the helpful way in which respondents dealt with our proposal.

From this evidence, it is clear to me that competition has already resulted in value for money from library support services and that there is little scope for further cost reductions in the areas covered in the consultation exercise. I have concluded, therefore, that CCT for support services would not necessarily be the best way forward for encouraging greater competition in the public library field.

However, I do see scope for extending the contracting out of services in the library field, if necessary on a compulsory basis. The consultation exercise showed a need to consider library operations on a wider basis, rather than arbitrarily designating certain aspects in advance as ancillary. I therefore propose a thorough investigation, based upon a series of pilot projects designed to examine the feasibility of contracting out the direct delivery of all or various parts of the library service. These will take place over the next 18 months and, throughout the investigation, I look forward to a close partnership with local authorities and other interested organisations including the library suppliers. My Department will establish a steering committee to advise and monitor the investigation.

Once the investigation is complete, I shall make the results widely available. I intend in so doing to set out a range of competitive options for library authorities to choose between, having regard to their particular circumstances.

Performances

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the performances of (a) theatre, (b) dance, (c) opera and (d) music which he has attended in an official capacity since taking up his appointment.

Mr. Brooke: Since my appointment as Secretary of State for National Heritage I have attended performances of "Three Birds Alighting on a Field" at the Royal Court theatre, the Duenna at Opera North, a memorial concert for Sir Andrzej Panufnik at the Queen Elizabeth hall, a concert given by the Guildhall chamber orchestra and a private concert in honour of the eightieth birthday of Sir Georg Solti. I shall be attending the opening concert of the Scandinavian arts festival at the Barbican and the Royal Ballet's performance of "Mayerling" this week. I have also visited the Yorkshire Sculpture park, and the MENCAP art exhibition.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many regional arts boards he has visited since taking up his appointment.

Mr. Brooke: I met the chairman and director of the Yorkshire and Humberside arts board when I visited Yorkshire on 1 October. My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State has to date also met representatives of the Northern, North West and London arts boards on visits to those regions. In addition, I held a meeting with the chairmen—or their representatives—of all the regional arts boards on 28 October.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Greyhound Racing

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he will take to promote the well-being of greyhound racing.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The promotion of greyhound racing is the responsibility of the industry itself. However, when general betting duty was reduced in the Budget, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer expressed the hope that voluntary arrangements could be made for some of the money to go to greyhound racing. We understand that negotiations between greyhound racing and bookmakers are continuing in an effort to devise suitable arrangements for that purpose.

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress with the voluntary agreement between the off-course bookmakers and the greyhound racing industry over the transfer of the 0·25 per cent. reduction in betting duty introduced in April.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We understand that negotiations between the off-course bookmakers and the greyhound racing industry to devise suitable voluntary arrangements are continuing. We have been kept informed of developments, and hope that the negotiations can be brought to a successful conclusion in the near future.

Police (Housing)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out the numbers and locations of empty service police housing quarters in South Yorkshire.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Home Office does not hold information about the location of police housing, which is owned and managed by individual police authorities. According to information received from South Yorkshire police authority, eight houses were empty as at 31 March 1992. One of these is due to be re-allocated to a serving policy officer, and five have been identified for sale during the current financial year.

Emergency Services

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total revenue expenditure in each of the English regions on police, fire and civil defence services in the years 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The available information on net revenue expenditure by English local authorities on these services in 1990-91 and 1991-92 is given in the table. Expenditure on these services is not aggregated on any regional basis.

Mr. A. Alexandrowicz

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the case of Anthony Alexandrowicz is to be considered by the Parole Board.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Mr. Alexandrowicz is one of some 300 discretionary life prisoners who are now eligible for review under new procedures introduced as a result of section 34 of the Criminal Justice Act 1991. It is for the Parole Board to decide the order in which these cases are heard. To assist in this task, the board is provided with a list of those eligible in each prison establishment. These lists are compiled in accordance with the criteria announced in the Secretary of State's written answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North (Sir J. Wheeler) on 9 March 1992, at column 396. Mr. Alexandrowicz will be notified as soon as his case is listed for hearing.

Primary Purpose Rule

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what changes in trends have occurred since his announcement to adjust primary purpose guidance to allow entry to those spouses who can prove five years of marriage and supply evidence of devotion in this period.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him on 4 November 1992, at columns 221-22.

Leave to Remain Status

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what categories of status equivalent to exceptional leave to remain are operative in other EC countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 3 November, at column 125.

Disclosure to Defendants

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received on the consequences for police operational efficiency of the ruling in the Guinness case requiring greater disclosure to defendants.

Mr. Jack: We have received no representations from members of the public, but the implications of this judgment have been discussed with the Crown prosecution service, the Association of Chief Police Officers and Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary.

Commission for Racial Equality

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many candidates have been interviewed for the post of chairman of the Commission for Racial Equality.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Five.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of experimental procedures involving animals in 1991.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information on the number of scientific procedures involving living animals started in 1991 is contained in table 1 of the Command Paper "Statistics of Scientific Procedures on Living Animals, Great Britain, 1991", Cm 2023, a copy of which is in the Library.

Immigration

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has received (a) in favour of and (b) against the Asylum and Immigration Bill.

Mr. Charles Wardle: In the period between the publication of the Bill on 22 October and 6 November three representations were received in the asylum division expressing support for the legislation and 10 expressing concern about, or opposition to, one or more elements of the legislation.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made by the Malins Committee into the United Kingdom Immigrants Advisory Service.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I understand that the planning group chaired by Mr. Humfrey Malins has sent a consultation letter to those individuals and organisations identified as having a particular interest in the future arrangements for immigration advice and representation. Mr. Malins has agreed that a copy of that letter may be placed in the Library of the House. The group has asked for comments by the end of November and hopes to publish its report by the end of the year.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many visitors have applied to enter and settle in the United Kingdom; how many applications have been granted; how many have had their applications refused; and how many have appealed against their refusal, giving the figures in each case since 1982, by year.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 29 October 1992]: The immigration rules make no provision for a person simultaneously to seek entry as a visitor and as a person coming for settlement; by definition a visitor is a person who intends to return to his or her own country after a stay of at most six months in the United Kingdom. The available information in respect of visitors is given in the table. It is likely that most of the persons refused leave to enter and removed from the United Kingdom, or refused an entry clearance other than for settlement, were visitors. Visitors are also thought to comprise well over half of those appealing against a refusal of leave to enter or of entry clearance for temporary purposes.

Drugs

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide a table showing for each police area in England and Wales for each of the last three years the number of seizures of controlled drugs and the specific number in each of the following categories (a) heroin, (b) cocaine, (c) crack, (d) MDMA, (e) amphetamines and (f) cannabis.

Mr. Jack: The information requested with regard to those drugs, with the exception of "crack", is contained in table A1.3 of the Home Office statistical bulletins "Statistics of the misuse of drugs—seizures and offenders dealt with, United Kingdom, 1989, 1990, and 1991—area tables"—copies of which are in the Library. Information regarding MDMA is available only from 1990 onwards.

The table shows the number of seizures of "crack" by police force area in England and Wales in 1990 and 1991.

Wolds Remand Centre

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners are being held at Wolds remand centre at the latest available date; when he expects that it will reach full capacity; and what plans he has to widen its catchment area or take in other categories of prisoner.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: On Monday 9 November 1992, a total of 233 prisoners were unlocked at Wolds remand prison. It had been expected that its present catchment area would fill it to capacity. This has proved not to be the case and the prison service is now considering how best to make up the shortfall.

Prison Service Uniforms

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total number of items and the value of the prison service uniforms for which contracts to purchase were placed in the last year for which figures are available; if he will give a breakdown of those figures according to whether the product was (a) made and finished in the United Kingdom from fabric produced in the United Kingdom, (b) finished in the United Kingdom from imported fabric and (c) finished in the United Kingdom but made abroad; if he will give similar information for other major clothing contracts for which he is responsible; and if he will make a statement of his purchasing policy in such matters.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: For the period 1 October 1991 to 30 September 1992, the latest year for which figures are available, the total number of items and the value of contracts to purchase Prison Service uniforms and of other major clothing contracts, where the information required is known, are shown in the table, in the form requested.

Her Majesty's Treasury is responsible for setting public purchasing policy. All Government procurement is based on value for money—that is, quality, fitness for purpose, and delivery against price. The European Community supplies directive requires member states to advertise major public contracts throughout the community. It also requires supplier and product selection to be based on objective criteria intended to prevent a bias towards national interests.

Uniform:

(a) Products made and finished in the United Kingdom from fabric produced in the United Kingdom—16 items purchased to the value of approximately £1·4 million.

(b) Products finished in the United Kingdom from imported fabric—13 items purchased to the value of approximately £860K.

(c) Products finished in the United Kingdom but made abroad—Two items purchased to the value of approximately £172K.

Other major clothing contracts:

(a) Products made and finished in the United Kingdom from fabric produced in the United Kingdom—Three items purchased to the value of approximately £47K.

(b) Products finished in the United Kingdom from imported fabric—Two items purchased to the value of approximately £130K.

(c) Products finished in the United Kingdom but made abroad—Three items purchased to the value of approximately £308K.

Rehabilitation of Offenders Act

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review the working of the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974 with particular reference to the exceptions from the Act.

Mr. Jack: There are no plans to review the working of the Act itself. However, it is intended that the number and range of exceptions to the Act should be re-examined as part of the review of the arrangements for the disclosure of information from criminal records which will be undertaken in advance of the computerisation of the national collection of criminal records.

Police Funding

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will publish the report by Richard Kornicki on the future of police funding; and if he will place a copy of the report in the Library.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Richard Kornicki is one of several Home Office officials who have been working on the future of police funding and are continuing to do so. His review was a working document, which was prepared as advice by officials to Ministers. It would be inappropriate to publish such internal advice.

Prison Escapes

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners escaped (a) from prison and (b) whilst being escorted to and from court, in each of the last five years; and how many of them were recaptured in each case.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information available relates to prisoners who escaped from prison, or while being escorted outside prison, or were recaptured, between 20 June 1988 and 8 November 1992. Information was not collected centrally prior to June 1988.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department who has responsibility for keeping and updating the central list of all escaped prisoners; and how often the list is updated.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The incident management support unit in prison headquarters is responsible, among other matters, for keeping a list of all prisoners who have escaped from Prison Service custody in England and Wales. The list is updated monthly to take account of those who have been recaptured.

Polling Stations

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if grant-maintained schools will supply facilities for polling stations in the same manner as local education authority schools, free of charge to the local authority.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A returning officer at both parliamentary and at local government elections is entitled to use, free of charge, as a polling station a room in a local education authority maintained or assisted school or in a grant-maintained school.

Local Authority Services

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are his conclusions on the responses to proposals to extend competition to a wider range of local authority services set out in the consultation paper "Competing for Quality", published in November 1991, as it will affect the police and fire service.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: As my right hon. and learned Friend, the Secretary of State for the Environment has today announced, the Government have come to the conclusion that, while some amendments to the original proposals are necessary, compulsory competition is the best way of securing greater efficiency and cost savings in the provision of local authority services, while guaranteeing a high standard of services to the local taxpayers. The police and fire services will be playing a part in the process.

The fire service has unique front-line vehicles which carry specialist pumping, hydraulic and mechanical equipment. The maintenance and repair of vehicles and equipment is synchronised in order to ensure operational efficiency. I take the view that they should remain exempt from compulsory competitive tendering for the present, but, in order to encourage wider competition, I intend that all brigades, with the exception of those whose maintenance staff also have firefighting duties should be required to market test vehicle and equipment maintenance over the next three years. The whole of each brigade's vehicle fleet will be included in order to provide a realistic assessment and to identify those contractors best placed to offer the comprehensive range of services required. I intend to discuss with the fire authorities how this can best be taken forward to ensure that operational efficiency is maintained and in 12 months I intend to announce targets in this area.

The support services for the fire service which are provided by the fire authority will, of course, fall to be considered within the framework of the arrangements for construction-related and corporate services set out by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

We have consulted widely within the police service and local authority associations about the extension of compulsory competitive tendering to police vehicle maintenance and the cleaning of police buildings. We have received a number of constructive replies outlining concerns over security and quality of service.

I have taken these concerns seriously. I wish to ensure the widest possible application of compulsory competitive tendering that is consistent with operational efficiency and security requirements. An order will be made under the Local Government Act 1988 extending the application of compulsory competitive tendering to 40 per cent. of the annual value of police vehicle maintenance and repair. A period of three years will be allowed to evaluate the effects of this provision, after which I shall decide on further progress. An order will also be made extending compulsory competitive tendering to 90 per cent. of the annual value of cleaning police buildings. I anticipate that the first tenders will be sought in 1994-95.

I also intend to extend compulsory competive tendering to corporate and construction-related police support services. I intend to engage in further consultation with the Association of Chief Police Officers, the Chief and Assistant Chief Fire Officers Association and the local authority associations on the detailed implementation of these proposals and the introduction of a new accounting framework.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland will be introducing similar provisions for maintenance and repair of fire service vehicles, for maintenance of police vehicles and for cleaning of police buildings in Scotland. He will also consult on extension of compulsory competitive tendering to corporate and construction-related support services and on a new accounting framework.

Prison Catering

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 26 October, Official Report, column 453, if he will list the budgets under which the prison catering contracts were let and administered together with the value of each contract.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 6 November 1992]: The budgets under which the prison catering contracts were let and administered are as follows:—

E(1)—Directorate of Inmate Administration running costs.
F(1)—Directorate of Inmate Programmes running costs.
G(1)—Direcorate of Custody running costs.

The value of individual contracts is regarded as commercial in confidence. Prison catering contracts were awarded in the range from £268,856·00 to £404,988·00.

Crime

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a table showing (a) the number of recorded crimes and (b) the number of crimes committed by category for England and Wales and for each police force area in each 12-month period from June 1988.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 2 November 1992]: The information is available for recorded crimes only and is contained in the following tables.

Figures are not available for crimes committed in these periods, but estimates for England and Wales covering the calendar year 1991 are provided in the British crime survey. First results of the British crime survey are published in "Home Office Research Findings No. 2", which is available in the Library.

Muslim Priests

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Muslim priests normally resident in Pakistan but visiting the United Kingdom on a visitor's visa, have applied during the past year, while in the United Kingdom, for rights of residence in order to be employed as a priest in the United Kingdom; how many such applications were granted (a) immediately, (b) after appeal and (c) on being reviewed outside the immigration rules; and how many such applicants were told to return to Pakistan.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 2 November 1992]: People wishing to work in the United Kingdom as ministers of religion are normally required to obtain entry clearance before coming here. Our records show that in 1991, five citizens of Pakistan who were here as visitors were granted extensions of stay as ministers of religion outside the immigration rules. The other information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Unused land

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to end all schemes whereby farm owners may receive grants in respect of unused land.

Mr. Curry: Ministry grants are paid only on land which is appropriately managed to meet agricultural or environmental objectives. We have no plans to end such schemes.

Ozone Depletion

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how his departmental Green Minister has promoted protection of the ozone layer with specific policy measures; which possible measures have been considered and rejected; and on what grounds.

Mr. Curry: The policy of the Department is not to purchase new materials that are known to be harmful to the ozone layer as set out in the Montreal protocol and its revisions. Where existing equipment containing substances harmful to the ozone layer is to be renewed or subject to major maintenance it will be replaced by equipment which is understood to be ozone friendly. The Department considered but rejected replacing all sound equipment containing materials harmful to the ozone layer because on balance there was seen to be no significant environmental advantage in doing this before the end of its natural life span.

Live Horses (Exports)

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement setting out the progress that has been made in developing policy to prevent the export of live horses for consumption as food.

Mr. Soames: European Community directive 91/628 establishes welfare standards for the transport of animals in the Community from 1 January 1993. The directive provides that national rules may remain applicable for horses and our national arrangements will continue to apply. The Council has agreed to return to this issue at a later stage with a view to setting additional welfare safeguards for all transport of horses in the Community.

Quarantine

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those United Kingdom airports where the administration of animal quarantine regulations are not the responsibility of a principal local authority in whose area part or all of the airport is located.

Mr. Soames: Heathrow airport is the only airport in Great Britain where the responsibility for enforcement of animal import regulations at the airport is not vested in the local authority in which the airport is situated. This is provided for under section 50 of the Animal Health Act 1981, which lays down that the common council of the City of London shall be the local authority for the City of London and for the whole of Greater London for the purposes of the provisions of the Act relating to imported animals, and the Designation of Local Authority (Heathrow Airport—London) Order 1976—SI 1976 No. 2101—which makes the City of London the responsible local authority in respect of that part of Heathrow airport which lies within the county of Surrey.

Enforcement of animal import controls at Northern Ireland airports is the responsibility of the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland.

Mink

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he intends to publish the responses received by his Department on the Review of the Mink (Keeping) Order 1987.

Mr. Gummer: Responses to the consultation exercise will be made available from the Ministry's main library when a decision has been taken on the arrangements which are to apply in future. This decision will be taken shortly.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of (a) British and (b) other EC national hauliers and handlers prosecuted in each year since 1985 for breaking welfare standards whilst transporting livestock.

Mr. Gummer: Information is not collected in the format requested. Since 1988 the number of prosecutions undertaken by local authorities has been laid before the House, in the return of expenditure and proceedings taken under the Animal Health Act 1981. Information on prosecutions in other member states is not available.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of inspections carried out by Ministry verterinary staff specifically to assess welfare standards in each year since 1985.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 11 June 1992, Official Report, column 273.

WALES

Household Statistics

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total number of households in Wales at present; and if he will publish an estimated figure for the number of households in the year 2011.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The total number of households in Wales in 1991 according to the 1989 based household projections is 1,095,000; the figure for 2011 from the same source is 1,237,000.

Housing

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will set an annual target figure for the development of new-build affordable homes in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: We have no plans to do so.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will make a statement on the role of inter-authority co-operation within the context of his Department's local government reform package for Wales;

(2) if he will outline how the current strategic planning functions carried out by county councils will be fulfilled by the new unitary authorities.

Mr. David Hunt: These matters will be dealt with in the White Paper that I will be publishing in due course.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consideration has been given by his Department to the effect of local government reform in Wales upon applications from local authorities for planning consent for their own projects.

Mr. David Hunt: Under the present law a local planning authority may grant itself planning permission to develop its own land within its area. Under the new structure I expect the new councils, as local planning authorities, to have the same powers.

Minerals

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received stating objections to some or all of the guidelines included in planning policy guidance note 3 on mineral extraction.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: No comprehensive record exists, but in response to a monitoring exercise which the Government undertook last March, four organisations in Wales wrote calling for revision of minerals planning policy guidance note 3. My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment announced on 15 July the Government's intention to bring forward for public consultation draft revised planning guidelines on coal extraction generally.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action is currently undertaken by his Department to apply the polluter pays principle to the mineral sector in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: In determining those minerals planning applications and appeals that come before my right hon. Friend and his inspectors, consideration is given to the need to achieve acceptable environmental standards through the imposition of appropriate conditions designed to control the working of the site and its restoration to an acceptable after-use. Certain mineral sector processes in Wales are also subject to pollution control by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution under provisions of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. The cost of meeting acceptable environmental standards falls on the industry in line with the polluter pays principle.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what level of resources has been granted by his Department to mineral planning authorities in Wales in each year of the last 10 years; and what plans he has to increase the level of resources.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Mineral planning is one of the services for which county councils in Wales are responsible. Resource requirements for mineral planning are taken into account in setting standard spending assessments for county councils as part of the annual local government settlement. Proposals for the 1993-94 local government revenue settlement will be announced in due course.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what account has been taken by his Department of the implications of local government reform in Wales upon (a) strategic mineral planning policies (b) the review and upgrading of old minerals permissions and (c) the resourcing of such a review and upgrading.

Mr. David Hunt: Matters relating to minerals planning have been considered by the planning and economic development sub-group established under the auspices of the Welsh Consultative Council on Local Government. I am now considering the reports submitted by that and other sub-groups.

Sustainable Development

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will publish his Department's definition of sustainable development; and if he will make a statement on the application of this concept to the work of his Department;

(2) if he will amend the planning policy guidance notes produced by his Department so as to include references on the importance of an environmentally sustainable approach to the development of the Welsh coastline;

(3) if he will issue guidelines to planning authorities in Wales on the application of environmental sustainability within the planning process.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Brundtland commission, in its report "Our Common Future" published 1987 stated:

> "Humanity has the opportunity to make development sustainable—to ensure that it meets the needs of the present without compromising the ability of future generations to meet their own needs".

In their environment White Papers, starting with "This Common Inheritance", the Government have made clear their intention to work towards ensuring that development and growth are sustainable. The concept of sustainable development is a global one, and it is for the Government to develop policies consistent with that concept, which can be reflected in local decisions. The planning system, and the preparation of development plans in particular, can play an important part in ensuring that development as a whole is sustainable. The sum total of decisions in the planning field, as elsewhere, should not deny future generations the best of today's environment. The need to reflect the principle of sustainable development lies behind the revision of the range of planning policy guidance notes, currently well under way.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has made to the chairmen of the Welsh Development Agency and the Development Board for Rural Wales to encourage them to integrate their statutory objectives in the interest of formulating a sustainable development plan for the coastal areas of Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: There is regular liaison between the two agencies on rural development matters as on all matters of common interest and each agency is represented on the board of the other.

Air Quality

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what efforts are currently undertaken by his Department to monitor air quality on a continuous basis around opencast coal mining sites; which sites have been selected for such air monitoring; and if he will make it his policy to make such monitoring data available to the general public.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The position on air monitoring around opencast coal-mining sites is described in paragraphs 12 and 13 of the Government's response to the second report of the Welsh Affairs Committee, Session 1990-91 "The Future of Opencast Coalmining in Wales", Cm 1652, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Environment Guide

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many copies of "The Welsh Environment; a Guide to your Rights and Responsibilities" have been (a) produced and (b) distributed by his Department; and if he will list the main outlets for distribution.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: A total of 60,000 copies of "The Welsh Environment: A Guide to your Rights and Responsibilities" were produced for the Welsh Office. To date 59,700 have been distributed, largely through county and district councils, main libraries and citizens advice bureaux in Wales.

Supermarket Development

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the occasions during each of the last five years where coastal sites have been utilised for supermarket development in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is not held centrally.

EC Environment Directive

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list the organisations consulted by his Department on the implementation of the EC directive on the freedom of access to information on the environment;

(2) if he will issue guidelines to local authorities in Wales defining in detail the new procedures to be undertaken in connection with the implementation of the EC directive on freedom of access of information on the environment.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: On 29 October the Department of the Environment published for consultation with local authorities and other organisations in Great Britain, draft regulations and guidance on the implementation of the EC directive on freedom of access of information on the environment. The organisations in Wales that are being consulted are as follows:

Agricultural Advisory Panel for Wales
The All Wales Chief Environmental Health Officers' Panel
Assembly of Welsh Counties
Brecon Beacons National Park
Campaign for the Protection of Rural Wales
Cardiff Bay Development Corporation
Council of Welsh Districts
Country Landowners Association (Wales Regional Office)
Countryside Council for Wales
County and District Councils in Wales
The Development Board for Rural Wales
Farmers Union of Wales
Friends of the Earth Cymru
Land Authority for Wales
National Farmers Union, Wales
North Western and North Wales Sea Fisheries Committee
Pembrokeshire Coast National Park
Prince of Wales Committee
Royal Society for the Protection of Birds, Wales
Snowdonia National Park
South Wales Sea Fisheries Committee
The Associated Law Society in Wales
Wales Tourist Board
Wales Wildlife and Countryside Link
Welsh Association of Community and Town Councils
Welsh Development Agency

Opencast Mining

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will undertake a comprehensive community health study in areas affected by opencast mining developments in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: We have no plans for such a study.

Transport Supplementary Grant

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the amount specifically allocated through the transport supplementary grant for local safety schemes proposed by local authorities in Wales in (a) 1991-92 and (b) 1992-93.

Sir Wyn Roberts: As agreed with local authority associations only projects costing over £5 million can attract transport grant. Authorities finance local safety schemes from unhypothecated resources.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many meetings of the Council of Ministers he has attended during the United Kingdom presidency of the European Council of Ministers.

Mr. David Hunt: Although it is not the practice for territorial Ministers to attend the majority of Council Ministers meetings, the United Kingdom's position at Councils represents the collective view reached following ministerial discussions in which I fully participate. I have also this year had the pleasure of hosting a gathering of Ministers as part of the EC informal Council on Social Affairs which met in Wales in October.

Railways

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the effectiveness of the rail network in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: British Rail constantly reviews the performance of its services in Wales and in particular the quality of the service it provides in accordance with the objectives of the passengers charter.

I am pleased to see the latest expansion of services on the Maesteg to Cardiff line supported by Mid Glamorgan county council with the benefit of supplementary credit approvals from the Department.

Car Sharing

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what study he has made of the benefits to the environment in Wales that could arise from the introduction of incentives to establish car sharing schemes in (a) urban areas (b) rural areas.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I have made no such study, but the Government introduced substantial changes to insurance regulations several years ago to encourage car sharing.

Hotel and Catering Industry

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the total numbers of (a) hotels, (b) guest houses and (c) catering establishments which have closed down in Wales during each of the last five years.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This information is not available centrally.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for each training and enterprise council the number of training weeks contracted for under employment training (a) in 1991-92 and (b) in 1992-93; and what was the percentage difference between those years in each TEC.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information requested is set out in the table.

Voluntary Organisations

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy towards the voluntary sector in the social services.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Government believe that local authorities should secure a mixture of social care provision by statutory, voluntary and private organisations, in order to increase the available range of options and to provide wider consumer choice.

Social services departments in Wales, as the lead agencies in social care planning, are expected to involve fully the voluntary sector as partners in the process. Specific grant schemes, unique to Wales, have been introduced to foster and develop the voluntary sector contribution.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidance he gives to county and district authorities to assist voluntary organisations.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: It is for local authorities to decide which voluntary organisations they wish to assist and to what extent. It is not for central Government to tell authorities how they should manage their relationships with the voluntary sector, although my right hon. Friend and I do encourage close working relations between the two.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the amount of financial support he gives in (a) Clwyd and (b) Wales to voluntary organisations.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The latest figures available indicate that grants paid directly by the Welsh Office to voluntary organisations in Wales totalled £8·8 million in 1990-91. The figure excludes indirect grants paid to housing associations—£131·4 million—and those paid through intermediaries, for example, local or health authorities, under such schemes as the urban programme—£3·1 million.

Figures for Clwyd are not readily available.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what initiatives he will take to encourage partnerships between voluntary organisations and local authorities in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: My right hon. Friend and I will continue, through the various grant scheme mechanisms operated by the Department, to encourage local authorities to examine the scope for involving voluntary organisations widely in the planning and delivery of their services.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those voluntary organisations he has met in 1991 and 1992.

Mr. David Hunt: The information requested is not readily available. I will write to the hon. Gentleman and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the amount of financial support given to voluntary organisations in each of (a) the counties and (b) the districts in Wales; and giving a per capita figure.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is not held by the Department. The hon. Gentleman would need to write to all voluntary organisations in Wales if he wishes to know the amount of financial support they receive and the geographical distribution of their expenditure.

Health Authority Targets

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for each health authority in Wales the specific waiting list and performance targets and how each health authority has performed against those targets at (a) 31 March, (b) 30 June and (c) 31 August.

Mr. Gwilym Jones [holding answer 9 November 1992]: Information on waiting times is collected on a quarterly basis; the latest available figures are for 30 June 1992.

"Agenda for Action" targets are set for the year end. Health authorities are committed to achieving these targets.

Performance against both "Agenda for Action" and patients charter targets for March and June is given in the tables.

All authorities are addressing as a matter of priority, the issue of out-patient waiting times, for it is widely recognised that performance here is currently furthest away from target.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he intends to take against health authorities who do not meet "Agenda for Action" targets on waiting lists and performance.

Mr. Gwilym Jones [holding answer 9 November 1992]: All health authorities are committed to achieving patients charter guarantees by the end of the financial year and are collectively on course to achieve the "Agenda for Action" target that by the end of this financial year no more than 15 per cent. of in-patients and day cases will have to wait over one year for non-urgent treatment.

Performance against targets is monitored very closely and has been discussed in great detail at the recent round of annual review meetings.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Coal

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish a table showing the predicted profits available from the sale of coal reserves known to exist in the 31 pits he announced would close against the loss of income tax, national insurance and indirect tax payments from coal miners made redundant, on the assumption of the maximum calculated length of operation of each pit to technical exhaustion.

Mr. Eggar: We do not have the information requested on the predicted profits from the sale of coal reserves.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the meetings in September and October between his Department and (a) representatives of the Colombian Government and (b) Carbocol, the Colombian state coal company; and if he will make a statement;

Mr. Madden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) on what dates he, his ministerial colleagues, or his officials, met Ministers or officials, representing the Government of Colombia, to discuss the sale and supply of Colombian coal to the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when the intergovernmental committee between Her Majesty's Government and Colombia was established; how many meetings, to date, of the committee have taken place; when the next meeting is scheduled; and what matters are due to be discussed.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 29 October 1992]: I refer the hon. Gentlemen to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on Monday 2 November, Official Report, column 32. The next meeting of the trade facilitation group is expected to be in Colombia in February. There have been no intergovernmental meetings to discuss the sale and supply of Colombian coal to the United Kingdom. The Minister for Trade met the Colombian Foreign Trade Minister on 30 September to discuss bilateral trade issues. No meetings took place with Carbocol.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will set out his current timetable for the privatisation of British Coal.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 2 November 1992]: Decisions have yet to be taken on the timing of privatisation. Decisions on the timetable will need to take account of the coal review which my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has announced.

Dr. Hampson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many civil servants are involved in conducting his review into the coal industry; and if he will list for each of them their grade and previous responsibility within his Department or other Government Departments.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 9 November 1992]: The Department's coal review team is headed by Peter Loughead, a grade 3 civil servant, who previously worked on financial services in the DTI and then in Her Majesty's Treasury. It comprises in addition one grade 5, three grade 7s, one higher executive officer (Development), two higher executive officers and two executive officers. They have had a range of previous responsibilities within the Department of Trade and Industry. There are, in addition, seven clerical and secretarial staff. It is likely that further people will join the review team in due course.

Plutonium and Uranium

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the current cost for the storage of separated plutonium at (a) Sellafield and (b) Dounreay; and what is the expected future cost for storage of plutonium separated from irradiated nuclear fuel already contracted to each respective reprocessing plant.

Mr. Eggar: This is a commercial matter for the owners of the sites in question and their customers as owners of the separated plutonium.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the cost to date incurred by the requirement to store depleted uranium at (a) Sellafield and (b) Chapelcross nuclear facilities, arising from the reprocessing of spent nuclear fuel.

Mr. Eggar: Uranium recovered from reprocessing by British Nuclear Fuels plc is stored on behalf of its customers as owners of the material until they decide to recycle it as new reactor fuel. The cost of storage is a commercial matter for the parties involved. I understand that to date some 15,000 tonnes of uranium arising from reprocessing have been recycled in the United Kingdom as reactor fuel to generate electricity.

EC Energy Programmes

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the budgetary allocations for 1993 to the European Community energy programmes (a) Save, (b) Altener, (c) Thermie and (d) Euratom.

Mr. Eggar: Details of the Commission's spending proposals for 1993 are given in its preliminary draft budget —COM(92)140-EN—published on 15 June 1992. Copies of this document have been deposited in the Library of the House. It should be noted that Euratom is a treaty and not a single programme, as the other three are. The Government's contribution to these programmes is not separately identifiable as it forms part of the United Kingdom's general contribution to the European Community budget.

Public Record Office

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many papers his Department has currently withdrawn from the Public Record Office; if he will list their titles; and when he estimates that they will be returned.

Mr. Eggar: Government Departments have a statutory right under the Public Records Acts to retrieve records temporarily from the Public Record Office for their own administrative use. The Department of Trade and Industry currently has 55 records out on loan and these are listed. Records are returned as soon as departmental action has been completed.

Plutonium Shipments

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will estimate in tonnes the amount of plutonium to be shipped annually between Japan and the thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield between 1992 and the year 2000.

Mr. Eggar: This is a commercial matter between British Nuclear Fuels plc and its customers.

Auditing

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many auditing firms are registered with each of the recognised supervisory bodies.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The number of auditing firms—including sole practitioners—registered as eligible for appointment as company auditor under the rules of each of the recognised supervisory bodies on 27 October is shown in the table.

Supervisory body	Number of registered firms
Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales	9,225
Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland	730
Institute of Chartered Accountants of Ireland	344
Chartered Association of Certified Accountants	5,859
Association of Authorised Public Accountants	505

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the instances of audit failures which he has referred to the Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: My Department routinely refers to the Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales complaints received, and reports from statutory investigations, on accounts that have been audited by auditors registered eligible for appointment as company auditors under the rules of the institute. Since the inception of the new regulatory regime for auditors under part II of the Companies Act 1989 on 1 October 1991, some 60 such cases have been referred. The most comon type of referral involved infringements of the accounting requirements of the Companies Act 1985 by small private companies. Most other complaints involved auditors' non-compliance with the auditing standard "The Audit Report" and auditors' provision of a special report that a company is entitled to the reporting exemptions available to small or medium-sized companies when the company was not in fact so entitled.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will establish a body similar to the Dearing committee to investigate the setting of auditing standards in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: No.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the names of auditing firms who have been criticised in his Department's reports relating to banks and insurance companies published since 1979.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Since 1979 there have been four published reports of investigations under the Companies

Act into the affairs of companies connected with banking and insurance which have included criticism of auditors as follows:

Company	Auditor
Ashbourne Investments Ltd.	Wright Stevens and Lloyd
Ramor Investments Ltd.	Price Waterhouse
Minet Holdings plc WMD Underwriting Agencies Ltd.	Black Geoghegan and Till Josolyne Layton-Bennett and Co. Arthur Young McClelland Moores and Co.
Alexander Howden Holdings plc	de Paula Turner Laker and Co. Peat Marwick Mitchell and Co. Josolyne Layton-Bennett and Co. Arthur Young McClelland Moores and Co.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will introduce proposals to prevent auditors of insurance companies from recruiting company directors.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I see no reason to do so. Ethical guidance issued by the professional accountancy bodies states that no one should take part in the audit of a company if he has, during the period on which the report is to be made or at any time in the two years prior to the first day of that period, been an officer—other than an auditor—or employee of that company. Under part II of the Companies Act 1989, recognised supervisory bodies are required to have adequate rules and practices as to professional integrity and independence.

Directors' Reports

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will bring forward proposals under which the directors of a public limited company would be required to state in the directors' report the number of shares bought and sold by them during a year.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: No. The Companies Act requires disclosure in either the directors' report of the notes to the accounts of directors' interests in shares at the beginning and end of the financial year. It also requires the company to keep a register of directors' interests in the company's shares which is open for inspection to shareholders and —for a fee—the public; copies may be obtained for a fee.

Astra plc

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on which date inspectors were appointed to inquire into the affairs of Astra plc; which matters were referred for the examination of the inspectors at the outset; which matters were subsequently referred to them; and when he expects to receive their report.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I refer to the answer which my predecessor gave to the hon. Member on 19 November 1991, Official Report, column 118. The inspectors are now in the final stages of their investigation, but I cannot say when it will be completed.

Environmental Technology Innovation Scheme

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many projects and total sums have been committed in the current year so far under his Department's environmental technology innovation scheme nationally and in each region; and if he will provide information on a similar basis for the Euroenviron programme of the EC.

Mr. Eggar: The following commitments have been made under the schemes during 1992:

Environmental technology innovation scheme—jointly managed by DTI and DOE.

Region	Number	Sums Committed £
(a) DTI Approved Projects
West midlands	4	818,875
South-east	2	388,450
	6	1,207,325
(b) DOE Approved Projects
North-west	5	469,270
Yorkshire and Humberside	1	202,789
East midlands	1	80,000
South-east	3	553,374
East	2	303,450

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Clelland: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the total revenue expenditure in each of the English regions by his Department in the years 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Sainsbury: Revenue expenditure by region on the enterprise initiative: consultancy assistance is given in the table.

Enterprise initiative: consultancy assistance

Region	Expenditure 1990-91 £'000s	Expenditure 1991-92 £'000s
Scotland	3,440	5,070
Wales	2,644	3,591
North East	2,505	3,536
Yorkshire and Humberside	5,150	6,888
East Midlands	2,940	4,246
East	2,750	3,639
South East	9,102	13,441
South West	3,420	4,476
West Midlands	5,500	7,886

Region	Expenditure 1990-91 £000s	Expenditure 1991-92 £000s
North West	7,524	8,247

Regional enterprise grants

Information on regional enterprise grants—innovation grants—by region is regularly published in the Industrial Development Act (1982) annual report, copies of which are available in the House of Commons Library.

The figures for other revenue expenditure are either not broken down regionally, or could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Orimulsion

Mr. Oakes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many tonnes of orimulsion have been imported into the United Kingdom in 1990, 1991 and to date in 1992.

Mr. Eggar: Imports of orimulsion in 1990, 1991 and 1992 to date were:

	Thousand tonnes
1990	156
1991	465
[1]1992	1,039

[1] January to October.

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he will meet a delegation of creditors, depositors and ex-employees of BCCI.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I have no plans to do so. Creditors and ex-employees met the previous Secretary of State and have since had several meetings with officials in my Department.

Liquidators

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what guidelines he proposes to introduce as a result of representations he has received concerning the costs of liquidators.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: There are no such proposals. The remuneration of liquidators is a matter for the creditors whose money is at stake. Where there is a dispute as to the sums claimed recourse may be had to the courts.

Gas-fired Power Stations

Mr. Hardy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the licences which have been granted for the establishment of gas-fired power stations since 1987 and the number of applications for such licences which have not yet been determined.

Mr. Eggar: The following is the information requested.

Gas-fired generating stations granted permission prior to section 36 of the Electricity Act 1989 coming into effect

Station	Location	Proposer	Capacity
Commissioned
Killingholme (1st unit)	South Humberside	PowerGen plc	450MW

There are 12 applications made under section 36 of the Electricity Act 1989 for gas-fired generating stations with a capacity greater than 50 MW which have not yet been determined.

Power stations with a capacity of 50 MW or less are dealt with under the Town and Country Planning Acts and my Department does not have information on such stations.

Energy Costs

Mr. Salmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what account is taken of the offset against oil taxation of the cost to the consortium of offshore transportation of gas from off Aberdeen, through the central area transmission system, in Government comparisons of the relative costs of gas and coal-fired electricity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: As I announced on 26 October, my Department's review of the prospects for the 21 pits proposed for closure by British Coal, but not subject to the current statutory consultation, will consider the consequences of the switch to gas in power generation and the relative costs of gas and coal-fired generation. All relevant elements contributing to these costs will be taken into account.

Atomic Energy Authority

Mr. Milligan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority has responded to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report on the service provided by the AEA; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I have today placed in the Library of the House the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority's initial response to the report by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission (MMC) which was published in May 1992.

I am grateful to the commission for the comprehensive review they carried out. The commission recognised that the AEA is an organisation undergoing fundamental change, that it could continue to make efficiency and quality improvements and could generate higher net revenue. The Commission made 58 recommendations for improving the AEA's performance. It was none the less impressed by the expertise, enthusiasm and dedication of the AEA's staff and recognised the substantial progress they have already made with a radical change in culture. I endorse the commission's recognition of the progress made so far.

I also welcome the AEA's positive response to the commission's report. The AEA has accepted all but one of the commission's recommendations. It has accepted much of the spirit of the remaining recommendation (51) on inter-business charging, and will review the position after a year. The AEA's response clearly demonstrates its determination to achieve further improvements in its management practices and I am pleased that many of the commission's recommendations have already been implemented.

The commission made a number of recommendations to the Government. In response to recommendation 2, we will consider with the AEA the setting of efficiency and quality of service performance targets for the AEA. We will take recommendations 3, board bonus scheme, 9, return on capital employed target, and 33, restructuring, into account at the appropriate time.

We will continue to monitor the AEA's progress in implementing the recommendations and I will report progress to the House in due course.

EC Partnerships Directive

Mr. Butler: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress has been made in implementing the EC partnerships directive, 90/605/EEC.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I have today published a consultative document and draft regulations on the implementation of this EC directive requiring the preparation and publication of accounts for some partnerships between limited companies.

The directive will not affect the majority of partnerships in the United Kingdom which are formed between people rather than companies. It applies only where all the partners—or general partners for limited partnerships—are limited companies.

The consultative document explains that the majority of companies that form partnerships will already cover them in their own annual accounts. Where this is not done, the companies concerned must publish the partnership accounts with their own. If all the partner companies are abroad then, in certain circumstances, the partnership must make its accounts available on demand at its main office.

The draft regulations also provide that companies which are members of partnerships and unlimited companies covered by this directive must disclose information about them and that such unlimited companies must publish their accounts.

A copy of the consultative document and the draft regulations has been placed in the Library of the House. Comments should be made to my Department by 22 January 1993.

Pit Closures

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has had about pit closures from the general secretary of the Trades Union Congress; what reply he is sending; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 29 October 1992]: My right hon. Friend has received and replied to two letters from the general secretary of the Trades Union Congress on this matter. It is not his usual practice to make public the content of such replies.

EC Funding

Mr. Milburn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what percentage of the United Kingdom's working population live in areas which currently qualify for (a) assisted areas funding and (b) EC regional development funding.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 2 November 1992]: The assisted areas currently cover approximately 32·6 per cent. of the United Kingdom's working population.

Working population figures eligible for EC regional development funding are not available. This is because reliable working population figures are only available at travel-to-work area (TTWA) level and many eligible areas are not complete TTWAs. The total population covered, however, is some 40 per cent. of the United Kingdom population.

EC Structural Fund

Mr. Milburn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to receive the European Commission's proposals for the review of Community structural fund regulations.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 2 November 1992]: The Commission is expected to table its proposals after the Edinburgh European Council which is due to decide on the future size of the funds.

Fact-finding Visits

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list for the last 12 months, the fact-finding visits made by (a) the chief executive of the Export Credits Guarantee Department, (b) the head of division of the business task force 1, (c) the Inspector of Companies, (d) the head of the competition policy division, (g) the head of the manufacturing technology division and (h) the head of the telecommunications and posts division; what were the findings in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Senior officials in my Department, including those listed, undertake a wide range of visits and other meetings in the United Kingdom and overseas in the course of their work. It would be inappropriate to provide details of all such visits, some of which are commercially confidential.

Following the reorganisation of my Department, the business task force 1 has been disbanded and its work reallocated and responsibility for the financial services division has been transferred to my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

ENVIRONMENT

Rents

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he received from the Housing Corporation a report entitled "Rents and Affordability"; and if he will make a copy available in the Library.

Mr. Baldry: We received a paper on this topic from the Housing Corporation in early October. It proposes to publish its work shortly. I will then arrange for a copy to be placed in the House of Commons Library.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what studies he has made of the difference between rents charged by local authorities and housing associations.

Mr. Baldry: A table comparing local authority rents with private sector rents, including those of housing associations, can be found in the Department's annual report 1992, page 93.

The Department collects information on local authority rents and housing association rents regularly.

Information on assured housing association rents is contained in the National Federation of Housing Association's continuous recording (core) quarterly bulletins. Information on registered housing association rents is collected by rent officers and published by the Department of the Environment on a quarterly basis in a series of statistical bulletins.

Data on local authority rents are collected annually. Average weekly local authority rents at April each year appear in table 11.1 of "Housing and Construction Statistics 1981-1991".

Copies of all these publications are available in the House of Commons Library.

Buildings (Fuel Efficiency)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to issue a consultation paper on part L of the Building Regulations (conservation of fuel and power); and what percentage improvement in the fuel efficiency of buildings, especially of dwellings, will be sought thereby.

Mr. Baldry: I hope that it will be possible to issue a consultation paper on part L of the Building Regulations 1991 by the end of next month. The aim with our proposals will be to achieve a 20 per cent. improvement in the energy efficiency of the space and water heating systems in dwellings compared with the current requirements of the regulations.

Rentals

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many new homes for renting have been made available by housing associations in Greater London during the most recent 12-month period for which figures are available.

Mr. Baldry: The Housing Corporation has funded 3,755 new units for rent by housing associations in Greater London, during the period 1 September 1991 to 31 August 1992.

Sellafield

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 27 October, Official Report, column 537, how many representations on the thermal oxide reprocessing plant his Department has received; and how many came from abroad.

Mr. Maclean: My Department has received about 30,000 representations about THORP from members of the public some of which contain petitions; 98 per cent. have come from abroad.

Acid Rain

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest information he has about the extent of acid rain damage to Britain's trees.

Mr. Maclean: Recent studies suggest that tree health can be affected by a variety of stresses such as drought, frost, high winds and pest infection and that exposure to air pollution, including acid rain, can increase the sensitivity of trees to these, as well as exercising a probably modest direct effect. It is not yet possible to quantify the contribution of these various factors, individually or in combination, though the hot dry summers and autumn gales of some recent years will certainly have placed exceptional stresses on British trees.

EC Environment Programmes

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what decisions on the allocation of the 1993 budget for environment programmes have been taken at the Environment Council during his presidency of the Ministerial Environment Council.

Mr. Maclean: None. Environmental allocations are considered at the Budget Council as part of the general budget setting process.

Heathrow Airport

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the financial implications faced by local authorities being called upon to produce environmental impact assessments in connection with the proposed fifth terminal at Heathrow airport; and what financial compensation he proposes to pay to local authorities for this.

Mr. Robin Squire: Under the procedures set out in the Town and Country Planning (Assessment of Environmental Effects) Regulations 1988, it is for an applicant for planning permission to prepare and submit an environmental statement for any project that requires environmental assessment under the regulations. The local planning authority must then send the statement as well as the planning application to the statutory consultees and publicise it, and take the information provided in the statement and in comments made on it into account when determining the planning application. The functions of the authority in relation to planning applications which are accompanied by environmental statements are thus not essentially different from those which they discharge in determining all other planning applications. The expenditure likely to be incurred by authorities in determining planning applications is taken into account in the annual settlement along with other burdens, the potential for savings and, more generally, what the country can afford.

Local Authority Employees

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people were employed by local authorities in each year since 1974.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information for England is listed in the table. Staffing levels of local authorities in Wales and Scotland are a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and for Scotland.

Number of people employed by local authorities at June of each year

Year	Full-Time (000's)	Part-Time (000's)	Total (000's)

Source: Joint Staffing Watch for England

Note: Three major events caused significant losses from the local authority sector during the period covered by this table. The numbers involved are:

(1) Approximately 6,300 full-time equivalents (ftes) due to the abolition of the GLC and the Metropolitan County Councils in 1986.

(2) Around 14,500 ftes due to the change in status of the local authority bus and municipal airport staff in 1986 and 1987.

(3) Around 39,000 ftes when polytechnics and higher education institutions transferred from the public to the personal sector in 1989.

Sulphur Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the reduction in the level of sulphur dioxide emissions in the United Kingdom which will be required in order to stabilise soil acidity levels.

Mr. Maclean: The sensitivity of soils to acid deposition varies greatly in different parts of the United Kingdom as a result of geological and other factors. Under current policies, annual United Kingdom emissions of sulphur dioxide are expected to fall by around 60 per cent. between 1980 and 2005. On present estimates, only about 8 per cent. of the surface area of Great Britain should then be subject to rates of acid deposition which will result in further soil acidification.

The Government are taking part in discussions in the United Nations Economic Commission for Europe which it is hoped will lead to a new international agreement on SO_2 emissions by the end of 1993. However to eliminate soil acidification altogether would necessitate sulphur dioxide reductions of over 95 per cent and parallel action on other pollutants. This is not considered a realistic objective either for the United Kingdom or for the remainder of the UNECE region for the foreseeable future.

Local Government Boundaries

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all the reports published by the Local Government Boundary Commission regarding the boundaries of local authorities within the area of the Wanstead and Woodford parliamentary constituency, including the date by which comments were to be received and the date of publication of final reports.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Local Government Boundary Commission deals with local authority boundaries, not parliamentary boundaries. But the Parliamentary Boundary Commission for England takes account of county and London borough boundaries.

Reports of the Local Government Boundary Commission relating to county and London borough boundaries affecting Wanstead and Woodford are listed in the table.

Name of report	Closing date for comments	Date of final report
Redbridge/ Epping Forest/ Waltham Forest	26 July 1989 and 15 February 1991	12 May 1992
Newham/Redbridge/ Waltham Forest	26 March 1990 and 25 June 1991	29 June 1992

Orimulsion

Mr. Oakes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will require Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution to make public its report into the incident at Ince B power station last autumn arising from the trial burning of orimulsion.

Mr. Maclean: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution is not aware of any incident at Ince B power station last autumn arising from the trial burning of orimulsion.

Leicester

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next intends to visit Leicester.

Mr. Howard: I have no current plans to do so.

Banham Commission

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the budget of the Banham commission on local government.

Mr. Robin Squire: I will write to the hon. Member shortly.

Housing Corporation

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the amount of grant to the Housing Corporation in each year since its establishment; and what plans he has to increase it.

Mr. Baldry: The main element of the Housing Corporation's expenditure is its approved development programme—ADP—which is funded by grant and loans from the Government, as well as the corporation's receipts. Gross capital expenditure on the ADP in England since 1978-79 has been as follows:

	£ million
1978-79	327
1979-80	400
1980-81	508
1981-82	521
1982-83	755
1983-84	734
1984-85	697
1985-86	711
1986-87	715
1987-88	752
1988-89	777
1989-90	935
1990-91	1,063
1991-92	1,586
1992-93	[1]1,770

[1] Estimated outturn

Information about earlier years and figures for the total of grants paid to the Corporation cannot be provided except at disproportionate cost.

The Government's future plans will be announced by the Chancellor in his autumn statement.

Departmental Relocation

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has yet reached a conclusion on the proposed move of his Department to docklands; on what grounds he proposes to take the decision; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I will make an announcement shortly. As I told the House on 2 June, Official Report, column 707, the decision will be taken on the basis of giving value for money to the taxpayer.

Green House Programme

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the future of the Green House programme.

Mr. Baldry: The two-year Green House programme was launched in 1990 by my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning as an important element of the Government's policies to combat global warming through increased energy efficiency. Its aim was to establish a national network of replicable energy efficiency demonstration projects in council housing. All the available resources have been allocated to or earmarked for 155 individual projects in 121 authorities, following a competitive bidding exercise to identify the most cost-effective schemes. The preliminary results are very encouraging. Overall, schemes are expected to deliver carbon dioxide savings of some 50 per cent. over current levels, with a 40 per cent. reduction in energy consumption. In addition to environmental benefits, these improvements are expected to reduce future management and maintenance costs of the houses concerned and bring major benefits to tenants from reduced fuel bills. My Department continues to monitor the performance of key projects and will publish further information in due course. At present about one quarter of authorities' annual expenditure on mainstream repair and improvement of their stock is devoted to energy-related measures.

The Green House programme suggests that, if best practice were followed, authorities could achieve higher output from this investment. The Government have therefore decided to follow up the programme by actively promoting the application of its positive lessons by all housing authorities. From next year, we will expect authorities to take fuller account in their housing investment decisions of the need to improve the energy efficiency of their stock and to reflect this in their annual housing investment programme submissions. To assist them, my Department will be issuing guidance on the lessons of the Programme, and on the steps authorities can take to ensure that energy efficiency is an integral part of their housing strategies.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will establish a staff commission to advise on the staffing issues arising from the reorganisation of local government in the shire counties in England.

Mr. Howard: I have decided to use my powers under section 23 of the Local Government Act 1991 to set up a small staff commission to advise me on the steps necessary to safeguard the interests of staff affected by local government reorganisation in England. I intend to ask the staff commission to advise me in particular on arrangements for staff transfers; on any particular redundancy and compensation arrangements that may be necessary; and on whether there should be arrangements to give staff whose posts are lost in reorganisation prior consideration for jobs in new authorities. I intend that the staff commission should be set up next year, in time to deal with questions relating to the outcome of the first tranche of the local government commission's reviews.

Compulsory Competitive Tendering

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the Government will announce their conclusion on the responses to proposals for a clearer framework for compulsory competitive tendering and to extend competition to local authorities' construction-rated and corporate services set out in the consultation paper, "Competing for Quality: Competition in the Provision of Local Services", published in November 1991.

Mr. Howard: The citizens charter sets out the Government's commitment to improving the quality and accountability of local authority services through the wider application of competition, to the benefit of the local taxpayer and consumer.

The Government received more than 650 responses to the consultation paper. Respondents made many helpful comments and offered constructive criticism. My hon. Friend the Minister of State for Local Government told the House on 20 May, Official Report, column 144, of our intention to bring forward regulations to secure a clearer framework for compulsory competitive tendering. We have consulted local authorities on our detailed proposals and intend to bring forward regulations shortly.

I have considered responses to our proposals to extend competition with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales. We have come to the conclusion that, while some amendment to the original proposals is necessary, a rigorous requirement to seek greater competition is the best way of securing greater efficiency and cost savings in the provision of construction-related services, while guaranteeing a high standard of service to local taxpayers.

We therefore intend to require local authorities to subject to competitive tendering a specific percentage, by cash value, of each of these activities. For construction-related services, we intend that 90 per cent. of work be subject to a competitive requirement, for corporate services the requirement will be broadly in line with proposals made in the consultation paper. It will be for individual local authorities to decide which elements of each service should be market tested in order to achieve this requirement. They will also be free to organise the delivery of these services in the manner most suited to their own needs, and authorities will not be prevented from adopting innovative approaches to service delivery.

We do not intend to introduce a procedure for the separate evaluation of quality for construction-related services, but will allow local authorities to make their own judgments about the trade-off between quality and cost. Nevertheless, we expect authorities to introduce their own procedures to ensure that the evaluation is fair and even-handed, and is seen to be so.

We also intend to make regulations requiring all local authorities to establish an internal accounting framework to identify the true costs of both corporate and construction-related services. This will bring transparency to the cost structure of these services, facilitate the challenging of these costs by internal customers and encourage the development of an internal market, all of which will add to the pressures imposed by competitive tendering.

We intend to require these accounts to be kept from as early a date as possible, but no earlier than April 1994, and to prepare a programme for the early introduction of competitive tendering for construction-related and corporate services. Consideration of the timetable for these changes will take account of preparation time as well as the programme of the local government commission in England and the timetable of changes to local government structure proposed in Scotland and Wales.

The consultation paper also put forward proposals for extending CCT to a number of local authority manual and direct services. My right hon. Friends will be making separate announcements on how these are to be taken forward.

Department of the Environment, Scottish and Welsh Office officials will shortly begin discussions with the local authority associations and representatives of other interested parties on the practical details of the regime I have outlined. I hope that we will be able to work with local government to ensure that efficient, effective competition can lead to a high quality of services for local taxpayers.

Birmingham City Council

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the difference between the spending of Birmingham city council on debt financing and his standard spending assessment for the same component of the council's spending for each of the past three years.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 9 November 1992]: The table shows the spending of Birmingham City Council on debt financing, the standard spending assessment for the same component of the council's spending and the difference between them for 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93.

	1990-91 £ million	1991-92 £ million	1992-93 £ million

SOCIAL SECURITY

Community Care Grants

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of applications for community care grants in the Sheffield area are successful.

Mr. Scott: Such information as is available is in the Library.

Public Record Office

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many papers his Department has currently withdrawn from the Public Record Office; if he will list their titles; and when he estimates that they will be returned.

Miss Widdecombe: Government Departments have a statutory right under the Public Record Acts to retrieve material, temporarily, from the Public Record Office for their own administrative use. The number of items and frequency of such retrievals vary considerably. At 5 November 1992, the Department of Social Security had 17 files out on loan which are listed in the table.

Such material is returned to the Public Record Office as soon as departmental action has been completed.

DSS: Files on loan from Public Record Office, as at 5 November 1992

Departmental Properties

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list, for each local authority area in South Yorkshire, how many residential properties are currently owned by his Department; and if he will list, by location, those residential properties which are empty, giving the type of accommodation available, the length of time each property has been vacant, and its intended future use.

Miss Widdecombe: There is only one property on the Department's estate in the South Yorkshire area which could be described as residential property. This is the Woodhouse resettlement unit in Sheffield and it is fully occupied at the present time.

Disabled People

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to publish a citizens charter for people with disabilities; and if he will specify the standards of service that recipients of disability living allowance should expect.

Mr. Scott: There are no such plans. The citizens charter is about setting standards and improving service for all customers taking account, where appropriate of those with special needs.

The standards of service that recipients of disability living allowance should expect are published in the Benefits Agency business plan and will be included in the disability allowance unit statement of service to be published by the end of January 1993.

Lost Files

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many temporary staff are currently employed by the Benefits Agency to track down lost or missing files of applicants for benefit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency that the information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Bronchitis and Emphysema

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received on the report by the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council on the recognition of bronchitis and emphysema as an industrial injury; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: We have had a number of enquires about publication of the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council's report on chronic bronchitis and emphysema. The report will be published in the normal way by the end of November.

DEFENCE

Ceremonial Uniforms

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total cost of ceremonial uniforms in each of the past five years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The total cost of ceremonial uniforms, including swords and scabbards, in each of the past five years was:

	£
1987-88	936,797
1988-89	1,106,216
1989-90	1,411,311
1990-91	1,286,974
1991-92	[illegible]283,720

Police (Special Escort Group)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the role and function of the special escort group of the Ministry of Defence police; how many personnel are assigned to it; and what is its annual budget.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The special escort group is an element within the MOD police responsible for those escort duties necessary to meet safety and security requirements when moves of sensitive material are made. Its costs are contained within the overall MDP budget. For security reasons it is not our policy to comment on numbers of personnel nor their methods of operation.

Lupina C

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received concerning the incident which took place in September involving the fishing vessel Lupina C and the United States Navy submarine Sturgeon; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A number of letters from hon. Members, fishermen's representatives and interested individuals have been received. The United States navy is conducting a full investigation into this incident. When its findings are available, I will consider whether there is any need for further measures to improve the safety of submarine operations in waters that are used by fishing vessels, in addition to those already discussed with the fishing industry.

Nuclear Tests

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans his Department has to conduct further nuclear tests at Nevada; and for what purposes those tests would be conducted.

Mr. Aitken: United States legislation provides for the United Kingdom to conduct three nuclear tests at the Nevada test site between 1 July 1993 and 30 September 1996. It is not our practice to comment in detail on the purpose of individual tests, but all United Kingdom nuclear tests are designed to ensure the safety and credibility of our nuclear deterrent.

Service Uniforms

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total number of items and the value of the service uniforms for which contracts to purchase were placed in the last year for which figures are available; if he will give a breakdown of those figures according to whether the product was (a) made and finished in the United Kingdom from fabric produced in the United Kingdom, (b) made and finished in the United Kingdom from imported fabric and (c) finished in the United Kingdom but made abroad; and if he will make a statement of his purchasing policy in such matters.

Mr. Aitken: Contracts to the value of £89·9 million have been placed for service uniforms in the past year. These contracts covered some 700 individual items.

It is our policy to seek the best value for money when purchasing uniforms. We therefore pursue open competition and no restrictions are imposed on grounds of nationality or origin of supplies. Because of the large number of contractors and sub-contractors involved, it would not be practicable to maintain records of the origin of the materials used in uniforms.

Amphibious Warfare Vessels

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans his Department has for (a) development of auxiliary amphibious warfare vessels and (b) developing a tactical air-to-surface missile; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: We intend to refurbish the Navy's three older landing ships logistic to enable them to continue in service into the next century. On current plans we expect work on the programme to begin in the summer of 1993.

We are continuing to study a range of options for the eventual replacement of the WE177 free-fall nuclear bomb. No decision has yet been taken.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Citizens Charter

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will provide a breakdown of the costs to date incurred in the promotion and publication of the citizens charter, all subsequent charters and the chartermark award scheme.

Mr. Robert Jackson: The promotion, publication and distribution of the citizens charter White Paper, popular version, ethnic minority versions and audio version for the partially sighted cost £930,000.

The costs of the promotion, publication and distribution of subsequent charters is approximately:

	£
British Rail	250,000
HM Customs & Excise	12,000
Employment Department	630,000
Department For Education	2,000,000
Department of the Environment	300,000
Department of Health	2,000,000
Inland Revenue	12,000
London Underground	110,000
Northern Ireland	417,400
Scottish Office	342,000
Department of Social Security	43,500
Welsh Office	535,000

The Chartermark award scheme 1992 cost £810,000. This includes publication, distribution and advertising costs as well as the cost of the awards ceremony and the separate design competition for schools.

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, how many different languages the citizens charter White Paper CM 1599 is currently available in; and if he will list them.

Mr. Robert Jackson: The citizens charter White Paper (Cm. 1599) was published in English.

The "Guide to the Citizen's Charter", which provides a summary of the policies and initiatives set out in the charter, is available in English, Welsh, Bengali, Gujariti, Hindi, Punjabi, Urdu, Chinese, Vietnamese, Greek and Turkish.

Science and Engineering Research Council

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans the Government have to separate the funding of international projects from the rest of the Science and Engineering Research Council's budget.

Mr. Robert Jackson: The Government have no such plans at present.

The question of the most appropriate way of funding international projects has however featured in a number of contributions to the consultation process on the forthcoming White Paper on Science and Technology which my right hon. Friend has initiated. We shall be considering carefully these and other proposals for change that have been made.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what effect the devaluation of sterling will have on the funding of projects other than CERN by the Science and Engineering Research Council.

Mr. Robert Jackson: The fall in the value of sterling relative to the franc will affect the cost to the SERC of its fixed percentage contributions to the European synchrotron radiation facility (ESRF), and the Institut Laue Langevin (ILL). There will also be minor adjustments to the cost in sterling of SERC's contribution to the European incoherent scatter facility (EISCAT), paid in Swedish krona, and to the Anglo-Australian telescope facility (paid in Australian dollars). SERC's contribution to the European Space Agency's space science programme, which is paid in ecus, will also be affected, although the funding formula here also takes account of relative GDP of member states, adjusted retroactively.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what effect the devaluation of sterling will have on contributions made by the Science and Engineering Research Council to CERN.

Mr. Robert Jackson: Member states' contributions to CERN are based on a formula which takes account of relative GDP. The increased cost to SERC due to the devaluation of sterling relative to the Swiss franc will, over a period of time, be offset to a large degree by this self-correcting formula.

There will be no significant effect in financial year 1992-93 as the bulk of payments due to CERN for this period were made prior to the mid-September devaluation.

There will be an additional cost in financial year 1993-94 but, after that, this will reduce as the relative GDP formula takes effect.

Agencies

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list by grade the numbers of staff and their cost for 1991-92 and the estimated figures for 1992-93 for each executive agency for which he is responsible.

Mr. Waldegrave: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the following agency chief executives: Mr. Mike Devereau, Central Office of Information; Miss Marianne Neville-Rolfe, Civil Service College; Mr. Paul Freeman, Her Majesty's Stationery Office; Dr. George Sorrie, Occupational Health Service and Mr. Michael Geddes, Recruitment and Assessment Services Agency. I have asked them to write to the hon. Member. Copies of their replies will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Miss Marianne Neville-Rolfe to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 9 November 1992

You asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he would list by grade the numbers of staff and their cost for 1991-92 and the estimated figures for 1992-93 for each executive agency for which he is responsible.

I am replying to you in respect of the Civil Service College. The information you have asked for is set out in the attached table.

Letter from Dr. George Sorrie to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 4 November 1992.

I have been asked by the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster to reply to your question about the numbers of staff and their costs in the Civil Service Occupational Health Service Executive Agency.

I attach a table which shows the number of staff by grade as at 30 September 1991 and 1992. We also employ staff from time to time on a fee paid basis.

In 1991-92 staff costs for permanent staff were £2·671 million. A further £0·113 million was spent on staff loaned from other Government departments and on staff overtime and £0·249 million on fee paid sessional staff and agency staff. Business Plan forecasts for the current financial year are £2,990 million, £0·140 million and £0·240 million respectively.

[1] Numbers of staff in post as at 30 September includes part-time staff and staff on short-term contracts.

Letter from Mr. Paul Freeman to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 3 November 1992.

I am responding in respect of HMSO to your Question to the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster about staff numbers and costs, which has been referred to Chief Executives.

I should explain first that HMSO does not follow the traditional financial year of April to March, but operates on a calendar year basis. Total staff costs in 1991 were £63·9 million and the 1992 outturn is expected to be around £67·7 million. Both figures cover permanent, casual and agency staff, and include basic pay, national insurance, superannuation, bonus and overtime, and some redundancy and early retirement costs.

HMSO is also an exception to the standard Civil Service grading arrangements. Apart from my own, all posts were reclassified in 1991 under an analytical job evaluation system based on pay bands. The attached list shows the average numbers employed in each pay band in 1991 and 1992.

Letter from Mr. Mike Devereau to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 4 November 1992.

I am replying to your question about staff numbers and costs.

For 1991-92 our total paybill, excluding accrued early retirement liabilities, was £16·3m. I expect the figure for 1992-93 to be in the region of £15·7m.

The average number of staff employed during 1991-92 was 709 of which 685 were permanent employees and 24 casual. In 1992-93 I expect the average to be in the region of 645 of which 625 would be permanent employees and 20 casual. A breakdown of average staff numbers by grade for 1991-92 and projected average staff numbers for 1992-93 is attached.

Earnings Statistics

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of (a) manual and (b) non-manual workers currently earn less than (i) £147.85, (ii) £197.30 and (iii) £207.13 excluding overtime payments; and what are the proportions separately for men and women.

Mr. McLoughlin: The available information closest to that requested is published in table 24 of part A of the 1992 "New Earnings Survey" report, a copy of which is in the Library.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the average pay of those aged under 18 years as a percentage of earning of those (i) aged 18 to 21 years and (ii) aged 21 years and over, in each year since 1979, in (a) Greater London and (b) Great Britain.

Women Workers

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many women working (a) full-time and (b) part-time are covered by wages councils in London.

Mr. McLoughlin: It is estimated that some two-thirds of all workers covered by the wages councils are women and that about two-thirds of all wages council workers are part-timers. I regret there are no separate estimates for London.

Health and Safety (Local Authorities)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) prohibition notices and (b) improvement notices were issued on local authorities by the Health and Safety Executive in each year since 1974.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested is available only for the period after 1 April 1988; enforcement statistics before that date do not separately identify local authorities. The following table shows the total number of prohibition and improvement notices issued to local authorities by relevant HSE inspectorates for each year since then.

Enforcement notices issued against local authorities[1] by HSE's Factory and Agricultural Inspectorates, 1988-89 to 1990-91

	Type of Notice
Date of Issue[2]	Improvement	Deferred Prohibition	Immediate Prohibition	Total
1988-89	54	1	31	86
1989-90	52	2	20	74
1990-91	89	2	29	120

[1] Offences or breaches of legislation occurring in premises, or arising from activities, controlled by local authorities.
[2] Years commencing 1 April.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was (a) the total number of prosecutions and (b) the average fine against local authorities by the Health and Safety Executive under the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act in each year since 1974.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested is available only for the period after 1 April 1988; enforcement statistics before that date do not separately identify local authorities. The following table shows the number of informations laid against local authorities by relevant HSE inspectorates since then.

Prosecution action[1] taken against local authorities,[2] by HSE's Factory and Agricultural Inspectorates, 1988-89 to 1990-91

Date of Hearing[3]	Number of Informations laid	of which Convictions	Average fine per conviction (£)
1988-89	22	22	594
1989-90	39	31	1,435
1990-91	41	39	953

[1] All action taken under the Health and Safety at Work Act etc. 1974, subordinate regulations and other related legislation.
[2] Offences or breaches of legislation occurring in premises, or arising from activities, controlled by local authorities.
[3] Years commencing 1 April.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was (a) the total number of prosecutions against local authority directors and (b) the average fines under the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974 in each year.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested is available only after 1 April 1988; enforcement statistics before that date do not separately identify local authorities. HSE's factory and agricultural inspectorates enforce health and safety legislation as it applies to local authority premises and activities. Since then there have been no prosecutions of local authority directors.

Local Authority Employees

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were (a) killed and (b) seriously injured in local authority employment in each year since 1974.

Mr. McLoughlin: Occupational injuries to workers[1] occurring in premises owned by, or arising from activities controlled by, local authorities, and reported to HSE's factory and agricultural inspectorates for years between 1988-89 and 1990-91 are provided in the following table. Prior to 1 April 1988 such injuries were not separately identified.

Year[2]	Fatal	Major[3]	Over three day[4]	Total
1988-89	11	2,553	33,689	36,253
1989-90	12	2,539	32,224	34,775
[5]1990-91	12	2,571	30,031	32,614

[1] Injuries to employees and self-employed persons reported under the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations, 1985 (RIDDOR).
[2] Years commencing 1 April.
[3] As defined under RIDDOR.
[4] An injury causing incapacity for normal work for more than three days.
[5] Includes reports made to the HSE's Quarries Inspectorates.

Regional Expenditure

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total revenue expenditure in each of the English regions by her Department in the years 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is not available in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Wages Policy

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what regard is paid to the existence or level of other household earnings in determining government policy on (a) wages council rates and (b) pay agreements negotiated for public employees.

Mr. McLoughlin: Wages councils are independent statutory bodies and Ministers have no power to intervene in their decisions about minimum rates of pay. Pay should reflect individual performance and what is necessary to recruit and retain the right staff, within what can be realistically afforded.

Wages Councils

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many employees from black and ethnic minority communities working within establishments in London are covered by wages councils.

Mr. McLoughlin: I regret that the information is not available.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) establishments and (b) employees were covered by the wages councils in London in (i) 1979, (ii) 1986, (iii) 1989 and (iv) 1991.

Mr. McLoughlin: There are no detailed figures on the number of establishments and employees covered by wages councils in London, but the following table gives broad estimates:

	Number of establishments	Numbers of workers
1979	46,000	326,000
1986	45,000	327,000
1989	56,000	367,000
1991	51,000	317,000

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many checks were carried out by wages councils in London on underpaying in the last year for which figures are available, and what number and proportion were found to be underpaying.

Mr. McLoughlin: The number of checks by all methods carried out in 1991 by the wages inspectorate in its London division was 5,299.

The number of establishments found under paying was 294, 5·5 per cent. of those inspected.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many employees covered by wages councils are the principal source of their household's income.

Mr. McLoughlin: This information is not available.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to her oral answer of 3 November to the hon. Member for Redcar (Ms. Mowlam), Official Report, column 139, if she will give details of the survey resulting in the figure given in her answer for the percentage of wages council workers who are in households with two or more wage earners.

Mr. McLoughlin: The figure referred to by the hon. Member is based on information about the main wages council industries recorded in the April 1991 "Labour Force Survey". This is a sample survey of the members of around 60,000 households in Great Britain.

Crown Indemnity

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when she expects the Health and Safety Commission to consider the review of current procedures and to put its proposals to Ministers concerning the removal of Crown indemnity in respect of infringements of the Health and Safety at Work, etc., Act 1974.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Health and Safety Commission currently plans to consider the review in December and, if appropriate, will make recommendations early in the new year.

Training

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what percentage of the working population were on work-related Government training programmes in each region in each year since 1979;

(2) how many people were on work-related Government training programmes in each year since 1979, in each region.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested is not readily available in the form requested and can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Wages

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list for each jobcentre in the Doncaster area, for the latest date she has available, the number of current accepted vacanies from employers where the wages offered fall below the relevant wages council minimum; and what percentage this is of the total number of vacancies on offer at each jobcentre.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated November 1992:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question about the number of current vacancies accepted by Jobcentres in the Doncaster area where the wages offered fall below the relevant Wages Council minimum and what percentage this is of the total number of vacancies on offer at each Jobcentre. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

There are no vacancies at Doncaster or Thorne Jobcentres which fall below Wages Council minumum rates. Jobcentres have comprehensive instructions giving guidance to staff on the action to be taken when a vacancy covered by a Wages Council Order is notified. If the employer is unwilling to pay the Wages Council minimum then my people are instructed not to accept the vacancy and to refer the case to the Department of Employment Wages Inspectorate.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Accident Hazard Regulations

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what guidelines she intends to issue to local authorities as to the charges they may make to industrial site operators for work done under the Control of Industrial Major Accident Hazard Regulations 1984.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State, has no plans to issue guidelines on the charges local authorities may make. The Control of Industrial Major Accident Hazards Regulations 1984 contain specific details of what local authorities may charge for in preparing off-site emergency plans and how these charges must be calculated. Guidance on these legal requirements is given in the Health and Safety Executive's revised booklet "A Guide to the Control of Industrial Major Accident Hazards Regulations 1984", published by HMSO in 1990, a copy of which is in the Library.

Workfare

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what consideration she has given to the introduction of workfare to help solve the problem of rising unemployment.

Mr. McLoughlin: As my hon. Friend is aware, we have no plans for a compulsory work programme for unemployed people. Our priority remains to help unemployed people back into work through our employment and training programmes.

Public Record Office

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many papers her Department has currently withdrawn from the Public Record Office; if she will list their titles; and when she estimates that they will be returned.

Mr. McLoughlin: Government Departments have a statutory right under the Public Record Acts to retrieve records temporarily from the Public Record Office for their own administrative use. The Employment Department has 39 records out on loan. To list them all would involve disproportionate costs.

Records are returned as soon as departmental action has been completed.

Departmental Properties

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list, for each local authority area in south Yorkshire, how many residential properties are currently owned by her Department; and if she will list, by location, those residential properties which are empty, giving the type of accommodation available, the length of time each property has been vacant, and its intended future use.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department does not own any residential properties in south Yorkshire.

Redundancies

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total number of redundancies in the west midlands area for the last available quarter broken down by sector.

Mr. McLoughlin: Figures are available for the numbers of proposed redundancies notified under the provisions of the Trade Union and Labour Relations (Consolidation) Act 1992 for the quarter to 31 October. The table gives information by standard industrial classification.

Proposed redundancies in the period 1 August 1992 to 31 October 1992

Occupational Ill Health

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what estimate she has made of the annual cost of occupational ill health; and what action she proposes to take to lessen this.

Mr. McLoughlin: Reliable estimates of the annual cost of occupational ill health are not presently available. Health and Safety Executive economists are carrying out research into the cost of occupational ill health and expect to publish the results of this work early next year.

Improving the level of occupational health is a main priority for the Health and Safety Commission and Executive. Details of their current activities and plans for action are set out in the Commission's annual reports and plans of work. These include the preparation of a comprehensive framework of regulations under the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974 covering the main categories of workplace health risks, practical guidance and campaigns, and an extensive programme of research and surveys of the scale and pattern of occupational ill health.

Water Quality

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will introduce legislation to extend the health and safety legislation requiring drinking water and running water for washing to be provided at conveniently accessible places, to apply to all working locations, including domestic houses and flats.

Mr. McLoughlin: We are currently considering the Health and Safety Commission proposals for regulations which implement European Community directive No. 89/654/EEC (the workplace directive). The proposed regulations would extend the current requirements in health and safety legislation on drinking water and running water for washing to all workplaces. However, they apply only to > "any premises or part of premises which are not domestic premises and are made available to any person as a place of work".

Domestic houses and flats are therefore outside the scope of the proposed regulations. They are, however, required to have such facilities under the Building Regulations (England and Wales) which are the responsibility of my right hon. and learned Friend, the Secretary of State for the Environment.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when Mr. E. D. Coote of Linden, Mount Pleasant road, Brixham (NI No. ZL 46 46 75 C) will be notified of the result of his appeal to the Department of Employment, Newcastle, regarding loss of invalidity benefit.

Mr. Scott: I have been asked to reply.

The administration of invalidity benefit is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. As the appeal is a personal and confidential matter, he will reply direct to the hon. Member.

HEALTH

Glaucoma

11. Mr. Leyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what reports she has received about the use of laser treatment for glaucoma; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The use of lasers has revolutionised the treatment of glaucoma and other diseases of the eye. I understand that many patients who would previously have been treated as in-patients are now being successfully treated in out-patient clinics.

Smoking

12. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations she has received regarding danger to health from smoking and passive smoking.

Dr. Mawhinney: The consequences of smoking and passive smoking have been the subject of many representations received in the Department. Most recently the Health Education Authority's publication called "The Smoking Epidemic—A Manifesto for Action" looked at the life expectancy of smokers, passive smoking and the costs to the national health service.

Health Service Expenditure

13. Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the plans for health service expenditure for the current public expenditure planning period.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer will be making his autumn statement to the House on Thursday 12 November.

Departmental Information

14. Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her policy for increasing the amount of information made available to the general public from her Department.

Mr. Sackville: The Department aims to provide the general public with a wide range of information relating to legislation, policy, patients' rights and other health advice. The Department is also playing a full part in the cross-departmental initiative on open government.

Furthermore, the Department is engaged in a number of initiatives to promote greater access to information by national health service patients—including information on performance against patients charter standards, regional health information services and legislation to give patients access to health records held on them. The Department is currently consulting on draft guidance on freedom of speech for national health service employees.

GP Lists

15. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the change in the average number of patients on each general practitioner's list since 1979; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: I am pleased to be able to report that the average number of patients on general medical practitioner lists in England has fallen by 18 per cent., from 2,286 at 1 October 1979 to 1,932 at 1 April 1992.

Standish Hospital, Gloucestershire

16. Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received concerning the effect of the proposed closure of Standish hospital, Gloucestershire on provision of specialist services.

Mr. Sackville: Gloucestershire health authority is currently consulting publicly on this proposal. If the closure is opposed by the local community health council the matter will be referred to Ministers, via the South Western regional health authority, for a full decision.

Tomlinson Report

17. Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of possible job losses as a result of the implementation of the Tomlinson report.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Sir Bernard Tomlinson's recommendations point the way to a better health service for London and Londoners. We are currently consulting widely on them. As part of this, we will take in the views of staff and the implications of change for staff. We will set out a detailed response in the new year.

18. Ms. Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the effect of the implementation of the Tomlinson recommendations on waiting lists in London.

Dr. Mawhinney: The report notes that significant progress has been made in reducing waiting times in London. We will ensure that the proposals arising from the report continue this trend.

20. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received from the people of London concerning the Tomlinson report.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Tomlinson report has only just been published, but my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health welcomes an open debate on the issues it raises. We will listen carefully to the views expressed before setting out our detailed proposals for change in the new year.

Occupational Health

19. Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will take steps to increase the amount of time medical students spend on occupational health issues during their training.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Leicester, South (Mr. Marshall) earlier today.

Cost Improvement Programme

21. Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received about the workings of the cost improvement programme from hospital authorities in England and Wales.

Mr. Sackville: No formal representations have been made. However each year the management executive agrees with an individual region an efficiency target as part of the management process.

London Ambulance Service

22. Mr. Wicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will establish an urgent inquiry into the London ambulance service.

Mr. Sackville: The hon. Member will be aware that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health made a statement to the House on 28 October about the London ambulance service.

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action is being taken to ensure that ambulance response times in London meet the guidelines set out in the citizens charter.

Mr. Sackville: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Health announced to the House on 28 October an urgent external enquiry into the operation of the computer aided dispatch system and the circumstances surrounding its failure on 26 and 27 October. This inquiry will also identify the lessons to be learned for the operation and management of the London ambulance service.

The terms of reference were announced in my right hon. Friend's reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Bromsgrove (Mr. Thomason) on 6 November at columns 445–46.

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate she has made of the number of people in London who have died in the current year as a consequence of ambulance delays.

Mr. Sackville: There has been widespread public concern about the delays in the response and arrival times of emergency ambulances and allegations of people dying as a consequence. Every case of alleged delay is fully investigated by the London ambulance service board.

It is however, difficult to estimate the extent to which delays in the ambulance service may have contributed to the death of seriously ill patients.

Ms. Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received from ISL Consultancy following its visit to the London ambulance service control on standards of organisation; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health announced to the House on 6 November the terms of reference for the independent inquiry into the operation and procurement of the computer aided dispatch (CAD) system for the London ambulance service. She has received a letter from ISL Consultancy which will be directed to the inquiry.

GP Fundholders

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of the population is currently served by a general practitioner fundholder; and how she expects this percentage to change in the future.

Dr. Mawhinney: General practitioner fundholders currently serve 14 per cent. of the population. The figure is expected to rise to around 25 per cent. in April of next year, when the third wave of fundholders comes on stream.

NHS Trusts

Ms. Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to make NHS trusts more accountable to local people; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: National health service trusts are more accountable now than national health service provider units were under health authority management. They are required to hold an annual public meeting, and their business plans and annual reports are available to the public, as are the service contracts they make with health authorities. Each trust's local community health council has rights of access to it.

Mr. Ashby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the names of those people appointed to be chairmen and non-executive directors of the third wave of national health service trusts.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I have placed a list of the chairmen and non-executive directors of third wave trusts which I have announced today in the Library.

NHS trusts have shown their worth. In their first year of operation, first wave trusts treated 8 per cent. more patients than in their previous year as directly managed hospitals. Such a figure clearly demonstrates that we now have a NHS which is better managed and able to treat more patients for the same level of resources. Trusts have made a key contribution to this improvement.

The third wave of trusts cannot come a moment too soon. But if they are to bring the benefits to patients and improvements in services which have become the hallmark of self-governing hospitals, then they must be properly led. The appointment of the right person as chairman is a crucial factor. He or she must also be supported by an imaginative team of non-executive directors able to contribute fresh insights into the running of the trust. The names I have announced today fit the bill. These chairmen and non-executive trust directors will bring a wealth of expertise and experience from outside the NHS which will have a direct impact on improving patient services.

A significantly higher number of women have been appointed to these posts. Forty per cent. of these new appointments are women, compared with 31 per cent. in the first and second waves. This enables us to make progress towards meeting our commitment under Opportunity 2000 to increase the number of women as members of health authorities and trusts to 35 per cent. by 1994.

Care in the Community

25. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what further representations she has had from organisations responsible for providing care in the community.

Mr. Yeo: We regularly receive correspondence from organisations making representations about or seeking clarification of the details of our new community care arrangements.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what monitoring is being carried out by her Department of local arrangements for care in the community; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: Community care implementation has been monitored by the social services inspectorate/regional health authorities at six monthly intervals in September 1991, April 1992 and September 1992. We have recently received a report on the latest round of monitoring.

Dental Services

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement about the availability of dental services within the NHS.

Dr Mawhinney: In general, dental treatment under the national health service is readily available throughout England and Wales. If patients have difficulty in finding a national health service dentist, they will be helped by their family health services authority (FHSA) to obtain treatment. We have urged dentists to think long and hard before taking any steps that would effect their patients or practices.

Domiciliary Care Agencies (Registration)

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will introduce legislation to make the registration of domiciliary care agencies compulsory.

Mr. Yeo: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden) on 22 October at column 371.

GP Cover

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether she will discuss with representatives of family doctors ways of maintaining 24-hour general practitioner cover.

Dr Mawhinney: We have already said that we should be prepared to look constructively with representatives of the medical profession at the scope for developing improved or more flexible arrangements for out-of-hours cover. But we would need to be clearly satisfied that any proposals for change would safeguard and, if possible, improve the services available to patients.

Geopathic Stress

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research her Department is currently carrying out into geopathic stress; and if she will make a statement.

Dr Mawhinney: The term "geopathic stress" is I understand used to refer to the effects of depletion of the ozone layer on flora and fauna. The Department does not undertake any research into such matters which are not associated with human health.

Skin Cancer

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the known incidence of non-melanoma skin cancer for each of the past five years.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is shown in the table (1987 is the latest year for which information is available).

Registrations of newly diagnosed cases of malignant neoplasms of the skin (non-melanoma) ICD 173, England and Wales 1983-1987.*

Medical Records

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to make national health service records available throughout EC member countries for United Kingdom citizens living abroad; and what information she has on how many previously United Kingdom registered patients requested a precis of their medical records whilst living abroad during the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: Medical records are the property of the national health service and are retained in this country for NHS purposes including the possible future care and treatment of the patient. Patients who plan to live abroad may approach their general practitioner to obtain a precis of their medical history or a copy of their medical records to give to any practitioner in the new country of residence.

Information is not collected on requests for medical records from United Kingdom registered patients living abroad.

Secure Places

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to review the need for, and extend the provision of, local authority secure places.

Mr. Yeo: The need to provide additional local authority secure places to implement the new juvenile remand arrangements in the Criminal Justice Act 1991 has been considered by a multi-agency national steering group. We are discussing with local authorities how the additional secure places identified by the group might most effectively be provided.

Benzodiazepines

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money has been provided by her Department in 1992-93 specifically to help people withdraw from benzodiazepines prescribed by general practitioners.

Dr. Mawhinney: None. Specific commitment to action in this area is made in the White Paper "The Health of the Nation". The resulting improvement in the education of primary care teams in the gradual withdrawal of benzodiazepines in chronic users and the promotion of good professional practice will help people overcome this problem.

Maternity Services

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will set up a full review of the maternity services in those areas affected by the Tomlinson proposals on London teaching hospitals;

(2) if she will meet representatives of midwives in London hospitals to reassure them on future numbers of midwife posts following the Tomlinson proposals;

(3) what steps she will take to ensure that those pregnant women who will be directly affected by the Tomlinson proposals for London teaching hospitals will receive locally based maternity care.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Tomlinson report does not recommend a review of maternity services, but as the Government's main aim is to continue to provide high quality services for Londoners we shall ensure that any proposals for change take into account the full range of services. Access to local services will also be one of the considerations we will take into account when assessing proposals.

I have already made it clear that I will be listening carefully to the views of patients and staff before making a response to Tomlinson's recommendations. Accordingly, I will meet the Royal College of Midwives, representing midwives in London, in the near future.

Suicides (Unemployed)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) men and (b) women aged (i) 18 years and over and (ii) 45 to 65 years were recorded in each standard region and the whole United Kingdom as suicides or attempted suicides in each year since 1979; and what number and proportion in each case were known to be unemployed.

Mr. Sackville: The exact information requested is not available. A table derived from death registrations shows the number of deaths with a verdict of suicide ICD E950-E959 over the period requested has been placed in the Library.

Hospital Closures

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospitals have closed since 1979.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Ambulance Service, Coventry

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give details of the response time records for emergencies attended by the ambulance service in Coventry for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not held centrally. I refer the hon. Member to the chairman of West Midlands regional health authority for details.

Expenditure

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of public spending on health was in (a) 1980 and (b) 1989-90.

Mr. Sackville: The percentage of total public expenditure spent on health in the United Kingdom was 12·1 per cent. in 1979-80 and 13·8 per cent. in 1989-90. The latest available figure, for 1991-92, is 14·4 per cent.

Hospital Beds

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospital beds were available to the national health service in (a) 1979 and (b) 1989.

Mr. Sackville: In 1989 there were 283,000 beds in national health service hospitals in England, compared with 362,000 beds in 1979. Over the same period the number of hospital in-patient cases treated annually rose from 5·4 million to 6·6 million.

Community Grant

Mr. Peter Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, what response she proposes to make to representations she has received on her proposals for a special transitional grant for community care.

Mr. Yeo: We have been consulting the local authority associations and others on the detail of the announcements which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State made on 2 October. In the light of the comments made we think it right to adjust the requirement that in 1993-94 75 per cent. of the special transitional grant be spent in the independent sector. The proportion will now be set at 85 per cent. of the transfer element of the grant. This change recognises that the strength of the independent sector varies across the country whilst ensuring that the overwhelming majority of the funds transferred from the Department of Social Security continue to be spent on independent sector care.

This announcement demonstrates the Government's firm and fair approach in discussing the implemention and funding of community care with the local authority associations.

Diagnostic Assessment

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people in each health region have been funded to receive diagnostic assessment outside their own health authority area.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not collected centrally.

Hepatitis B

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many new cases of hepatitis B were reported to public health laboratories in England in each year since 1980.

Mr. Sackville: The total number of laboratory reports of acute hepatitis B infection to the public health laboratory service's communicable disease surveillance centre for England and Wales (by the year in which the specimen was taken) is as follows:

Date	Number
1980	1,007
1981	1,197
1982	1,237
1983	1,274

Date	Number
1984	1,937
1985	1,771
1986	1,312
1987	774
1988	636
1989	590
1990	564
[1]1991	520

1

The availability of immunisation, together with behavioural changes in certain "at risk" groups, are believed to have contributed to this decrease.

Children Act 1989

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money has been given to each local social services authority to help with the implementation of the Children Act 1989.

Mr. Yeo: In 1992-93, the first full year of the Act, the England component of total standard spending for services for children was set at £1,654 million—over 27 per cent. (14 per cent. in real terms) higher than in 1990-91 (£1,301 million), reflecting the Government's commitment to the Act. For each authority, the overall standard spending assessment represents the Government's view of the appropriate level of spending required to achieve a standard level of service. It is for individual authorities to determine appropriate levels of services based on their judgment of the resources available to them and local needs and priorities, as well as legislative duties. Local authorities receive support from central Government through the revenue support grant, business rates and specific grants, and from their own sources from the community charge and charges set by them for the services they provide.

Doctors' Working Hours

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her estimate of the number of junior doctors who work more than 83 hours per week; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Regional task force reports, current at 31 August 1992, indicate that 3,234 junior doctors, out of a total of over 25,000, are contracted for a maximum average of more than 83 hours a week. This represents a fall of 2,041 since the last returns in February and, since September 1990, a fall of more than 10,000.

Hospital Buildings

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many and what percentage of national health service hospitals were built (a) before 1890 and (b) before 1918.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not held centrally. The Government are committed to modernising the national health service estate and have invested over £6 billion on more than 650 major building schemes across the country over the last 10 years.

Community Care

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the earliest date on which financial and statistical information about community care arrangements by social services authorities will be available following community care implementation on 1 April 1993.

Mr. Yeo: Budgetary information for the financial year 1993-94 should be available from local authorities by the end of May 1993.

Mr. Hinchcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what arrangements for monitoring and evaluating community care arrangements by health and social services authorities after 1 April 1993 she intends to put into place;

(2) how she will monitor the development by social services authorities of day and domiciliary services after 1 April 1993; and if she will make it her policy that adequate special transitional grant for community care will be available for this purpose;

(3) what steps she will take to monitor the involvement of users and carers in assessment of need for community care; and if she will make it her policy to make additional resources available for this purpose if necessary in the light of monitoring current arrangements.

Mr. Yeo: Monitoring of authorities' implementation of new community care arrangements will be carried out by a variety of means, including the work of regional health authorities and the social services inspectorate, routine financial and statistical returns and other sources of information. The need for additional resources for community care will be considered as part of the public expenditure process in the normal way.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice she intends to give social services authorities on their duty to meet the assessed needs of individuals for community care services; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: Authorities duties are set out in legislation. We have issued practice guidance on assessment procedures, and we are considering whether to issue further guidance on certain aspects of those procedures.

Healthtrac

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to report on the operation of the Healthtrac contract within the West Midlands regional health authority; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: I understand the statutory auditor appointed by the Audit Commission is currently reviewing the management of the Healthtrac contract and will be reporting his findings to West Midlands regional health authority in due course.

Private Sector Providers

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how she proposes to direct social services authorities to consult representatives of independent sector providers in their area; and how she will satisfy herself of the effectiveness of the arrangements she proposes.

Mr. Yeo: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Taunton (Mr. Nicholson) on 4 November 1992 at columns 293-94.

West Midlands RHA

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will dismiss Sir James Ackers as chairman of the West Midlands regional health authority.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Shrewsbury and Atcham (Mr. Conway) on 5 November at column 348.

AIDS

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the results of the anonymised screening programme for HIV.

Mr. Sackville: Some preliminary results, relating to genitourinary and ante-natal clinic attenders in England and Wales, were published in May 1991. Further details, including results for injecting drug misusers, were published in the public health laboratory service communicable disease report in June 1991. The ante-natal clinic results were updated in November 1991. The studies have been expanded and it is intended to publish further results in the near future. I will consider carefully the implication of these for the development of our HIV and AIDS strategy.

Nursing and Midwifery Students

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nursing and midwifery students took up places in each region in England in each year since 1990; and if she will make a statement on the likely level for 1993, assuming both volume and percentage changes.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 6 November 1992]: The tables show a reduction in student numbers which has resulted from improved planning and better strategies for the retention of staff. This helps ensure that the numbers of student nurses and midwives being trained matches more closely the numbers of posts available for qualifying students. The demand for places is assessed locally in consultation with clinical directors, professional heads and service managers.

Notes: 1991-92 figures are rounded to the nearest 10.

1. The numbers of nursing and midwifery training places commissioned for 1992 and 1993 for staff to commence training programmes is taken from the Working Paper 10 Regional Balance Sheets dated 15 October 1992.
2. Figures do not include nurses and midwives who are being funded by the Department for Education.
3. Regional figures for commissioned places in 1993 are still being refined. However, we are able to provide an estimated aggregate figure for England from data available to date.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

British Citizens (Trials)

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list for (a) Fiji, (b) Cyprus, (c) Papua New Guinea and (d) Turkey, the number of British citizens known to his Department to be (i) detained and awaiting trial, (ii) undergoing trial and (iii) tried and in prison.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: As at 30 September the number of British citizens known to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office to be:

(a) Detained and awaiting trial are:	Number
(i) Fiji	0
(ii) Cyprus	0
(iii) Papua New Guinea	0
(iv) Turkey	2
(b) Undergoing trial:
None
(c) Tried and in prison:
(i) Fiji	0
(ii) Cyprus	5
(iii) Papua New Guinea	0
(iv) Turkey	0

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list for each sovereign country in (a) south America, (b) the middle east, (c) central America and Puerto Rico, (d) the Caribbean, other than Commonwealth countries and (e) Asia, other than former Soviet republics, the number of British citizens known to his Department to be (i) detained and awaiting trial, (ii) undergoing trial and (iii) tried and in prison.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: As it would take a disproportionate amount of time to answer this question completely acccurately, I have arranged for the right hon. Member to receive a written reply from the consular department of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office as soon as possible, with the information that it has to hand.

Bosnia-Herzegovina

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Bosnian government following attacks by forces loyal to them on United Nations agencies operating in Bosnia-Herzegovina.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We deplore all attacks on United Nations agencies operating in Bosnia-Herzegovina, and are constantly pressing all parties to the conflict to respect the United Nation's impartiality.

Russian Nuclear Industry

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action his Department has taken to investigate attempts by Iraq to purchase Russian plutonium in Bulgaria.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are currently following up with all relevant authorities reports in a Sunday newspaper of alleged attempts to sell plutonium from the Commonwealth of Independent States to the Iraqi embassy in Sofia. The Bulgarian authorities have seized some material which they assess to be of no significant proliferation concern. Our own test of a sample which we have received supports this conclusion. But our investigations are continuing.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to raise at the next meeting of the European Foreign Affairs Council the clandestine smuggling of nuclear materials from the former Soviet Union to countries in the middle east.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave on 23 October 1992, at column 404.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the new export restrictions on military sensitive equipment and nuclear materials to be imposed under the provisions of the Council regulations on the control of exports of certain dual-use goods and technologies and of certain nuclear products and technologies (COM(92) 317 final).

Mr. Needham: I have been asked to reply.

The proposed Council regulation on the control of exports of certain dual-use goods and technologies is currently the subject of negotiations between member states. The Government's aim is to ensure that there will be no weakening of this country's export controls on such goods as a result of the implementation of this regulation, and that the interests of United Kingdom exporters will be protected. The House will be informed of the outcome of the negotiations.

Visas

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will take steps to ensure that all applicants for visas at the British high commission in Delhi are granted a formal interview.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: More than 15,000 non-settlement applications have been approved in New Dehli this year without the need for a formal interview. A further 7,000 have been approved after a short informal interview lasting less than six minutes.

All other persons applying for visas have been granted a formal interview. However, prior to an application being formally lodged, if the entry clearance officer has reason to believe that it might not succeed, for example, if forged documentation is presented or the person has previously come to adverse attention, the applicant is given an opportunity to decide whether or not to pursue the application before paying the non-refundable visa fee. If the applicant decides to continue with the application, a formal interview is arranged.

Kenya

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs under what conditions local election monitors will observe the forthcoming elections in Kenya; and what assessment has been made of how likely they are to be honoured.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We welcome the announcement by the Kenyan Electoral Commission on 2 November that the National Election Monitoring Unit (NEMU), made up of three local Kenyan organisations, will take part in the monitoring exercise. We understand that NEMU is discussing with the Electoral Commission the practical arrangements and guidelines for monitoring the election alongside international observer groups.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Politically Motivated Crime

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to combat politically motivated vandalism, arson and sabotage in Wales; if he will create a Welsh serious crime squad for this purpose; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: These are operational matters for the chief constables of the areas concerned, who are ensuring that the police effort against such criminal acts is effectively co-ordinated.

Police Authorities (Local Representatives)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make it his policy to maintain the link between local communities and their police forces through the presence of elected representatives on police authorities in England and Wales.

Mr. Charles Wardle: We are considering a range of issues concerning the future of the police service, including the role and composition of police authorities. We have yet to reach firm conclusions.

Wolds Prison

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 4 November, Official Report, columns 223-24, on Wolds prison, if he will list (a) the number of employees in each of the categories referred to and (b) the number of employees on each grade.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is subject to commercial confidentiality.

Data Protection

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to extend the Data Protection Act 1984 to apply to manual records.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Government have no present plans to extend the Act to manual files.

Prisoners

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the prison population for each of the last 18 months for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: On 9 November, the latest date for which figures are available, the prison population was 43,787, including 465 in police cells. Figures for the last Friday in each of the last 18 months are in the table.

Police Overtime

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total amount budgeted for financial year 1992-93 for police overtime in (a) the Metropolitan police area, (b) the rest of England and Wales and (c) in each police authority in England and Wales; and what is the extent to which these figures have been revised since the commencement of the current financial year.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I will write to the hon. Member.

Arrests

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide a table showing the total number of persons (a) arrested, (b) charged and (c) processed during each of the last six months in (i) the Metropolitan police area, (ii) England and Wales and (iii) each police authority area in England and Wales.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information on arrests is not collected centrally. Court proceedings data for the period requested will not be available until autumn 1993.

Parole

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons were released on parole in England and Wales in each of the last 24 months.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Figures for those paroled in each of the months October 1990 to September 1992 are as follows:

Departmental Properties

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list, for each local authority area in south Yorkshire, how many residential properties are currently owned by his Department; and if he will list, by location, those residential properties which are empty, giving the type of accommodation available, the length of time each property has been vacant and its intended future use.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The prison service owns 48 residential properties in south Yorkshire used by prison officers and staff serving at the prison establishments of Lindholme, Moorland and Hatfield. All the properties are in the local authority area of Doncaster metropolitan borough council.

Of these properties, 11 are at present vacant. One is a detached, four-bedroom house, which has been vacant for two weeks, and the remaining 10 houses are three-bedroom semi-detached or terraced houses which have been empty for more than 12 months. Six of these houses are retained for reallocation to incoming agricultural staff or farm managers and the remaining five houses are on the market for sale.

Prisoners (Condoms)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list by sex, and by Her Majesty's prison establishment, for the past 12 months, the number of free condoms issued to (a) inmates going on home leave and (b) inmates being released at the end of their sentence.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Guidelines issued to governors of all establishments in November 1991 advised them to consider introducing local schemes under which prisoners about to be released or to go on home leave would have discreet access to a small supply of free condoms. It is for individual governors to decide whether and how condoms are available in such circumstances, and how they monitor the level of take-up. Comprehensive information is not held centrally.

Public Record Office

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many papers his Department has currently withdrawn from the Public Record Office; if he will list their titles; and when he estimates that they will be returned.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: On 6 November the Home Office had 370 records, amounting to over 1,000 files and sub-files, on loan from the Public Record Office. The number of records on loan fluctuates daily and to list them all would involve disproportionate cost. The records are returned as soon as departmental action has been completed.

Electoral Administration

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Rooker) of 30 October, Official Report, columns 931-32, what input political parties will have to the membership and the proceedings of the joint committee and working groups on electoral administration; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We held meetings with representatives of the political parties and the local authority associations in the summer as part of the process of reviewing electoral procedures. The remits for the working groups which we have set up as the next stage of that process reflect the concerns expressed by the political parties. Membership of the working groups is drawn from experienced electoral administrators and returning officers. The meetings with the representatives of the political parties and of the local authorities will be reconvened in due course to consider the findings of the working groups.

Frontier Controls

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what meetings he has held with the Kangaroo group on abolition of frontier controls; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend has had no formal meetings with the Kangaroo group, but we have had opportunities to acquaint ourselves with the views of members of the group on this matter.

Immigration (Entry Exclusions)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the individuals who have been excluded since 1979 from entry into the United Kingdom by Her Majesty's Government on grounds of likelihood to incite racial hatred by their presence in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Under the provisions of the Immigration Act 1971 and the immigration rules, a person without the right of abode in the United Kingdom may be excluded on the ground that his exclusion is conducive to the public good.

In forming a view on whether a person's exclusion would be conducive to the public good, a variety of matters may be taken into account, including the likelihood of their presence giving rise to offences under the Public Order Act 1986 and/or the offence likely to be given to public sensitivities by racialist statements. These considerations informed the decision in respect of the following individuals excluded since 1979 on the Home Secretary's personal directions:

Mr. Stokely Carmichael
Mr. Louis Farrakhan
Mr. Manfred Roeder
Mr. Fred Leuchter

Police (Salaries)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the commencement salary in London for each of the following in (a) 1981 and (b) 1991, (i) main grade probation officer, (ii) prison officer, (iii) police constable and (iv) police sergeant.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 30 October 1992]: The information is in the table.

Commencement Salaries including London Payments

	1981 £	1991 £
Probation Officer
30 and under	7,510	15,402
over 30	7,936	15,939
Prison Officer	6,139	16,895
Police Constable
Under 22	7,209	14,070
22 or over	8,298	17,121
Police Sergeant	10,092	21,099

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average of remuneration in England and Wales for (a) a chief probation officer, (b) a police sergeant and (c) a police inspector in (i) 1981 and (ii) 1991.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 30 October 1992]: The average remuneration of a chief probation officer in 1981 was £16,218 and in 1991 it was £37,738. Information is not available in the form requested for police sergeants and police inspectors and the figures in the table relate to average salaries.

	1981 £	1991 £
Police sergeant	9,504	21,039
Police inspector	10,755	23,820

Note:
Police officers not living in provided accommodation are entitled to receive an allowance, which is paid in addition to salary. The value of the allowance varies according to individual circumstances, for example, whether an officer is married or single, and between police force areas. The range of the value of the allowance in 1981 was £567—£2,271, and in 1991 it was £853-£4,836.

Car Crime

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what studies he has undertaken or commissioned in relation to the theft and racing of cars in the Oxford area; and if he will outline the aspects being examined.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 10 November 1992]: Although no studies have so far been undertaken or commissioned specifically in relation to the theft and racing of cars in the Oxford area, a number of important lessons have been learned from the incidents which have occurred on the Blackbird Leys estate. In particular, they illustrated the need for the law to be strengthened in this area. The Aggravated Vehicle-Taking Act 1992, which came into force on 1 April, significantly increased the courts' power to deal with the menace of car taking.

Moreover, the Home Office has supported or carried out a number of more general research studies on issues relating to car crime, including the nature of offending. These include crime prevention unit paper 32 "Tackling Car Crime: The Nature and Extent of the Problem" and paper 34 "Preventing Car Crime in Car Parks", copies of which are in the Library.

The results of studies completed to date are being used to help develop the car crime prevention strategy and the need for further research in this area will be closely monitored.

Criminal Records

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what steps he has taken to implement each of the short-term recommendations in annex M of his Department's efficiency scrutiny into the national collection of criminal records published in October 1991;

(2) what progress has been made in implementing the five-day limit for police notification to the national identification bureau of all pending prosecutions after arrest and the 13-day limit for all court convictions being notified after the court decisions as recommended by his Department's efficiency scrutiny into the national collection of criminal records published in October 1991.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 10 November 1992:] The position on recommendations 63 to 68 of the "Efficiency Scrutiny of the National Collection of Criminal Records", which together constitute annex M, is as follows:

1. It was recommended in the scrutiny report that microfiche collection of court results be stopped for post-1980 offenders. Further work revealed that this could not be done immediately without loss of information, but the conversion of all criminal records for inclusion in the computerised National Criminal Record System will ensure the provision of a more comprehensive record than is currently available on the Police National Computer (Recommendation 63).
2. It has long been the practice for NIB to mark the manual records that any acquittal should not be cited as a conviction (Recommendation 66).
3. Copies of the scrutiny report were sent to all chief constables and, without imposing rigid time limits, NIB will continue to encourage forces to improve the time taken to notify them of arrests (Recommendation 64).
4. Since the scrutiny was completed, the Government has re-examined the arrangements under which court results are notified to the NIB and the police notify the courts and the Crown Prosecution Service of defendants' and prosecution witnesses' criminal records; revised proposals to improve those arrangements are being taken forward (Recommendations 65, 67, 68).

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken to appoint the advisory committee to the national identification bureau at New Scotland Yard which was recommended by his Department's efficiency scrutiny into the national collection of criminal records published in October 1991.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 10 November 1992]: Oversight of the national identification bureau is being considered in the context of wider changes in the management of police information services. We hope to announce new arrangements shortly.

Foreign Workers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps the Government are taking to ensure effective implementation of article 19(6) of the Council of Europe's European social charter, signed on 18 October 1961, requiring contracting parties to facilitate family reunion of foreign workers on their territory.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Article 19(6) of the social charter provides that contracting parties undertake to facilitate as far as possible the reunion of the family of a foreign worker permitted to establish himself in the territory. We believe that the provisions of the immigration rules and our ability to exercise discretion in exceptional cases keep us in compliance with article 19(6).

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps the Government are taking to give effect to convention No. 143 of the International Labour Organisation, facilitating the reunification of families of migrant workers legally residing in its territory.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 9 November 1992]: The United Kingdom has not ratified International Labour Organisation convention No. 143.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid

Mr. Byers: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many times legal aid has been granted to enable a person convicted of a criminal offence to receive a transcript of their trial for the purposes of an appeal.

Mr. John M. Taylor: It is not necessary to make a separate application for legal aid to obtain a copy of a transcript of a trial. If the appellant to the Court of Appeal is covered by a legal aid order, the costs of the transcript may be claimed as a disbursement. These claims are not separately identified, and the information requested is therefore not available.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Civil Servants

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the total numbers of (a) established and (b) unestablished civil servants, including those in next steps agencies on (i) 1 January 1970, (ii) 1 January 1989, (iii) 1 January 1990 and (iv) 1 January 1992, including those on short-term contracts.

Mr. Dorrell: The number of civil servants including, where appropriate, those in next steps agencies, at the respective dates, is as follows:

Staff in post—industrial and non-industrial civil servants[1]

	Number
1 January 1970	702,056
1 January 1989	571,649
1 January 1990	565,017
1 January 1992	561,770

[1] Full-time equivalents (part-time staff count as half units).

The concept of unestablished service was abolished with effect from 1 April 1991. No breakdown between numbers of established and unestablished staff is available for earlier years in any case.

Taxation

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total revenue to the Exchequer from (a) income tax, (b) national insurance, (c) VAT, (d) vehicle excise duty and (e) excise duty in each of the English regions for 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Dorrell: I regret that information is not available on a regional basis for the taxes and duties requested.

Double Taxation Agreement (Italy)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to negotiate a double taxation agreement with Italy which would give United Kingdom based businesses exemption from extraordinary levies on all bank balances by the Italian Government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The matter is currently being discussed with the Italian authorities.

VAT

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the rates of value added tax on sanitary protection in each member state of the EC.

Sir John Cope: The rates of value added tax charged in each member state are as follows:

	Per cent.
Belgium	19·5
Denmark	25·0
France	18·6
Germany	14·0
Greece	18·0
Ireland	0·0
Italy	19·0
Luxembourg	15·0
Netherlands	6·0
Portugal	16·0
Spain	15·0
United Kingdom	17·5

Betting Duty

Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue he expects the horse and greyhound racing industry to receive in the current financial year as a result of the 0·25 per cent. reduction in betting duty.

Sir John Cope: The reduction in general betting duty in the last Budget was from 8 to 7·75 per cent. This was expected to reduce the revenue yield by £15 million in the current financial year, and the Chancellor announced his intention that the benefit of the reduction should be channelled back to the horse racing and greyhound industries themselves. The Home Secretary took account of the duty cut in determining this year's horserace betting levy; and discussions are still in progress between the greyhound industry and the bookmakers over voluntary arrangements to be made to help greyhound racing.

Negative Equity

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about the increase in the number of households who have negative equity.

Mr. Dorrell: We have received a number of representations on this subject. The Government have responded by announcing two measures which will help borrowers with negative equity who wish to move house, Official Report, 20 October, column 243.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Betts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) which European Community countries treat capital and revenue on the same basis within the actual public expenditure planning totals;

(2) what plans he has to secure a common definition of public expenditure and Government borrowing between European Community countries.

Mr. Portillo: European Community countries use varying definitions for their own public expenditure planning and control purposes. However, these countries make returns to the statistical office of the European Communities covering general Government current expenditure, capital expenditure and the financial deficit, based on the European system of integrated economic accounts. This publication is available in the House of Commons Library.

Growth

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the average annual rate of economic growth of the United Kingdom and each other Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development country since 1979.

Mr. Portillo: Data of OECD countries' economic growth since 1979 can be found in the June 1992 edition of the OECD "Economic Outlook".

Books (VAT)

Mr. Kenneth Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has to extend VAT to the purchase of second-hand books.

Sir John Cope: We have no proposals to extend VAT to the purchase of second-hand books.

Public Sector Borrowing Requirement

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the first official estimate which was published of the public sector borrowing requirement for 1992-93 and 1993-94, respectively; what subsequent estimates were published; and if he will give the date of publication in each case.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 9 November 1992]: Forecasts of the PSBR for the year ahead are published annually in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report", and then updated in the subsequent "Autumn Statement". Estimates given in the FSBR for years beyond the year ahead are projections, rather than forecasts, based on illustrative assumptions about the medium-term path of the economy.

A forecast of £28·1 billion for 1992-93 was made in the 1992 FSBR published on 10 March. A revised estimate will be given in the 1992 "Autumn Statement". No forecasts have yet been published for 1993-94.

ENVIRONMENT

English House Condition Survey

15. Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish the English house condition survey.

Mr. Baldry: The results of the English house condition survey will be published next year.

Disabled Facilities Grants

16. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the provision of disabled facilities grants.

Mr. Baldry: Disabled facilities grants assist disabled people with the cost of adaptations to enable them to live more independently in their own homes. Since the new grant system was introduced in July 1990, more than 30,000 grants have been approved at a total cost of £103 million.

House Building

17. Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to assist house builders to increase the supply of new, affordable houses.

Sir George Young: The Government are investing £1·7 billion this year through the Housing Corporation, nearly double the level of three years ago, and supplemented by £0·5 billion of private finance, for affordable housing provided by housing associations. A substantial proportion of the corporation's programme is devoted to new build. Recent falls in interest rates and in land prices will stimulate demand for new private housing, which is now more affordable than for many years.

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total expenditure committed to public house-building programmes by housing associations, local authorities and others in this current financial year; and what percentage he estimates has been placed with (a) large volume-build contractors and (b) small- and medium-sized companies, respectively.

Sir George Young [holding answer 10 November 1992]: Gross capital expenditure by housing associations financed through the Housing Corporation in 1992-93 will be over £1·7 billion, supplemented by private loans of £0·5 billion; the large majority of this is spent on new house-building. It is estimated that local authorities will spend around £125 million on new council housing in 1992-93. In addition, authorities are estimated to spend £250 million on support for housing associations, much of which will be on new house building. No information is available centrally about the size of contractors used by associations and authorities.

Unleaded Petrol

18. Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he proposes to take with regard to benzene levels in unleaded petrol.

Mr. Maclean: The benzene content of petrol, both leaded and unleaded, is already limited to a maximum of 5 per cent. by volume under EC directive 85/210/EEC. New European Community vehicle emission standards which apply from the end of this year will greatly reduce emissions of benzene from new cars.

Renovation Grants

19. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many local authorities are able to make discretionary awards in respect of renovation grants for home improvements.

Sir George Young: All local housing authorities.

Opencast Mining

20. Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what new measures he proposes to limit the impact of opencast coal mining on the natural environment.

Mr. Howard: My Department announced on 15 July that the planning guidelines for opencast coal will be revised. We expect to bring forward a draft for public consultation next year following completion of the Government's coal review. I hope that the hon. Member will appreciate that I cannot pre-empt what the revised guidelines will say.

30. Mr. Eric Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to issue new planning guidance in relation to the development of opencast coal mining.

Mr. Howard: We hope to be in a position to issue draft revised guidance for public consultation following the outcome of the recently announced coal review.

23. Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received on the review of minerals planning guidance note 3 on opencast coal operations.

Mr. Howard: We received a number of representations as part of a wide-ranging consultation on the practical operation of the guidelines earlier this year. Summaries of the responses to that exercise were placed in the Library when my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning announced our intention to revise the guidelines on 15 July.

Urban Regeneration Agency (Headquarters)

21. Mr. Bates: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether a decision has been reached on the location of the headquarters of the Urban Regeneration Agency.

Mr. Redwood: It is too early to say where the headquarters of the agency will be located. We will look closely at the merits of each region before coming to a decision in consultation with Lord Walker.

New Age Travellers

22. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next expects to meet representatives of the Association of County Councils to discuss the problem of itinerant new age travellers.

Mr. Baldry: I will shortly be meeting representatives of the Association of County Councils to discuss the Government's proposals to reduce illegal camping set out in the consultation paper, "Reform of the Caravan Sites Act 1968". These proposals do not address the public order issues which may arise when huge numbers of new age travellers congregate. Those issues are being considered by my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary, in consultation with other Government Departments and chief police officers.

Local Government Boundaries

24. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress he has made with the review of local government boundaries.

Mr. Redwood: The Local Government Commission has begun its reviews of local government structure, boundaries and electoral arrangements in all of the areas in the first tranche of its work programme.

Council Tax

25. Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what will be the total cost of transitional relief for the operation of the first year of the council tax in 1993-94.

Mr. Robin Squire: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave earlier this afternoon to the hon. Member for Newham, North-East (Mr. Leighton).

32. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the expected effect on household bills of the introduction of the council tax in London.

Mr. Robin Squire: We have made no predictions of the level of council taxes in London or elsewhere. Council tax is a local tax and bills will be set locally.

29. Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has for changes in the standard spending assessment allocation formula when the council tax is introduced.

Mr. Redwood: My right hon. and learned Friend hopes shortly to announce proposals for SSAs for 1993-94, together with details of the provisional revenue support grant settlement.

Illegal Camping

26. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is planning to deal with illegal camping by travelling people.

Mr. Baldry: We issued on 18 August a consultation paper, "Reform of the Caravan Sites Act 1968" which contains proposals for reducing illegal camping. The closing date for responses is 13 November.

Sustainable Development Plan

27. Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will outline the process by which the United Kingdom's first sustainable development plan will be drawn up; and what provisions will be made for the involvement of Parliament in that process.

Mr. Maclean: The Government intend to prepare a report to the new United Nations Commission on Sustainable Development by the end of 1993. I want us to have a full national debate so that everyone with a concern for the environment can join in with views on how we can balance the need for economic activity with protection of the environment. It will be essential that this House contributes to that debate.

Local Authority Tendering

28. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on local authority tendering for large capital projects.

Mr. Robin Squire: Local authority tendering for large capital projects is governed by EC regulations and local authorities' own standing orders as well as by the compulsory competitive tendering provisions of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980, the Local Government Act 1988, and the Local Government Act 1992.

Right-to-repair Scheme

31. Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has for improving the right-to-repair scheme for council tenants.

Sir George Young: Provisions for a new right to repair are included in the Housing and Urban Development Bill which was introduced on 22 October.

Property Services Agency Projects

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to offer PSA Projects for sale and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood [pursuant to the answer of 22 May 1992, c. 273]: A total of 860 staff of PSA Projects have chosen to transfer with the business on its sale to Tarmac Construction Ltd. I expect the sale to be completed on 1 December. A further announcement to Parliament will be made shortly giving the financial details of the sale once the implications of staff choice have been assessed.

Norbreck Parade, London (Access)

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will make a statement about the outcome of the proceedings held at Ealing town hall on 14 October in connection with the appeal against the refusal by the local planning authority to grant planning permission for an access to Norbreck parade, London NW10, from the north circular road;

(2) what was the advice given on 14 October by his Department to the inspector in connection with the proceedings at the Ealing town hall relating to the appeal against the refusal of the local planning authority to grant planning permission for an access to Norbreck parade, London NW10, from the north circular road.

Mr. Baldry: This planning appeal is the responsibility of the planning inspectorate. I have asked the inspectorate's chief executive, Mr. Stephen Crow, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from H. S. Crow to Mr. Paul Boateng, dated 27 October 1992:

The Secretary of State for the Environment has asked me to provide the reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions to him, as their subject matter has been delegated to the Planning Inspectorate Executive Agency.

You ask what advice was given to the Inspector holding the inquiry on 14 October into the planning appeal relating to access to Norbreck Parade, London NW10, from the North Circular Road, and about the outcome of the proceedings.

The Inspector sought advice on a submission, made at the inquiry, that the Secretary of State had no jurisdiction in this matter. He was advised that, by reference to S.79(6) of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990, the Secretary of State had the discretionary power to decline to determine this appeal, in view of the fact that the local planning authority had been directed [by the Secretary of State for Transport] to refuse planning permission. The Secretary of State was not however bound to exercise this power and, therefore, it was within the Inspector's discretion to allow the inquiry to continue.

However, since the parties wished to consider further both the procedural issue and evidence on the merits of the case, the Inspector agreed to adjourn the inquiry until 20 November next.

Following the hearing of the case at the re-convened inquiry, the Inspector will report to the Secretary of State, both on the procedural issue and on the merits of the appeal proposals.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he will take to introduce new wildlife legislation in order to protect sites of special scientific interest for the purposes of implementing the new EC habitats directive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: We are currently considering what measures are necessary to implement the EC habitats directive and we expect to put our proposals to public consultation in the next few months.

Habitats Directive

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what assessment he has made of the amendments required to sections 36 and 37 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 to meet the obligations under the new EC directive on the conservation of flora, fauna and habitats relating to the marine environment;

(2) if he will introduce new legislative measures to guard against the degradation of sites of special scientific interest and other areas requiring special conservation measures under the EC directive on the conservation of flora, fauna and habitats.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will strengthen the marine nature reserve provisions of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 in order to meet the obligations of the new EC habitats directive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The Government's response to the Select Committee report on coastal zone protection and planning recognises the difficulties in application of sections 36 and 37 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981. We shall ensure that the proposals for implementation of the marine conservation aspects of the habitats directive fully meet the directive's requirements.

Hazardous Substances Regulations

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many applications for deemed consent under part 4 of the Planning (Hazardous Substances) Regulations 1992 have been made since the introduction of the regulations.

Mr. Baldry: This information is not available at present. However, my Department intends to seek the relevant information from local authorities next April, as part of an annual statistical return on hazardous substances consents.

Council Houses (Windows)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what surveys he has conducted into the replacement of metal-framed windows in council-owned housing stock and the consistency of the programme in various parts of England and Wales; and what provisions are extended to those who have already purchased a council house under government regulations.

Mr. Baldry: The Department has conducted no surveys of local authority activity in this area. Private owners who are advised that work of this kind is required may be eligible for assistance under the provisions of the house renovation grant scheme.

Mortgage Arrears

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people in Britain are in arrears with their mortgages.

Mr. Baldry: Figures published by the Council of Mortgage Lenders show that 305,140 mortgages in the United Kingdom were six months or more in arrears at the end of June.

Derelict Land

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what sums have been spent on the clearance of derelict and contaminated land and the area covered by the Dearne valley city grant project in each of the last five years.

Mr. Maclean: The amounts spent on the clearance of derelict and contaminated land in the area covered by the Dearne Valley Partnership in each of the last five years is as follows.

1988-89	326,401
1989-90	1,454,482
1990-91	3,244,522
1991-92	5,414,519
[1]1992-93	4,834,158

[1] From 1 April 1992 to 5 November 1992.

Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many acres of land in England and Wales are vacant or derelict.

Mr. Redwood: In England, based on the 1988 derelict land survey, there are 100,035 acres of derelict land. The 1990 national survey of vacant land in urban areas of England estimates that there are about 150,000 acres of vacant land in English towns and cities. There will, of course, be overlap between those two figures. Statistics are not available for vacant land in non-urban areas of England.

Vacant and derelict land in Wales are matters for the Secretary of State for Wales.

Earth Summit

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for the international conference for non-governmental organisations announced by the Prime Minister at the Earth summit.

Mr. Howard: The Government will host a three-day international conference next year to enable voluntary bodies, local government and the business community to exchange experience on the practical implementation of the Earth summit agreements. The conference will take place in Manchester in September 1993.

The commitment and involvement of all the independent sectors are critical to the effective implementation of the agreements signed at the Earth summit. I am today issuing a consultation note on the conference and welcome views on our proposals from all interested sectors. I have invited Dr. Martin Holdgate, Director General of the International Union for the Conservation of Nature, to chair an international steering group to guide the preparation for the conference.

Ozone Depletion

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the use of chlorofluorocarbons in the United Kingdom refrigeration and air conditioning industry.

Mr. Maclean: My Department commissioned a study, from the March Consulting Group, on CFC use in the refrigeration and air conditioning industry, which is published by HMSO today. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House. The report shows that the United Kingdom market for refrigeration and air conditioning equipment has grown from £339 million in 1986 to £632 million in 1990. The industry has cut its consumption of CFCs over this period by some 15 per cent. overall.

The report also shows that 72 per cent. of new CFCs are used for servicing existing equipment. Users of refrigeration and air conditioning equipment must act quickly to set up leak detection systems, to monitor the refrigerant they use, and to recover and recycle. If they do not act quickly and responsibly, they could experience a severe shortage of CFCs after production has stopped, which will be at the end of 1995 at the latest.

Uniform Business Rate

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many appeals are still outstanding relating to bills received under the uniform business rate as at 1 November in England.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 9 November 1992]: At the end of September 1992, the latest date at which information is available for England, in respect of the 1990 non-domestic rating list there were about 550,000 outstanding proposals of which around 500,000 had been passed by valuation offices to valuation tribunals as appeals. This follows the clearance of over 400,000 cases.

Rating Appeals

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many appeals are still outstanding relating to bills received under the old domestic rating system in England.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 9 November 1992]: At the end of September 1992, the latest date at which information is available for England, there were about 2,500 outstanding appeals relating to the old rating system. These related to both domestic and non-domestic cases and separate figures are not available.

Most of the outstanding appeals were awaiting decisions by the Lands Tribunal.

Water Disconnections

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what emergency access arrangements are made to the water supply in properties where the supply has been disconnected for non-payment.

Mr. Maclean: None. However, local authorities are required to be notified of the disconnection of a supply of water to any inhabited house if the supply is not restored within 24 hours. They have powers under the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1976 to make such arrangements as they think fit for the supply to be restored in certain circumstances.

Water Companies

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on how many occasions a water undertaker has been challenged in the courts under section 63 of the Water Industry Act 1991.

Mr. Maclean: This information is not collected by my Department, or by the Office of Water Services, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Council Tax

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library, in hard copy and on floppy disk, the data of each local authority's tax base for the council tax purposes supplied to his Department on form CTB.1.

Mr. Redwood [pursuant to the answer 30 October 1992, c.863]: I have today placed in the Library of the House the information requested.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Zambia and Zimbabwe

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) how much money is currently allocated by the Overseas Development Administration to assist drought-affected areas of Zambia and Zimbabwe; and what is the total tonnage of cereals which has been pledged to date to each country by the United Kingdom;

(2) what is the timetable for the delivery of pledges granted by the Overseas Development Administration to the draught-affected areas of Zambia and Zimbabwe.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have pledged and fully disbursed £10 million each to Zambia and Zimbabwe in balance of payments grants to help with the cost of additional imports, including food, for drought relief. We are also providing £804,000 for Zambia and £2·475 million for Zimbabwe to assist with emergency water schemes and food distribution.

Apart from small amounts through these ongoing projects, we are not providing food aid directly on a bilateral basis. However, the EC has committed 100,000 tonnes for Zambia and 80,000 tonnes for Zimbabwe this year, mainly in cereal form. We expect this to be delivered over the next 10 weeks. Britain's share of the cost is about £5·5 million.

Madagascar

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much overseas aid has been given by the Overseas Development Administration to counter crop damage by swarms of locusts in Madagascar.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have committed £17,000 towards a field trial of insect growth regulators in collaboration with the Food and Agriculture Organisation. In addition, the ODA is currently putting together a package of items to address the specific short-term recommendations of the FAO's locust consultant: the value and extent of that package has yet to be finalised.

Green Issues

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs who, in the Overseas Development Administration, has been appointed to oversee and develop green issues; how many civil servants have been allocated new or additional responsibilities to deal with the management and development of green issues; and what additional allocation of resources has been made to support programmes related to green issues in the Overseas Development Administration.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The ODA has a well-established organisational and policy-making structure to ensure environmental and natural resources issues are taken fully into account in its work. General environmental policy and environmental research is co-ordinated by the natural resources and environment department. All ODA staff involved in the examination of project proposals are required to assess them for environmental impact, using the ODA's own "Manual of Environmental Assessment".

The concept of sustainable development, which was promoted at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development and set out in "Agenda 21", is central to the ODA's policies. Co-ordinating action on "Agenda 21" is the responsibility of the aid policy department.

We are mobilising the aid programme in further support of the goals of "Agenda 21" and we will contribute our share of the 3 million ecu pledged by the European Community at UNCED. We shall also contribute our share to a replenishment of the global environment facility.

Africa (Aid)

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to advocate an initiative for Africa encompassing debt reductions, improved terms of trade and increased overseas aid.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Africa is already a priority for the United Kingdom aid programme; 40 per cent. of our bilateral aid goes to African countries.

In 1990, my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister launched the Trinidad terms debt initiative. As a result, seven countries in Africa have benefited from substantial reductions in their official debt. The Trinidad terms currently reduce eligible payments due to governments by as much as 50 per cent. None the less, we continue to press for even greater relief to be made available to poorest countries. All new United Kingdom aid to low-income African countries is on grant terms.

We believe developing countries must be allowed to trade freely. The GATT Uruguay round is the key to this. We are pressing the European Commission to continue discussions with the USA and to work for the earliest possible resolution of outstanding difficulties on the round.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what help is currently offered by the Overseas Development Administration to establish and support food reserves in African countries to help prevent future food shortages.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Food reserves set up in developing countries with international food aid can be expensive to establish and maintain and difficult to protect. For this reason, we give priority to meeting food shortages with food aid, by obtaining food quickly either by purchases from donor countries or surplus-holding countries in the region; or by reallocation of food aid consignments on the high seas.

Some African countries do have food stocks generated by surpluses from their own harvests. In these cases, we will continue to provide help on crop storage at village, district and national level.

Mozambican Refugees

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance is currently granted by the Overseas Development Administration to assist the Government of Zimbabwe to deal with refugees from Mozambique.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Most of our aid for Mozambican refugees is channelled through the co-ordinating offices of the UN High Commissioner for Refugees, from where it is allocated to relief programmes in refugee host countries, including Zimbabwe. We have made cash grants of £10·5 million in this form since 1989. We are also supporting British non-governmental organisations, including Help Age which is running a programme to address the urgent needs of elderly and disabled Mozambican refugees in Zimbabwe.

Aid Target

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the exact date in 1974 when the Government accepted the 0·7 per cent. of the gross national product target for overseas aid.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The target was accepted in principle by the newly elected Government of February 1974.

PRIME MINISTER

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowance

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Prime Minister what is the average hill livestock compensatory allowance payment to eligible farmers in Wales and the comparable figures for England; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The average payment during the 1991-92 financial year was £2,570 in Wales and £2,781 in England.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Civil Service

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what action he is taking to ensure that the civil service maintains the progress of its equal opportunities policies by appointing more women on merit to top posts.

Mr. Robert Jackson: The civil service is committed to equal opportunity. It seeks to offer staff at all levels the opportunity to develop their career successfully, combining this where they choose with family commitments. Our aim is to ensure that this opportunity is open to all women, so that those with the ability to reach the top can realise their full potential, to their benefit and that of the service and the public it serves.

Maintaining the principle of selection and promotion on merit, we have concluded that the achievement of our equal opportunity aims will be helped by setting a benchmark, against which progress can be judged. We believe that, if our efforts are sustained, we can realistically expect at least to double the representation of women in the top three grades across the Civil Service as a whole by the year 2000. This will mean a proportion of 15 per cent. or more compared with the 7 per cent. when Opportunity 2000 was launched and under 4 per cent. in 1987. We will review progress each year.

Charter Marks

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many applications for charter mark awards were rejected after their contents were subjected to verification procedures.

Mr. Robert Jackson: This year's charter mark scheme attracted 296 applications from public sector organisations throughout the United Kingdom. Following assessment by the Prime Minister's advisory panel, and the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, 36 charter marks were awarded.

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what procedures were followed to verify the claims of the shortlisted charter mark applicants; and how many of the applications were submitted to such scrutiny.

Mr. Robert Jackson: All organisations that submitted applications were required to provide evidence against the six charter mark standards, one of which was evidence of independent validation of performance. They had to demonstrate that they had satisfied their customers, and achieved measurable improvements in the quality of the services they provide. They also had to offer a new idea for improving their service at no additional cost to the public purse.

The Prime Minister's citizens charter advisory panel and the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster were responsible for judging the charter mark applications. All applications were carefully scrutinised and shortlisted organisations were visited by members of the advisory panel of their representatives, as part of the verification procedures.

EDUCATION

Capital Credit

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will state for each local education authority in England the amount of capital credit approval they have applied for, for use in 1993-94.

Mr. Forth: The information requested is set out in the table.

Discretionary Awards

Ms. Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many discretionary awards were made by the Inner London education authority in its last full year; and how many have been made by the successor local education authorities in inner London in 1992-93.

Mr. Forman: In the academic year 1989-90 there were 8,373 discretionary awards made by the ILEA. In 1990-91, the latest year for which data are available, the successor authorities—the London residuary body and the boroughs —made 6,375 discretionary awards.

Ms. Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many discretionary awards were made nationally in 1989 and 1992.

Mr. Forman: In 1990-91 academic year, the latest for which data are available, there were 157,000 discretionary awards in England and Wales—the same as in 1988-89.

Research

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make it his policy to instruct the higher education inspectors to produce an annual assessment on the use made of funds granted to the Higher Education Funding Council via the dual support scheme for university research.

Mr. Forman: The Government have asked the higher education funding councils to secure increased accountability for the use of council funds for research. It is for the councils themselves to determine how to take this forward. The Higher Education Funding Council for England has recently launched an initiative to achieve this.

Governors

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will introduce legislation to repeal section 15(14) of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986 relating to the minimum age of governors.

Mr. Forth: No.

University Teachers

Ms. Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has received from the Association of University Teachers on the establishment of a salary review board for university teachers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forman: The AUT has mounted two parliamentary lobbies and a letter campaign which have supported a pay review body for university teachers. The Government have consistently replied—most recently in my reply to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West (Mr. Morgan) on 19 October, Official Report, column 23—that they have no intention of establishing such a body.

TRANSPORT

British Transport Police

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the future status of the British Transport police after the privatisation of British Rail.

Mr. MacGregor: Paragraph 98 of the White Paper "New Opportunities for the Railways", Cm 2012, announced the Government's broad intentions for the British Transport police—BTP—and promised further consultation.

The Department has today published a document, "The Future Status of the British Transport Police" which considers how the BTP may need to adapt to the proposed new structure of the railways.

The document confirms the Government's intention to maintain the BTP as one force and seeks the views of interested parties on its future accountability; the scope for private operators to make alternative arrangements for some functions; the extent to which functions could be contracted out; and the means of controlling and allocating costs.

I have placed copies of this document in the Library of the House and in the Vote Office.

Fishing Boats

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many fishing boats are registered in the ports of Ayr, Troon and Girvan; and how many are owned by other than United Kingdom citizens.

Mr. Norris: The information requested is as follows:

Port	Number of registered fishing vessels	Number Non-United Kingdom owned
Ayr	27	9
Troon	5	Nil

Girvan is not a port of registry.

Cohesion Fund

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions have taken place in the Transport Council during the United Kingdom presidency of the European Council of Ministers, on the application of the cohesion fund to (a) the European transport infrastructure and (b) environmental projects as proposed by draft article 130d of the treaty of Rome under the treaty of European Union.

Mr. MacGregor: The Transport Council has not discussed the cohesion fund, but, following its Luxembourg meeting on Monday 26 October, the Council is able, subject, of course, to the views of Parliament, to agree in principle the extension of the current transport infrastructure funding programme for a maximum of two years.

Public Record Office

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many papers his Department has currently withdrawn from the Public Record Office; if he will list their titles; and when he estimates they will be returned.

Mr. Norris: The Department of Transport holds 21 records withdrawn temporarily from the Public Record Office for current administrative use. The policy is to return records as soon as the relevant department action is completed.

The titles are:

Harbour Department Papers – Foreshores
Harbour Department – North British Railways Bill
Harbour Department – Correspondence on proposed construction Harbours and Foreshores
Harbour Department – Wrecks and Foreshores
Harbour Department – Wrecks: assents to structures on piers and Foreshores
Channel Tunnel Study Group
Channel Tunnel – Contract Details
Channel Tunnel – Contract Details
Channel Tunnel – Discussions with interested bodies (financial)
Fire applicances – Richards
Ltd., Aberdeen – production of unlined and rubber latex lined hoses. (3 records)
Orders made under Town and Country Planning Acts SIs 1113-1303
Transport Bill 1961/62, clauses 69-71
Ministry of Transport organisation and procedures for reviewing old records
Amendments and additions to be made to the ICE conditions of contract when used for works on classified roads
The north of Twyning-North of Lydiate Ash special road (improvement) order. (2 records)
Reorganisation of Civil Aviation and Common Services Groups
Organisation and staffing, Ministry of Transport and Civil Aviation Directory
Motor Vehicle: Licensing: Electrically propelled vehicles

Road Surfaces

Ms. Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport to what extent the use of noise-reducing road surfaces such as porous asphalt are used in the United Kingdom; what assessment he has made of the effect of using such road surfaces on the level of road noise on the mainland of Europe; and if he will consider introducing more of this type of surface.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The use of noise-reducing surfaces in the United Kingdom has until recently been confined to full-scale road trials.

Contacts are well established between officials of the Department and other European countries that use these surfaces selectively depending on the site conditions. Assessment of the noise reduction effect of these surfaces indicates overseas performance similar to the United Kingdom trials.

A specification for porous asphalt which has particular noise-reducing characteristics is about to be issued by my Department. The material may now be used on trunk roads, including motorways, where it can be shown to be suitable and cost effective. At the same time other forms of surface treatment are being developed.

It is a matter for local highway authorities to decide the particular choice of surface for use on their own roads.

Tunnels (Lights)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment his Department has made of the effect of relying upon motorists using their lights in tunnels rather than a high quality of public lighting on the number of accidents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Tunnel lighting requirements depend on a range of factors including the tunnel length and the traffic flows and vehicle speeds; they are set out fully within a British Standard code of practice. For road safety reasons, lighting provision needs to overcome the adaptation problem for drivers when entering a tunnel from bright daylight conditions, but the numbers of accidents are too small to allow reliable studies of the direct relationship between lighting levels and accident causation.

Channel Tunnel

Ms. Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the effect of rail freight traffic from the channel tunnel on south-east London on the frequency of rail journeys in that area.

Mr. Freeman: With the infrastructure and signalling improvements currently being undertaken on lines in Kent and London, BR believes that it will be able to operate international services without adversely affecting domestic traffic.

Ms. Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library the environmental impact statement of the channel tunnel and rail link on south-east London.

Mr. Freeman: Although an environmental statement was not a requirement of the House for the Channel Tunnel Bill, a report "Channel Fixed Link: Environmental Appraisal of Alternative Proposals" was published in December 1985. Copies were placed in the Library. Eurotunnel also provided supporting documents to the Select Committee that considered the Bill. An environmental statement for the new rail link will be published in support of an application for statutory approval. The rail link is not planned to pass through south-east London.

Ms. Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library copies of studies on noise and vibration with particular reference to south London carried out by the Derby railway research study centre since 1985.

Mr. Freeman: The studies requested were carried out by British Rail Research on a commercial in confidence basis. The Department cannot therefore deposit the studies in the Library.

A40

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what works are currently being undertaken on the A40 between the start of Westway and the Target roundabout, Northolt; at what cost; when they are due to be completed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The Department is not currently undertaking any works along the A40 between the western end of Westway and its junction with the A312, at the Target roundabout. However, it has been necessary to close the nearside lane of the westbound carriageway of the A40 between Alperton lane and Perivale lane since 7 September to enable Southern Electric to replace a high-voltage cable. These works are expected to be completed by early December.

Severn Bridge (Tolls)

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what will be the increase in the Severn bridge toll in January 1993 in (a) cash terms and (b) real terms.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Severn bridge tolls will be increased on 1 January 1993 by 10·7 per cent. in cash terms. This will represent a year-on-year increase of 6·9 per cent. in real terms.

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make arrangements for regular users of the Severn bridge to be able to buy block books of tickets for use after 31 December.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: This is a matter for the concessionaire, Severn River Crossing Plc. I understand that the company will be offering for sale books of tickets at the 1993 rates from 7 December onwards.

Emergency Vessels

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 2 November, Official Report, column 89, when he expects the assessment of emergency or standby vessels in the offshore oil and gas industry to be completed.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 10 November 1992]: The new standby vessel code jointly agreed by the Department and the Health and Safety Executive includes a staged approach with the simpler requirements being completed by 1 January 1992 and 1 May 1992, and with full compliance by 31 December 1992. New vessels and new conversions are to comply before entering service. The timing of preparation and presentation of vessels is a matter for owners.

The present situation is that: 86 fully comply with the new code; 41 have applied for and are in the process of assessment; 46 may be put forward for assessment or withdrawn from service.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Public Record Office

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many papers his Department has currently withdrawn from the Public Record Office; if he will list their titles; and when he estimates that they will be returned.

Mr. Curry: Government Departments have a statutory right under the Public Records Acts to retrieve records temporarily from the Public Record Office for their administrative use. My Department currently has 50 records out on loan. A list of titles is being sent out to the hon. Member. Records are returned as soon as departmental action has been completed.

Departmental Properties

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list, for each local authority area in South Yorkshire, how many residential properties are currently owned by his Department; and if he will list, by location, those residential properties which are empty, giving the type of accommodation available, the length of time each property has been vacant, and its intended future use.

Mr. Curry: The Ministry owns no residential property in South Yorkshire.

Poultry

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on the voltages normally used for stunning poultry in British slaughterhouses.

Mr. Gummer: The legislation requires that birds must be instantaneously rendered insensible to pain until death. The code of practice on welfare of poultry at slaughter gives guidance on stunning currents. For broilers, it recommends a minimum, average stunning current of 105 milliamperes per bird to produce an adequate period of insensibility.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what statistics are available to indicate the sales to developing countries by each EC country in volume, nature and value of goods produced, under the common agricultural policy in the latest convenient period.

Mr. Curry: The latest statistics on the trade of EC member states with developing countries is given in "Eurostat's External Trade, Analytical Tables, 1990" which is available in the House of Commons Library.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of confirmed cases of BSE, by county, for October.

Mr. Gummer: The information as requested for Great Britain from 3 October to 30 October 1992 is as follows. All these cases will have a date of clinical onset of disease and date of report before 3 October.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

European Law (Breaches)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Attorney-General what has been the total cost to the Exchequer since 1979 arising from United Kingdom legal representation at the European Court in cases brought against Her Majesty's Government by the European Commission for alleged breaches of European law.

The Attorney-General: The information sought by the hon. Member is not readily available and could be obtained only at a disproportionate cost.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Defence Diversification

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to meet with the armaments and military equipment manufacturers to discuss options available to diversify into civil technology and engineering business.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade and I are strongly committed to meeting and continuing a dialogue with companies from all sectors including with defence suppliers on the problems of adjustment that they currently face.

General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to secure an international GATT meeting to examine the implications of trading policies upon environmental concerns.

Mr. Needham: The GATT already has a group on environmental measures and international trade, which meets regularly in Geneva. The group has met four times in 1992, most recently in October. The European Community, including the United Kingdom, plays an active role in the work of this group. Separately, the United Kingdom plays a leading role in the work of a special Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development group, which brings together trade and environmental policy-makers. This group is formulating policy guidelines to help ensure the proper interaction of trade and environmental policies.

Tropical Timber

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to raise import duties on tropical timber and tropical timber products imported into the United Kingdom.

Mr. Needham: No. The United Kingdom applies the European Community's common external tariff, which is negotiated and agreed by all EC member states and cannot be changed on an individual national basis. If the EC were to raise its import duties, it would be obliged under the rules of the general agreement on tariffs and trade, to offer offsetting tariff reductions on items of interest to the countries affected by such increases.

Furthermore, restricting trade in tropical timber would mean that forest dwellers who depend on such trade would be forced to seek alternative ways to exploit the forests for economic gain, possibly including using the timber for fuel or clearing the land for cultivation. The Government therefore aim rather to promote the sustainable management of tropical forests which takes into account the needs of their animal, plant and human inhabitants. In this context, the European Community will shortly begin the renegotiation of the international tropical timber agreement.

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the importation of tropical hardwoods.

Mr. Needham: Except as provided for under the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species, there are no restrictions on the import of tropical hardwoods into the United Kingdom. The Government pursue a coherent policy to encourage sustainable management of tropical forests and do not consider that any wider restrictions on timber imports are practicable or desirable.

EC Single Market

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to call for the establishment of new mechanisms to monitor reports on the trade diversion effects of the single market on poorer developing countries during the United Kingdom's presidency of the EC.

Mr. Needham: No. The Government do not consider that completion of the single market will have the effect of diverting trade away from developing countries. Removal of internal barriers within the European Community will make it easier for all traders, including developing country exporters, to do business throughout the Community. The trade policy review mechanism—TPRM—of the general agreement on tariffs and trade already provides a forum in which the effects of contracting parties' trade policies and practices on other countries and on the multilateral trading system as a whole can be examined in detail. The Community's trade policy is subject to biennial review under the TPRM.

Ozone Depletion

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what trade restrictions on goods made with or containing ozone-depleting substances exist with European Free Trade Association countries.

Mr. Needham: The United Kingdom does not impose any controls on trade in these products with EFTA countries. However, all EFTA countries except Switzerland have notified the EC of their intention to introduce bans on the use of these products and these will equally apply to imports from other countries.

Company Accounts

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade in what circumstances his Department takes action when a company's accounts are qualified by auditors.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Auditors' reports on companies' accounts may be qualified for various reasons, and such qualifications do not necessarily imply financial difficulty or breaches of the law. Routine consideration of every qualified report would require resources that we do not believe could be justified. However my Department considers for appropriate action any case where a qualification is drawn to its attention as indicating a matter for concern.

Aerospace Industry

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what plans he has to meet the chairmen of the major aerospace companies;

(2) what plans he has to meet the employees of major aerospace companies, their trade union and professional association representatives.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has no immediate plans to meet the employees or professional association representatives of the major aerospace companies. However, he and I have visited a number of companies and we have had meetings with the Society of British Aerospace Companies and with the chairmen of several companies including British Aerospace, GEC, Rolls-Royce and Westland.

Textiles

Mr. Cryer: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what representations he has received from the textile industry about the effect of subsidies by the Wallonian region to textile companies in Belgium; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what assessment he has made of the uniformity of a common policy in the European Community on control of state aids to the textile and clothing industry.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 4 November 1992]: Representations have been made by the British Textile Confederation about alleged subsidies. We are considering these allegations carefully.

There continue to be isolated cases of aid approved to manufacturers in the textile and clothing industries on which we make our concerns known to the Commission. In general, progress appears to be being made in the enforcement of the EC treaty obligations controlling and limiting state aid.

Arms Exports

Dr. David Clark: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many licences were (a) applied for and (b) granted under the export control system for arms exports in 1991 and to date in 1992.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 9 November 1992]: The following figures are in respect of export licences for goods covered by group 1 of part II of the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1991:

	1991	1992
(a) Export licences applied for	13,832	12,907
(b) Export licences issued	13,216	12,005

Coal Uses

Mr. Gallie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what publicly-funded bodies are currently carrying out research, within the United Kingdom, into alternative uses for coal.

Mr. Eggar: Research into alternative uses of coal funded by the public sector in the United Kingdom is mainly undertaken at British Coal's coal research establishment—CRE—near Cheltenham and at its Point of Ayr coal liquefaction pilot plant, north Wales. Work in recent years has focused principally on coal liquefaction, the production of chemicals from coal by prrolysis, coal gasification and carbonisation undertaken at CRE. Both British Coal and my Department are contributing to the £41 million Point of Ayr project with additional public sector funding from the European Commission.

Elsewhere in the United Kingdom, research into alternative uses of coal is undertaken at a number of universities with funding from the British Coal Utilisation Research Association, Science and Engineering Research Council and the European Commission.

A substantial amount of research into alternative uses of coal has also been undertaken by the private sector in the United Kingdom with European Commission funding over the past few years. This includes work by British Gas on producing a synthetic natural gas from coal and work by British Steel on coal carbonisation.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disability Living Allowance

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what are the actual clearance times on average for disability living allowance claims; and what is the proposed target for new claims and for reviews of earlier claims;

(2) on how many claims for disability living allowance the adjudication officer decided to send an examining doctor to the claimant's home rather than a home visit officer;

(3) what percentage of new claims for disability living allowances are successful; what percentage of successful claimants received each component of the benefit; and what percentage of unsuccessful claims are followed by an application for a review;

(4) what is the current backlog for reviews of disability living allowance claims.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mrs. Bridget Prentice, dated 10 November 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security about claims and reviews for Disability Living Allowance (DLA), their outcome and the types of evidence used in the adjudication officers decisions. I will deal with each of your points in turn.

National clearance times

The Benefits Agency introduced a standard performance measure across benefits some time ago. This is expressed in terms of clearance targets rather than average clearance times as was previously the case.

The primary target set for the clearance of DLA claims is 60 per cent. of claims to be cleared in 30 days. Since the launch of DLA in February 1992 the performance to date has been 33 per cent. of claims cleared in 30 days. The latest performance for the month of October shows 39 per cent. of claims cleared in 30 days.

The success of the advertising campaign and the policy initiatives surrounding the launch of the benefits attracted a much larger number of applications in the early stages than was expected. Backlogs of work arose as a result and this has undoubtedly affected our ability to meet the clearance targets.

I can assure you, however, that whilst we are still some way from meeting the target, firm actions have been taken to reduce the backlog and thereby significantly improve the clearance times. Extra staff have been deployed and overtime is being worked to a considerable extent. We are also reviewing our working practices to ensure the most efficient procedures are in place consistent with our customers' needs. These measures have already borne fruit with the number of claims being cleared rising steadily from approximately 15,600 in April to 57,700 in October.

Reviews

You asked about the target times for reviews of claims to DLA. This is also expressed in the same way as new claims but the primary target for these cases is 60 per cent. in 55 days.

You also asked about the current backlog for reviews of DLA claims. At the end of October 1992 there were 25,985 applications for review still to be cleared. The number of applications for review has been steadily rising as the recovery programme to clear the backlog of new claims has been successfully completed.

The build-up of these reviews has also been affected by the diversion of resources to clear those outstanding Attendance Allowance and Mobility Allowance review and appeal cases inherited at 6 April 1992 when DLA was introduced. I am confident that these inherited cases will be cleared by the end of December 1992, as mentioned in my letter of 19 October 1992 to all MPs, and further resources are now being diverted to tackle the DLA reviews.

Number of claims adjudicated upon after a medical examination has been requested.

From February to the end of October just under 270,000 decisions have been made on new claims to DLA, of these nearly 160,000 decisions were made to award DLA, with almost 110,000 rejections. Over 54,400 decisions, representing 22 per cent., were made based on evidence obtained by way of a medical examination and over 400 decisions, less than 1 per cent., were made using information obtained by a home visit officer.

Numbers and percentages of successful claims

During the period February to October there were around 342,000 new claims to DLA, of these nearly 160,000 were awarded, this is reflected as a success rate of 59 per cent. The table below shows a breakdown by each component and rate:

Rate	Number	As a percentage of successful claims
Higher rate care	5,300	3
Middle rate care	7,900	5
Lower rate care	15,700	10
Higher rate mobility	45,600	29
Lower rate mobility	11,300	7
Higher rate care plus higher rate mobility	18,300	11
Higher rate care plus lower rate mobility	3,700	2
Middle rate care plus higher rate mobility	10,200	6
Middle rate care plus lower rate mobility	9,100	6
Lower rate care plus higher rate mobility	16,800	10
Lower rate care plus lower rate mobility	15,900	10

I should explain that it is not possible to identify the number of review applications received following a decision to reject a claim to DLA as customers may ask for a review on any decision whether it is favourable or not. However, the total number of review applications received between February and October was 29,664 which is less than 10 per cent. of the total number of decisions made during the same period.

All figures quoted are provisional and may be subject to amendment.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many people have used the benefit inquiry line or his Department's local offices for help in completing the application form for disability living allowance; and what percentage of total claims are dealt with in this way;

(2) how many claimants have requested home visits for help in completing the disability living allowance form; what percentage of total claims this represents; and, of those requesting such visits, how many claimants were visited by his Department's officers.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mrs. Bridget Prentice, dated 10 November 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security about how many customers have requested home visits for help in completing the Disability Living Allowance (DLA) claim form, what percentage of total claims this represents and how many visits were actually made. You also asked how many people have used the Benefit Enquiry Line or his Department's local offices for help in completing DLA forms and what percentage of total claims are dealt with in this way.

Information is not available on the number of requests made for visits. However, since the launch of DLA in February 1992 to the end of October approximately 1,950 home visits had been made by the Customer Service staff in the Disability Benefit Centres.

In this same period over 51,000 claims were completed with the assistance of telephone calls from Benefits Agency staff, which represents approximately 15 per cent. of the total of 342,000 new claims received.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security at what intervals claimants are advised on the progress of their claims or reviews for disability living allowance.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mrs. Bridget Prentice, dated 10 November 1992:

I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking at what intervals claimants are advised on the progress of their claims or reviews for Disability Living Allowance (DLA).

New claims to DLA are administered by 10 Disability Benefit Centres (DBCs) around the country. When a new claim is registered on the computer system an acknowledgment is automatically issued. The claim is then referred to an adjudication officer who may decide that further information is required and if this is the case then the customer will be informed. If the claim has not been cleared after 35 days then the computer system issues a letter automatically informing the customer of the delay.

I should explain that the volume of claims received has resulted in much longer delays in clearance and unfortunately we have been unable to keep customers fully informed of the progress of their claim in the latter stages. However now that the recovery programme to clear the backlog of claims has been successfully completed, clearance of claims will be accelerated and extended delays should not normally occur.

In the case of reviews, which are dealt with at the DLA Unit in Blackpool, due to the volume of work currently on hand customers have not been kept fully informed of the progress of their case. Action is being taken to address the outstanding review cases and staff will be keeping customers informed of any further delays which might arise when they action those cases.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Fraud

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the total number of cases of social security fraud detected in each of the last three years; and how many of these have resulted in prosecutions.

Miss Widdecombe: The investigation of social security fraud is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. Graham Allen, dated 10 November 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking for the total number of cases of social security fraud detected in each of the last three years; and how many of these have resulted in prosecutions.

The number of cases which have resulted in a weekly benefit saving and those that have resulted in prosecutions for the years 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92, are given below. I should explain that a weekly benefit saving is where benefit is reduced or terminated as a result of the work of fraud staff.

	Weekly benefit saving cases	Prosecution cases
1989-90	159,372	8,671
1990-91	158,178	7,911
1991-92	181,870	4,379

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. Copies of this letter are being placed in the Library.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many households in the Doncaster area currently qualify for payments under the cold weather payments scheme; what percentage this is of the total number of households eligible to claim benefits from his Department; and what have been the comparative figures for each year since the scheme was introduced.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 10 November 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking how many households in the Doncaster area qualify for payments under the cold weather payments scheme; what percentage this is of the total number of households eligible to claim benefits from his Department; and what have been the comparative figures for each year since the scheme was introduced.

Doncaster is covered by the Agency's Doncaster District. It is not possible to give an exact figure of how many customers would qualify for a Cold Weather Payment except at disproportionate cost. However, based on figures for those claiming Income Support in August 1992, it is estimated that approximately 18,900 customers in the Doncaster District may qualify for a Cold Weather Payment, should the area be triggered. This represents approximately 50 per cent. of Income Support Customers.

The only period available for comparison is 1 November 1991 to 31 March 1992, when up to 12,820 (approximately 47 per cent. of Income Support customers) were paid during the four periods when the area was triggered. All other local statistics have been destroyed in accordance with standing instructions.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Medical Examinations

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list by month since January for the Doncaster area, how many claims for (a) invalidity benefit, (b) sickness benefit, (c) severe disablement allowance and (d) income support were referred to the regional medical services; how many of these cases resulted in medical examinations; and what was the outcome (i) where examination took place and (ii) where they did not.

Mr. Scott: The administration of benefits is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Mr. Bichard to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 10 November 1992:

I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking by month since January for the Doncaster area, how many claims for (a) invalidity benefit, (b) sickness benefit (c) severe disablement allowance and (d) income support were referred to the regional medical services; how many of these cases resulted in medical examinations; and what was the outcome (i) where examinations took place and (ii) where they did not.

The complete range of such information is not available except at disproportionate cost. This is because statistics covering decisions made following references to the Benefits Agency Medical Services are not available in the requested form.

Listed in the annex are the figures available for Invalidity Benefit, Sickness Benefit and Severe Disablement Allowance. There have been no references directly from Income Support sections but customers in receipt of the incapacity benefits which I have mentioned may also be in receipt of Income Support.

The above information covers customers of the Agency's Doncaster East, Doncaster West and Mexborough offices.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Community Care Grants

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many DSS offices in each region had, halfway through the year, exhausted their funding provision for community care grants (a) for children, (b) for the elderly and (c) for the disabled.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mrs. Helen Jackson, dated 10 November 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about community care grant funding in DSS offices.

Annual allocations are made to each Benefits Agency District for community care grants. No District has exhausted its grants allocation for 1992-93.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Incomes

Ms. Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what statistical information about low incomes it is his practice to give, other than that provided in the households below average income stocktaking report.

Mr. Burt: It is the practice of this Department to give such information as is available within cost constraints. This may be by reference to any published data or from other information collected by the Department.

All statistical information from HBAI data is presented in line with the recommendations of the stocktaking report.

Ms. Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security for what reasons 1988 and 1989 data in the households below average income stocktaking report were combined, but not data for any two of the previous years covered in the report; and if for future years he will ensure that trend data are consistent, whether for individual years or two years combined.

Mr. Burt: Data for 1988 and 1989 are combined in the most recent edition of the households below average income statistics in order to reduce the effect of sampling error. This change in methodology was discussed in the HBAI stocktaking report, published in December 1991, and in appendix 5 of the latest edition. Earlier years were not combined since the effect of sampling error was much smaller: in fact the sampling error for 1988 and 1989 combined was larger than for 1979 alone.

There is no statistical inconsistency in comparing HBAI data for a single year's family expenditure survey with HBAI data based on two combined years' FES data. Future HBAI figures will remain based on combined years post-1988.

Wages Councils

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the change in his Department's spending, on family credit and other benefits, of the proposed abolition of wages councils.

Mr. Burt: It is not possible to predict the effects of the abolition of wages councils on benefit expenditure. In any case, variations in the level of wages are not the major determinant of family credit expenditure.

War Pensions

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications for war pensions were not determined before the applicant's death in each year over the last 10 years; how many applicants died before they received their benefit and arrears; and how long before the death each application had been made.

Miss Widdecombe: This information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

WALES

Health Service

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) when he last reviewed the relevance and appropriateness of the criteria for selecting people for the boards of Welsh health authorities in accordance with the procedure in paragraph 52 of "Guidelines of Procedure for Ministers";

(2) what steps he took to solicit suggestions of names for membership of the boards of Welsh health authorities, prior to the announcement of the names appointed by him to those authorities on 30 October, pursuant to the recommendations of paragraph 52 in "Guidelines of Procedure for Ministers"; and what consultations he undertook.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 6 November, at column 473.

Labour Statistics

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what were the percentage rates of male unemployment in (a) the valleys of south Wales and (b) Wales as a whole, for each year since 1988.

Mr. David Hunt: Rates for the valleys programme area and Wales are given in the table.

Male unemployment rates[1] expressed as a percentage of the workforce

September	Valleys area	Wales
1988	16·8	12·0
1989	13·7	8·6
1990	13·5	8·5
1991	18·4	12·2
1992	18·7	13·3

Source: Employment Department.

[1] Unadjusted.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the change in the level of unemployment in Wales over the last 12 months.

Mr. David Hunt: Between September 1991 and September 1992 the number of unemployed claimants increased by 10,365.

Venture Capital

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to establish a venture capital fund for Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: A venture capital fund for Wales already exists.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on his policies concerning the encouragement of manufacturing industry in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: I will continue to take every possible opportunity to encourage manufacturing industry in Wales, both in respect of locally based companies and inward investors. This will include making full use of schemes of Government financial assistance and of the wide-ranging activities of the Welsh Development Agency and Development Board for Rural Wales.

NHS Research and Development Director

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he intends to announce the appointment of the research and development director of the national health service in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: Details of the arrangements for managing the proposed NHS Wales research and development strategy will be given in the strategy document, which I am to publish in December.

Assisted Areas

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received from (a) Clwyd and (b) Wales concerning his review of the assisted areas map.

Mr. David Hunt: Eighty-eight representations have been received from Wales as a whole. Of these, 12 were from Clwyd.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received concerning his review of the assisted areas map in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: I have received a number of representations concerning the review of the assisted areas map from a variety of sources, including hon. Members, local authorities, local businesses, chambers of commerce and a number from all-Wales bodies.

Opencast Mining

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many opencast coal applications for Wales are lodged with his Department.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: There are four planning appeals and one called-in application in respect of opencast coal mining proposals by the British Coal Corporation and four appeals relating to opencast coal mining proposals by private operators.

Contaminated Land

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library a copy of the guidelines he has issued to local authorities in Wales on the format and the details to be included in the contaminated land registers.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: A consultation exercise on contaminated land registers was undertaken in May 1991 and a copy of the consultation paper has been placed in the Library of the House. The Government have recently consulted on revised proposals in the light of responses to that paper and further guidance is planned for issue to local authorities in due course. A copy will be placed in the Library of the House at that stage.

Domestic Water Connections

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many domestic water connections there have been in each of the last 10 years in each of the borough and district council areas of Clwyd.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is not held centrally. The collection of data on domestic water connections is the responsibility of Dwr Cymru Cyfugedig, Wrexham and East Denbighshire Water Company and Chester Waterworks Company as the water undertakers servicing Clwyd.

Health Promotion

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of national health service Wales overall budget is spent on health promotion.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: In 1991-92, identifiable expenditure on health promotion was £7,442,000 and this represented 0·4 per cent. of the total national health service budget in Wales.

Student Grants

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for each local education authority the number and proportion of mandatory student grants not paid by 31 October.

Mr. Forman: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Rooker) on 5 November 1992, Official Report, column 344.

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowance

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to increase hill livestock compensatory allowances for farmers in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The payment arrangements for the hill livestock compensatory allowance scheme are considered within the context of the autumn review of economic conditions and prospects for our hill and upland farmers. As part of this process I have met representatives from the National Farmers Union (Wales) and the Farmers Union of Wales who have outlined their views and priorities. The HLCA payment arrangements to apply from 1 January 1993 will be announced as soon as possible.

Tourism

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the amount of revenue from tourism to Wales in 1980, 1990 and 1991; what proposals he has to facilitate increased tourism in 1992-93; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Estimates of expenditure by overnight visitors to Wales are given in the following table. Since 1989, information on United Kingdom visitors to Wales has been obtained from the United Kingdom tourism survey. It is not possible to make a direct comparison between the results of this and earlier surveys. Information on overseas visitors is not available prior to 1981.

Estimates of expenditure by day visitors are available only for the financial year ending on 31 March 1989 when an estimated £22 milion was spent in Wales.

In order to further promote tourism in Wales, the Government uplifted support for Wales tourist board by 20 per cent. in 1992-93 to a record £13·529 million.

Acid Rain

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning the report of the Countryside Council for Wales on acid rain.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The report makes a useful contribution to our understanding of the potential threats posed by acid rain to the aquatic environment of sites of special scientific interest in upland Wales; and underlines the importance of the substantial reductions that the Government are seeking in the emissions which lead to acidification. The report acknowledges that more work is needed to identify more clearly the overall effects of acid rain within the Welsh environment and to this end the Welsh Office is currently sponsoring research with the Countryside Council for Wales.

Sheep Quotas

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received from farmers in Wales regarding sheep quotas.

Mr. David Hunt: Several.

Education Authorities (Capital Credit)

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will state for each local education authority in Wales the amount of capital credit approval they have applied for, for use in 1993-94.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Welsh local education aujthorities do not bid for or receive specific capital credit approvals for education services. County councils receive resources within their annual basic credit approvals which are unhypothecated to particular services. Spending priorities are a matter for them.

DEFENCE

Anti-ballistic Missiles

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what studies his Department is conducting into the prospects for implementing a limited anti-ballistic missile system.

Mr. Aitken: The potential ballistic missile risk and possible ways of countering it are being reviewed in consultation with the United States and other NATO allies.

Krypton-85

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what studies have been conducted by the Meteorological Office on the potential effects on the atmospheric balance of the release of radioactive Krypton-85.

Mr. Aitken: This is a matter delegated to the Meteorological Office under its framework document. I have therefore asked the chief executive to reply direct to the hon. Member.

Letter from J. C. R. Hunt to Mr. Llew Smith, dated 9 November 1992:

The Meteorological Office has considered the possible impact of the release of radioactive Krypton-85, but has conducted no specific studies. Although the release affects the electrical conductivity of the atmosphere by a small amount, there are as yet no accepted theories to suggest that this minor effect has a significant influence on weather phenomena such as thunderstorms.

Mammoth Vehicles

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the mammoth major transporter will be replaced; and how many more trips are planned for the mammoth major vehicles.

Mr. Aitken: Replacements for the truck cargo heavy duty Mk 1—sometimes referred to as the mammoth major transport vehicle—are now in service. There are currently no plans for further use of the mammoth major.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answers of 25 June, Official Report, column 299, if the figures for nuclear waste include radioactive waste arising from the decommissioning of disused facilities at the atomic weapons establishment Aldermaston; and how much radioactive waste will arise at Aldermaston up to the year 2000 as a result of decommissioning old facilities.

Mr. Aitken: The estimated volumes of nuclear waste arising at the atomic weapons establishment Aldermaston up to the year 2001 which I quoted in my answer of 25 June included radioactive waste arising from the decommissioning of disused facilities at the atomic weapons establishment Aldermaston.

The current estimated volumes of intermediate and low-level waste to be generated at the atomic weapons establishment Aldermaston by the decommissioning programme between January 1992 and March 2001 are 450 cu m and 3,300 cu m respectively.

On-site Inspections

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list the on-site inspections made in the United Kingdom under the Stockholm and Vienna documents; what has been the annual cost of providing escorts for on-site inspections made in the United Kingdom under the Stockholm and Vienna documents; and from which subheads of which votes these funds are taken;

(2) if he will list the on-site inspections made by the United Kingdom under the Stockholm and Vienna documents; what has been the annual cost of carrying out on-site inspections under the Stockholm and Vienna documents; and from which subheads of which votes these funds are taken.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The United Kingdom has received one inspection under the Stockholm and Vienna documents; to south-west district in October 1990. The United Kingdom has conducted two inspections, to Minsk in September 1990 and Moscow in September 1992. It is not possible to identify the costs associated with individual outgoing inspections, or against particular arms control agreements. Provision for the joint arms control implementation group—JACIG—which provides inspectors and escorts for all United Kingdom arms control activity, is made from vote 1, subheads A, B, C, D, E, F and L.

Nuclear Warhead Containers

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the expected timetable for delivery of nuclear warhead containers by the United Kingdom to the Russian Federation.

Mr. Aitken: On 10 November my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence signed a memorandum of understanding with the Russian Foreign Minister which sets out the terms for the supply to Russia of 250 nuclear weapons containers and 20 nuclear weapons transport vehicles. The design process is well advanced and delivery of these equipments is scheduled to commence in late 1993, with completion expected by the end of 1994. Preliminary equipment is due to be delivered later this year.

Deep Space Tracking Station

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current status of the United States Air Force deep space tracking station at RAF Feltwell; and when it was first declared operational.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The United States Air Force deep space tracking system at RAF Feltwell has been working up to operational status since 1 October 1990. It is expected that the system will become operational in the spring of 1993.

Search and Rescue

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the numbers of search and rescue helicopters that will be deployed at each base under his latest proposals; and what steps he will take to guarantee the availability of helicopters at the extremities of the areas covered where there is no longer an overlap between those areas.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the open government document "The Future Provision of Royal Air Force Search and Rescue Helicopters", copies of which are in the Library of the House.

Shipping Orders

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all the (a) assault ships, (b) helicopter landing ships and (c) frigates that have been ordered in each of the last five years, for 1992-93 and estimated for 1993-94; if he will give the type and cost of the order in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: The following type 23 frigates have been ordered during the last five years:

	Date
HMS Iron Duke	11 July 1988
HMS Monmouth	11 July 1988
HMS Montrose	11 July 1988
HMS Westminster	22 December 1989
HMS Northumberland	22 December 1989
HMS Richmond	22 December 1989
HMS Somerset	23 January 1992
HMS Grafton	23 January 1992
HMS Sutherland	23 January 1992

No assault ships or helicopter landing ships were ordered during this period. We invited tenders for a helicopter carrier earlier this year and we plan to invite tenders in the spring of next year for the first of two assault ships.

It is not our policy to make the costs of orders public as they are commercially confidential. All these orders were placed as a result of competition.

Seminars

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish a list of the dates, titles and venues of the seminars that his officials have attended on the subject of defence diversification over the last 24 months.

Mr. Aitken: Officials of my Department have not attended any seminars devoted to the subject of defence diversification. They have attended each of a series of six regional seminars organised by the Department of Trade and Industry earlier this year under the title "Changing Tack—New Perspectives for Defence Suppliers", which was designed to assist small and medium-sized companies supplying the defence market to assess the strategic issues to be faced in the light of current and projected reductions in global expenditure on defence equipment.

The dates and venues of these seminars were:

	Venue
29 April	Tring
12 May	Blackburn
18 May	Southampton
20 May	Solihull
1 June	Bristol
3 June	London

WE177

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the expenditure by his Ministry for each year to date, including 1992-93, on studies of the possible replacements for the WE177 tactical nuclear weapon; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: Expenditure on studies of possible vehicles is as follows:

	£
1989-90	928,518
1990-91	1,372,329
1991-92	1,870,285
[1]1992-93	1,563,918

[1] To end of October.

Expenditure on the warhead programme is classified.

Long-Term Costings

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he is now prepared to reconsider his policy relating to the release of information on long-term costings of his Ministry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No. I have nothing to add to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Clackmannan (Mr. O'Neill) on 13 May 1992, Official Report, column 155.

Fraud

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what estimates he has of the amount of his Ministry's expenditure which has been lost due to fraud in each of the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many incidents of suspected fraud have been reported by his officials to the Ministry of Defence police in each of the last five years; in each year, how many resulted in (a) prosecution and (b) conviction; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I will write to the hon. Member.

Diversification

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place a copy of each paper that his officials have delivered to outside bodies on defence diversification over the last two years in the Library.

Mr. Aitken: Officials of my Department have not delivered any such papers.

Trident

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give the outturn cost of the Trident programme in 1991-92; and what is the estimated outturn for 1992-93 and 1993-94.

Mr. Aitken: Actual capital expenditure on the Trident programme during financial year 1991-92 was £1,163 million. Our current estimate for capital expenditure on the Trident programme for the financial years 1992-93 and 1993-94 is £1,019 million and £827 million respectively.

SCOTLAND

Woodland

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to encourage woodland in the United Kingdom.

Sir Hector Monro: The two main aims of the Government's forestry policy are the steady expansion of tree cover to increase the many, diverse benefits that forests provide, and the sustainable management of our existing woods and forests. The Government provide a range of incentives to support this policy, chiefly through the woodland grant scheme administered by the Forestry Commission.

This scheme provides grants for establishing new woodlands and replanting felled woodlands, with higher grants for broadleaved trees and native pinewoods and for woodlands of less than 10 hectares. Special supplements are also available for planting on improved agricultural land and for the creation of new woodlands close to towns and cities. In addition, the scheme provides annual grants for managing existing woodlands, with higher rates for broadleaved woodlands and for woodlands of special environmental value.

The farm woodland premium scheme was introduced earlier this year as a successor to the farm woodland scheme and offers annual payments for new woodlands planted by farmers under the woodland grant scheme.

The Government have recently launched several other projects to encourage the establishment and management of woodland in the United Kingdom. These include a community forests programme, proposals for a national forest in the midlands, a central Scotland woodlands initiative, a Welsh valleys forest initiative and a programme to restore the traditional Sherwood forest.

Highlands and Islands Veterinary Services Scheme

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the future of the highlands and islands veterinary services scheme.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 10 November]: The Scottish Office Agriculture and Fisheries Department commissioned management consultants to review the highlands and islands veterinary services scheme last year. The consultants' report made a number of useful recommendations, which have required further detailed study. I hope to consult interested parties on revised proposals for the future of the scheme shortly.

Water and Sewerage

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the terms of reference for the Quayle Munro report on water and swerage services; what was the fee for this consultancy; and if he will place a copy of the report in the Library.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 27 October 1992]: I refer the hon. Member to the replies which were given to the hon. Member for Fife, Central (Mr. McLeish) on 26 October at columns 530-31 and on 6 November at column 424.

Agencies

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by grade the numbers of staff and their cost for 1991-92 and the estimated figures for 1992-93, for each executive agency for which he is responsible.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 5 November]: The information set out in the tables has been supplied by the chief executives of the agencies.

Governance

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations his office received from CBI Scotland regarding possible improvements in the governing of Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I have received one recent representation from CBI Scotland.

EMPLOYMENT

Wages Councils

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many establishments in the Sheffield area have been (a) investigated and (b) prosecuted under the wages council legislation since 1979.

Mr. McLoughlin: Statistics for the number of establishments that have been investigated in the Sheffield area since 1979 are not available. There have been two prosecutions under wages council legislation since 1979 in the Sheffield area; one in 1990 and one in 1991.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which employers have complained that wages council settlements have a significantly detrimental effect on industry or service sectors.

Mr. McLoughlin: We have received a number of representations complaining about the detrimental effect wages council settlements have on their business. These include letters from the British Hospitality Association, Butlin's Holidays, the National Association of Master Bakers, Gateway Food Markets Ltd., Grand Metropolitan plc, Trust House Forte plc, Blackpool Pleasure Beach Ltd., the Unquoted Companies Group and the Rank Organisation.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations she has received on wages councils from Conservative and from other not-for-profit clubs.

Mr. McLoughlin: We have received two representations from Conservative clubs in the last year, both about the adverse effects of wages council settlements.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which employers and organised groups of employees have determined pay levels at or below wages council rates.

Mr. McLoughlin: I regret that this information is not available.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list for each main wages council industry the lowest detected rate of pay in the past three years.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people employed in (a) Pendle and (b) Lancashire are in occupations covered by the wages councils.

Mr. McLoughlin: I regret that information on the number of workers covered by wages councils is not available for geographical areas smaller than a wages inspectorate division.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when the Government last consulted on wages councils.

Mr. McLoughlin: From December 1988 to February 1989.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many job vacancies currently notified to the jobcentres in Nelson and Colne are in occupations covered by the wages councils.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Gordon Prentice, dated November 1992:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question about the number of current vacancies notified to Jobcentres in Nelson and Colne which are in occupations covered by the Wages Councils. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

On the 6 November, there were 14 local vacancies available in Nelson Jobcentre and 15 available in Colne Jobcentres covered by the Wages Council.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what evidence she has of the extent of opposition to wages councils.

Mr. McLoughlin: We continue to receive complaints from employers about the adverse effect which wages council settlements have on industry.

Skilled Labour

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of the labour force is skilled in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) France, (c) Germany, (d) Spain and (e) Portugal.

Mr. McLoughlin: The skills held by people in the labour force vary widely and are often a product of informal training and job experience rather than formal courses. It is not possible, therefore, to provide statistical measures which are comprehensive and comparable between countries.

Training

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps she plans to prevent employers who provide adequate training losing staff to those who do not.

Mr. McLoughlin: We have no plans to interfere with the free movement of trained people between employers. The Government recently consulted about the possibility of changing the law on the enforceability of training contracts.

I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 5 November, Official Report, column 343, to my hon. Friend the Member for Teignbridge (Mr. Nicholls), which annnounced the outcome of that consultation.

Wages, Lancashire

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will state separately for full-time, part-time and all workers (a) the number and (b) the percentage earning less than £120 excluding overtime for (i) men and (ii) women in (1) Lancashire and (2) the United Kingdom for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. McLoughlin: The available information on the numbers of full-time employees in Great Britain earning less than £120 per week in April 1992 is published in table 14 of part A of the new earnings survey 1992. A copy of the publication is available in the Library. The available information on the percentages of employees earning less than £120 per week in April 1992 is as folllows:

	Lancashire	Great Britain	Northern Ireland[1]
Full-time
Men	2·6	2·0	5·0
Women	9·4	7·3	14·1
Adults	5·0	3·9	8·5
Part-time
Men	[2]—	76·4	85·0
Women	[2]—	79·9	80·3
Adults	[2]—	79·4	81·1

[1] Denotes including overtime.

[2] Denotes information not available.

Job Search Seminar

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the job entry rates for those who have attended a job search seminar, in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Tony Lloyd, dated November 1992:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question about job entry rates for those who have attended a job search seminar. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

Over the period October 1991 to September 1992, 12,935 people found jobs during the seminars, giving a job entry rate of 17 per cent.

It may be helpful if I explain the background and aim of the job search seminar programme. Job search seminars were introduced in July 1991 as part of a package of measures to provide additional help for people who had been unemployed for 13 weeks. The aim of the seminars is to enhance people's prospects of finding work, and avoid becoming 'long term unemployed', by widening their job search activity and improving their job search techniques.

Job search seminars normally last for a period of four days spread over five weeks. This usually takes the form of two days in the first week and half a day in each of the subsequent four weeks. No detailed tracking takes place to see whether people who take part in a seminar eventually start work. For management information purposes, rather than as a performance measure, details are recorded of people who have found work over the five week period of the seminar. Many people will take longer than this to actually get a job and will often have applications still pending at the point when the management information is recorded.

An evaluation of job search seminars is currently being undertaken. It will include an assessment of the number of people finding work over a longer period of time. Results are expected by the end of 1992.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the current numbers and the changes that have occurred in the male unemployment figures for Coventry over the past 12 months.

Mr. McLoughlin: In September 1992 the number of male unemployed claimants in the local authority district of Coventry was 15,483, and increase of 2,214 over the last 12 months. The figures are on the unadjusted basis.

Maternity Pay

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make a statement on the changes in the rights of women to maternity pay and to return to work after giving birth since 1980.

Mr. McLoughlin: Changes to the right to return to work after having a baby have been made since the Employment Act 1980 as follows: the initial notification of the woman's intentions must be in writing, rather than in writing only if requested; an additional power has been introduced for an employer to seek confirmation, after a woman has given birth, of her intention to return; the woman's notification of her intended date of return must be written and provided at least 21, rather than seven, days in advance, and her ability to postpone that date for a period in specified circumstances has been increased accordingly from 14 to 28 days; where it is not reasonably possible for an employer to take the woman back in her original job, he may now offer a suitable alternative or, if he has no suitable work and has only five or fewer employees, he may be relieved of the duty to reinstate her.

In April 1987, maternity pay, administered by employers under employment legislation, was replaced by statutory maternity pay—SMP. Employers pay a statutory minimum amount of maternity pay for a maximum of 18 weeks to employees whose average earnings are above the lower earnings limit for national insurance contributions and who at the qualifying week —the 15th week before the baby is due—have worked for them for at least six months. The statutory minimum rate of SMP has increased by 3·4 per cent. in real terms since 1987 from £32·85 to £46·30 per week.

Running Water

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many establishments in the Sheffield area have been (a) investigated and (b) prosecuted under the health and safety legislation relating to the provision of running water.

Mr. McLoughlin: During routine visits to premises for which they are the enforcing authority, Health and Safety Executive factory inspectors will inquire about the provision of running water if they have any reason to believe that the facilities may be inadequate. However, no comprehensive record of such inquiries is kept.

A search of records for the last five years has shown that there have been no prosecutions in the local authority district of Sheffield under health and safety legislation relating to the provision of running water.

Equal Opportunities

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the European social directives concerning the equal treatment of men and women which, at the most recent date, were the subject of infringement proceedings initiated by the European Commission for faulty application; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There are no infringement proceedings under article 169 of the treaty before the European Court of Justice against the United Kingdom in relation to European social directives concerning the equal treatment of men and women.

Job Interview Guarantee Scheme

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if she will list those jobcentres in Scotland where no provision is made for the job interview guarantee scheme;

(2) what has been the total level of expenditure in Scotland on the job interview guarantee scheme.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mrs. Margaret Ewing, dated November 1992:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Questions about Jobcentres in Scotland where no provision is made for the Job Interview Guarantee (JIG) initiative and about expenditure on JIG in Scotland. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

The Job Interview Guarantee initiative is not a feature of Jobcentre services in the following locations:

Annan, Lockerbie, Dumfries, Castle Douglas, Sanquhar, Girvan, Stranraer, Newton Stewart, Oban, Campbeltown, Rothesay, Dunoon, Peebles, Galashiels, Hawick, Kelso, Eyemouth, Banff, Elgin, Forres, Fort William, Kirkwall, Nairn and Peterhead.

The initiative offers a range of services to people looking for jobs and to employers with vacancies to fill. The most popular service involves matching unemployed people to notified vacancies and whilst this is not available under the Job Interview Guarantee initiative in the above locations, many of these Jobcentres do offer services which match unemployed people against employer's vacancies. My area managers also keep the position under review and if they identify a demand for the initiative in a particular location, they do their best to meet it.

Turning to your question about expenditure on the Job Interview Guarantee initiative in Scotland. Since April 1991 when Job Interview Guarantee was launched we estimate that expenditure amounts to £1,660,000.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

NORTHERN IRELAND

RUC Officers Appeal

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he is taking against the RUC officers responsible for the convictions of Noel Bell, Winston Allen and James Hegan following the appeal judgment.

The Attorney-General: I have been asked to reply.

On 29 July 1992 the Court of Appeal directed that its judgment in the appeal of R v. Neil Fraser Latimer, James Irwin Hegan, Noel Richmond Bell and Alfred Winston Allen be sent to the Director of Public Prosecutions for Northern Ireland so that he could consider the bringing of prosecutions against officers who he considered had committed criminal offences in connection with the trial of the appellants.

I am informed that on 5 August 1992 the Director issued an interim direction to the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary requesting that certain reports and information be obtained. When these matters have been received and considered the Director will take decisions as to whether or not to institute proceedings.

Once the Director has taken these decisions, and subject to them, it wil be for the Chief Constable of the RUC to decide whether disciplinary charges should be brought against any police officer.

HEALTH

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Healh what discussions she has had with the British Medical Association on the use of CFCs in prescription items; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: We have not discussed the use of chlorofluorocarbons in prescription items with the British Medical Association.

The Licensing Authority has drawn to the attention of product licence holders the public statement by major suppliers of certain CFCs that they intend to cease production of these materials in the foreseeable future. We understand that the pharmaceutical industry is investigating the suitability of alternatives to CFCs, particularly for metered dose aerosol inhalations. Any company proposing to market a medicinal product using recycled or alternative materials in their manufacture would need first to satisfy the Licensing Authority as to the safety, quality and efficacy of the product by submitting a licensing application with the necessary supporting data.

Health Services, Coventry

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many have been waiting in total and by main specialty (a) six months, (b) 12 months, and (c) over 12 months for treatment in the Coventry health authority area;

(2) what was the patient waiting list for Coventry health authority each month from January 1991 to date.

Mr. Sackville: Waiting time information by district health authority is published twice a year. The most recent figures, for 31 March 1992, are given in "Hospital Waiting List, In-patient and Day Cases—ISBN 1 85839 003 6—copies of which are in the Library. Monthly waiting time figures for individual district health authorities are not collected centrally.

Asthma

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was (a) the expenditure and (b) the expenditure per head on general practitioner prescribed drugs for the relief of asthma and asthma-related conditions in 1991-92 in each family health service association area, and for each NHS region.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is given in the table.

The data included in the table are for bronchodilators as defined in chapter 3.1 of the British National Formulary. The period covered is April 1991 to March 1992 and the figures are for the net ingredient cost of prescriptions dispensed by community pharmacists, prescriptions dispensed by doctors and prescriptions submitted by prescribing doctors for items personally administered.

Expenditure

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total revenue expenditure in each of the English regions by her Department in the years 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Sackville: Information derived from the 1990-91 annual accounts of regional and district health authorities in England is shown in the table. Figures from 1991-92 accounts will be available later in the year.

Total revenue expenditure on hosptial and community health services (HCHS): 1990-91

Region	£ million cash
Northern	931·4
Yorkshire	1,058·0
Trent	1,303·1
East Anglian	580·2
North West Thames	1,102·7
North East Thames	1,373·2
South East Thames	1,216·5
South West Thames	960·1
Wessex	796·1
Oxford	635·7
South Western	934·3
West Midlands	1,510·1

Region	£ million cash
Mersey	753·7
North Western	1,267·2
Total	14,422·3

Notes:

1. HCHS covers all the services provided or managed by the health authorities concerned including hospital, community health, patient transport (ie ambulance), blood transfusion and other services.
2. The table excludes expenditure by family health services authorities and the special health authorities for the London postgraduate teaching hospitals which, although funded by the Department, is not strictly attributable to particular regions. Expenditure by other special health authorities and bodies comprising the NHS, and expenditure met directly by the Department are generally incurred on a national rather than a regional basis, and are also excluded.

Benzodiazepines

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the latest estimate of the number of people who have been taking benzodiazepines for longer than the recommended 28-day maximum period.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is not available centrally.

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the current level of benzodiazepine prescribing in England; and if she will make it her policy to reduce benzodiazepine prescribing.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Government are aware that prolonged prescribing of benzodiazepines can lead to dependence and severe problems with withdrawal. Because of this, we have ensured that information on both prescribing and withdrawal from these drugs is freely available to doctors. There has been a steady reduction in the number of benzodiazepine prescriptions, from about 24·5[1] million in 1982 to around 15·7[1] million in 1991.

[1] The figures are based on prescriptions dispensed by chemist and appliance contractors in England.

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many prescriptions were issued for benzodiazepine for individuals by community pharmacists in England in 1991.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is as follows:

Benzodiazepines England 1991

Drug group	Prescriptions (thousands)
Temazepam	6,039
Diazepam	3,063
Nitrazepam	3,000
Lorazepam	1,080
Triazolam	1,076
Chlorodiazepoxide	504
Oxazepam	360
Loprazolam	180
Lormetazepam	171
Clonazepam	128
Clobazam	61
TOTAL	15,662

Notes:

1. These figures are actually based on 100 per cent. prescriptions dispensed by chemist and appliance contractors in England.
2. 1991 figures are based on the new prescription cost analysis statistical returns and refer to the number of prescription items as opposed to fees used in previous years.

Prescriptions

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what sums were allocated to each family health services authority in respect of indicative prescribing budgets for 1991-92 and 1992-93; and what were the outturn figures for 1991-92.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 30 June 1992 at column 459. The information requested for 1992-93 has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the (a) expenditure and (b) expenditure per head on general practitioner prescribed anti-depressant drugs in each family health services association area, and for each NHS region during 1991-92.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is given in the table.

The data included in the table are for anti-depressant drugs as defined in chapter 4.3 of the British National Formulary. The period covered is April 1991 to March 1992 and the figures are for the net ingredient cost of prescriptions dispensed by community pharmacists, prescriptions dispensed by doctors and prescriptions submitted by prescribing doctors for items personally administered.

St. Bartholomew's Hospital

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will list the number of patients, for whom Basildon and Thurrock district health authority is responsible, by age and gender, currently undergoing treatment at St. Bartholomew's hospital, London;

(2) if she will list the number of patients, for whom Basildon and Thurrock district health authority is responsible, by age and gender, that have been referred to St. Bartholomew's hospital for treatment since 1987.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not held centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. George Gould, chairman of Basildon and Thurrock health authority, for details.

Departmental Properties

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list for each local authority area in south Yorkshire, how many residential properties are currently owned by her Department; and if she will list, by location, those residential properties which are empty, giving the type of accommodation available, the length of time each property has been vacant, and its intended future use.

Mr. Sackville: The management of residential property owned by the Department of Health has been fully delegated to local health authorities, and the information requested is not held centrally.

Public Record Office

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many papers her Department has currently withdrawn from the Public Record Office; if she will list their titles; and when she estimates that they will be returned.

Mr. Sackville: Government Departments have a statutory right under the Public Record Acts to retrieve material, temporarily, from the Public Record Office for their own administrative use.

The number of items and frequency of such retrievals can vary considerably but, as at 5 November 1992, the Department of Health had 275 files out on loan to it. A list of these could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Such records are returned to the Public Record Office as soon as departmental action has been completed.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 19 October, Official Report, column 81, if she will make it her policy to collect statistics on the numbers of national health service trust staff who are currently in national health service pension schemes and those who elected to change to a private pension scheme run on behalf of a trust.

Dr. Mawhinney: No. National health service trusts have been established with the minimum of bureaucratic constraints. A requirement to collect statistical data about the exercise of free pension choice would run counter to that principle.

Extra-contractual Refunds

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 19 October, Official Report, column 71, if she will make it her policy to collect from each regional health authority the number of extra-contractual referrals returned in each financial year.

Mr. Sackville: Extra-contractual referrals account for approximately 1·2 per cent. of expenditure in England. The vast majority of referrals being made within contracts. The management of the extra-contractual referral process is the responsibility of district health authorities as agreed with regional health authorities. It would not, therefore, by appropriate managerially or administratively to collect this information centrally.

North Staffordshire Royal Infirmary

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will increase the West Midlands regional health authority's capital expenditure limits in order to finance the bringing forward of plans for magnetic resonance imaging facilities at the North Staffordshire royal infirmary.

Mr. Sackville: West Midlands regional health authority has received a capital allocation for 1992-93 of £155,550,000. Decisions on how to allocate these funds are a matter for the authority.

Healthtrac and Qa Business Services

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health further to her answer of 3 November to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Northfield, Official Report, column 184, if she will ensure that the Audit Commission report on Healthtrac and Qa Business Services Ltd. is published without any delay.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett) on 10 November. It is not for the Secretary of State for Health to intervene in the work or timetable of the independent statutory auditor.

Community Care

Ms. Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy that the money transferred to local authorities to fund the community care changes from April 1993 is ring fenced by each local authority.

Mr. Yeo: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Milton Keynes, North-East (Mr. Butler) on 10 November. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health announced on 2 October that local authorities would receive a ring-fenced special transitional grant for community care.

Victory House, London

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many Department of Health and national health service staff have been or will be relocated from Victory house, Tottenham Court road, London, to Bristol.

Dr. Mawhinney: None.

Diabetes

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will announce the membership of the joint task force she has established with the British Diabetic Association to advise on the implementation of the World Health Organisation/European regional committee of the International Diabetes Federation St. Vincent declaration on the improvement of diabetic care.

Mr. Sackville: The task force will be chaired by Professor Shaw CBE, lately dean of medicine, university of Newcastle, who will be supported by a multi-disciplinary expert team.

The task force will advise on the implementation of the World Health Organisation/International Diabetic Federation St. Vincent declaration on the improvement of diabetic care.

It is expected that the task force will need to seek further expert assistance on the range of specialist areas covered by the St. Vincent declaration.

The membership of the task force is as follows:

Professor David Shaw, CBE, Lately Dean of Medicine University of Newcastle.
Dr. Clive Buxton, Chairman, Director of Public Health, North Durham Health Authority.
Dr. Michael Hall, General Practitioner.
Mrs. Margaret Hunter, Area Co-ordinator (Tyne and Wear), British Diabetic Association.
Mrs. Mary MacKinnon, Diabetes Nurse Specialist, Northern General Hospital Sheffield.
Dr. Robert Young, Consultant Diabetologist, Salford
Dr. Rhys Williams, Lecturer in Community Medicine, University of Cambridge.
Professor Harry Keen, British Diabetic Association.
Mr. Michael Cooper, British Diabetic Association.
Miss Susan Knibbs, British Diabetic Association.
Dr. Doreen Rothman, Department of Health.
Mrs. Patricia Edwards, Department of Health.
Mr. John Garlick, Department of Health.

Crown Car Scheme

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number of national health service employees who use the Crown car scheme, or similar schemes, broken down between (a) nurses, (b) midwives, (c) health visitors, (d) community dental officers, (e) community medical officers, (f) managers and (g) works officers and other professional and technical staff.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not held centrally.

Contact Lenses

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment her Department has made of the risks of acanthamoeba and related eye infections to users of extended-wear disposable contact lenses; and when these risks were first brought to the attention of her Department;

(2) what steps she has taken to warn the public of the risks of acanthamoeba and related eye infections to users of extended-wear disposable contact lenses; and if she will review the procedures for warning the public of risks of this nature;

(3) what discussions she has had with representatives of (a) the ophthalmic professions and retail outlets and (b) lens manufacturers about the risks of acanthamoeba and related eye infections from certain types of contact lenses; and which hospitals have supplied her Department with figures relating to such cases.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department has been made aware of the risks of acanthamoeba and related eye infections to users of extended-wear disposable contact lenses from:

> A study published late last year from Moorfield's Eye Hospital;
>
> reports to the Department from the Manchester Eye Hospital, of a number of incidents of extended-wear contact lenses associated keratitis; and > three separate studies currently being carried out or completed at Moorfield's Eye Hospital. These are not yet fully analysed but preliminary results indicate that the incidence of contact lens associated keratitis is increasing as a result of a number of different factors.

These risks were first brought to the attention of the Department at the end of last year. The Department subsequently asked the College of Ophthalmologists to set up a working party to assess how these risks could be addressed. Since this time, meetings have been held with representatives of the College of Ophthalmologists, the British College of Optometry, the Institute of Optometry, the Association of British Dispensing Opticians and the Association of Optometrists. At these meetings it was agreed that information documents should be produced to help both eye care practitioners and the wearers of contact lenses.

A working group has been established under the chairmanship of the Department to discuss the detailed wording of these documents. The next meeting will take place at the beginning of December and this will be followed by discussions with the relevant contact lens manufacturers.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions she has had about the use of disclaimer forms by opticians to deprive extended-wear contact lens users of redress.

Dr. Mawhinney: None.

NHS Information

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 19 October, Official Report, column 87, what consultations will take place during her Department's review of NHS information with individuals and organisations outside her Department and the NHS management executive who make use of information currently collected by her Department.

Mr. Sackville: The current review of the Department of Health's requirements for information from the national health service included a study by management consultants of the uses made by the NHS of information collected on behalf of the Department and the burden it imposes. Proposals for reducing this burden are currently being drawn up by the Department. In considering these, I shall examine what wider consultation might be appropriate.

Written Answers to Questions

NORTHERN IRELAND

Irish Language

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures have been taken by Her Majesty's Government to promote the Irish language in education, including nursery, primary, secondary and university levels.

Mr. Hanley: Government do not directly promote the teaching of the Irish language but has, through the Education Reform (NI) Order 1989, provided a statutory curriculum for grant-aided schools in Northern Ireland within which any school may offer teaching of the Irish language if it so chooses.

The Department of Education also grant-aids two voluntary maintained primary schools in Belfast in which teaching is conducted through the medium of Irish. There is also an Irish-medium unit at Steeltown primary school, Londonderry.

The Department has not funded the provision of Irish-medium nursery schools, in the light of the financial priority which has had to be accorded to nursery education in general and the number of outstanding proposals for nursery schools.

In addition, the Department of Education has:

introduced a prescribed programme of study for Irish for pupils receiving their primary education through the medium of Irish;

provided for the development by the Northern Ireland Schools Examinations and Assessment Council of assessment materials in Irish for pupils receiving their primary education through the medium of Irish; and provided for the development by the Northern Ireland Schools Examinations and Assessment Council of a special Irish GCSE examination for pupils who have received their primary education through the medium of Irish.

Universities are autonomous and independent institutions and are, as such, entirely responsible for both the range and the content of courses provided by them including those involving Irish language.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many meetings of the Council of Ministers he has attended during the United Kingdom presidency of the European Council of Ministers.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: None.

Public Record Office

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many papers his Department has currently withdrawn from the Public Record Office; if he will list their titles; and when he estimates that they will be returned.

Mr. Mates: None. The Northern Ireland Office has been creating records only since 1972—hence no papers have been transferred to the Public Records Office. The Northern Ireland Departments transfer their records to the Public Records Office of Northern Ireland.

SCOTLAND

Council of Ministers

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many meetings of the Council of Ministers he has attended during the United Kingdom presidency of the European Council of Ministers.

Mr. Allan Stewart: My right hon. Friend has not attended any meetings of the Council of Ministers but my hon. Friend, the Minister of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland has attended two Councils; the Fisheries Council on 19 October as head of the United Kingdom delegation; and the Agriculture Council on 26 October. On the occasions where Scottish Office Ministers do not personally attend they are represented at all EC Council meetings by senior officials or by their colleagues in the United Kingdom Government.

Domestic Water Supply

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many domestic water disconnections have taken place in Scotland in each of the past 20 years;

(2) if he will specify the authority under which water authorities in Scotland are empowered to seek domestic disconnections.

Sir Hector Monro: Scottish water authorities have no statutory authority to seek permanent domestic disconnections. Water supplies to domestic consumers may be disconnected only for short term operational reasons, for example to undertake repairs, make connections or plumbing alterations. Information on the number of such disconnections is not held centrally.

Ernst and Young

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what tendering procedures were carried out by Highlands and Islands Enterprise prior to the awarding of a contract to Ernst and Young, to perform the former functions of Highlands and Islands Enterprise's management unit.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Highlands and Islands Enterprise carefully considered the experience of locally established firms and concluded that negotiations concentrating on value for money would be more appropriate than tendering. Discussions with Ernst and Young were conducted on this basis.

Road Accidents

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list, broken down by road user group and age category, the numbers of people (a) slightly injured, (b) seriously injured and (c) killed on (i) motorways, (ii) built up roads and (iii) non-built up roads in each local authority area in Scotland in each of the last five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested amounts to 220 pages and I am therefore arranging that it be lodged in the House of Commons Library.

Warrant Sales

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many warrant sales have been conducted in Scotland, in each of the past five years by sheriffdom.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Provisional figures for numbers of warrant sales reported to the Sheriff Courts from 1987 to 1991 are set out by sheriffdom in the table:

Sheriffdom	1987	1988	1989	1990	1991
Glasgow and Strathkelvin	63	69	43	44	41
Lothian and Borders	82	135	37	49	38
North Strathclyde	77	123	19	27	59
South Strathclyde	110	116	68	26	62
Tayside, Central and Fife	142	115	31	45	48
Grampian	227	156	81	42	75
TOTAL	701	714	279	233	323

Cash Limits

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what changes he intends to make to the cash limits for 1992-93 within his responsibility.

Mr. Lang: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates I intend to make changes to two cash limits:

a. The cash limit for class XV, vote 3, training programmes, roads and transport services and industrial support, Scotland will be increased by £948,000 from £712,741,000 to £713,689,000. The increase takes account of a £200,000 increase in provision for Scottish Enterprise in respect of European Community projects supported by the RECHAR programme; and to carry forward the £748,000 capital underspend on roads and transport in respect of end-year flexibility arrangements as announced by the Chief Secretary on 15 July 1992, Official Report, cols 698-702.

b. The cash limit for class XV, vote 13, education and arts and libraries, Scotland will be increased by £2,341,000 from £260,274,000 to £262,615,000. The increase reflects the full uptake of end-year flexibility as announced by the Chief Secretary on 15 July 1992, Official Report, cols 698-702.

All the increases are within the forecast outturn for the planning total included in the Chancellor's autumn statement today.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will announce details of the 1993-94 Scottish local government finance settlement.

Mr. Lang: In considering the settlement for next year I have taken account of the representations made to me by the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities; the additional burdens facing local authorities next year, particularly care in the community; the scope for authorities to make further efficiency savings; and the Government's policy on public sector pay.

I propose that aggregate external finance (AEF) should be set for 1993-94 at a total level of £5,147·3 million. This represents an increase in the 1992-93 provision for AEF of 3·2 per cent. after adjusting for:

(a) the transfer of responsibility for further education colleges to central Government; and

(b) the inclusion within the above total of £60·6 million to finance the full implementation of care in the community from 1 April 1993; and

(c) £3·8 million to meet the cost of grants for rates rebates on premises within enterprise zones and £2·8 million to meet the additional cost of grants for rates rebates on premises for disabled persons. From 1993-94 both of these grants will be treated as specific grants within AEF.

I propose that Government supported expenditure (GSE) for 1993-94 should be set at a level of £5,748 million, an increase of 2·75 per cent. on the 1992-93 figure after adjusting for the further education transfer and the inclusion of provision of £60·6 million within GSE for care in the community. I estimate that capital financing will require £725 million next year, leaving a residual amount for grant-aided expenditure (GAE)—excluding the above amount for care in the community—of £5,023 million, an increase of 2·6 per cent. over the adjusted 1992-93 GAE figure.

In determining the above AEF figure, I have assumed that local authorities will contribute £12 million to the next stage of unified business rate policy. Details of the total reduction which I plan to make in Scottish business rates next year are being announced separately.

I have the power to cap a Scottish local authority either where I consider that its planned expenditure is excessive or where there is an excessive increase in its planned expenditure as compared with the previous year. For 1993-94, my intended capping principles are:

1. Any increase in budget between 1992-93 and 1993-94 of more than 2·25 per cent. will be an excessive increase if the resulting budget is above the local authority's grant-aided expenditure (GAE) assessment for 1993-94;

2. Any increase in budget between 1992-93 and 1993-94 of more than 1·5 per cent. will be an excessive increase if the resulting budget is over 1 per cent. above the local authority's GAE assessment for 1993-94;

3. Any increase in budget between 1992-93 and 1993-94 of more than 1·0 per cent. will be an excessive increase if the resulting budget is over 5 per cent. above the local authority's GAE assessment for 1993-94;

4. Any increase in budget between 1992-93 and 1993-94 of more than 0·5 per cent. will be an excessive increase if the resulting budget is over 10 per cent. above the local authority's GAE assessment for 1993-94; and

5. Any budget for 1993-94 more than 12·5 per cent. above the local authority's GAE assessment will be excessive.

These principles are necessarily provisional. Before taking my decisions on capping, I will, of course, take into account all appropriate considerations.

This represents a realistic settlement, especially in view of the need to control public expenditure. If local authorities ensure that pay settlements are as near as possible to zero in the coming year and they maximise efficiency savings, there will be scope for real increases in service provision. If authorities do not budget responsibly, I shall not hesitate to use the capping powers available to me.

The settlement should also enable authorities to set council taxes at reasonable levels. I intend to introduce a council tax transitional relief scheme to ensure that households do not face large increases in their bills next year as a result of the change from the community charge to the council tax.

East Fortune Hospital

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the progress of the sale of the site and buildings of East Fortune hospital; and what undertakings are being given to prospective buyers about the relocation of the remaining patients and staff from the hospital.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 4 November 1992]: Several expressions of interest in the hospital land and buildings at East Fortune have been received. No undertakings have been given to prospective purchasers on the relocation of those patients and staff remaining at the hospital; only when appropriate alternative accommodation is available, and the NHS has no further use for these facilities, will a sale be progressed.

Forestry

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was (a) the proportion of broadleaves of the total planting in Scotland by (i) the Forestry Commission and (ii) private sector companies in the years 1988 to 1992, (b) the hectarage of non-surplus plantations, buildings and plantable land sold and the sum raised by the sales since 1985, (c) the hectarage of non-surplus plantations sold and the sum raised by the sales since 1985 and (d) the hectarage of land sold by the Forestry Commission whether surplus or non-surplus where public access has been preserved by agreement since 1985.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 11 November 1992]: Between 1 April 1988 and 31 March 1992, some 7 per cent. (1,943 hectares) of the Forestry Commission's total planting in Scotland was with broadleaves. The equivalent figure for grant-aided planting by the private sector was 20 per cent. (12,862 hectares).

The Forestry Commission's plantations are not classified as surplus or non-surplus. The total area of land sold by the commission between 1 April 1985 and 31 March 1992, including plantations, buildings and plantable land, was 66,323 hectares, of which 34,767 hectares comprised plantations. The total sum realised was £96·7 million, of which £53·0 million came from the sale of 41,807 hectares of forest land, including plantations, plantable land, and associated land. The sum realised from the sale of plantations is not recorded separately.

Public rights of way over land sold by the Forestry Commission are, of course, legally protected. Arrangements for preserving more general public access to such land were put in place in October 1991. Under these arrangements the commission offers to enter into an access agreement with the appropriate local authority before individual woodlands which have enjoyed unencumbered public access are put up for sale. Two such access agreements have been entered into to date, involving a total area of 68·4 hectares, but the sale of only one of these has so far been completed, covering an area of 21·4 hectares. Other agreements are being negotiated.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was (a) the value of the planting grants made to the private forestry sector in Scotland, (b) the amount of forest recreation and amenity subsidy made to the Forestry Commission in Scotland and in England and Wales, (c) the amount of forest recreation and amenity subsidy made to each Scottish conservancy of the Forestry Commission and (d) the sums spent on visitor facilities in each of the conservancies in Scotland, in each year since 31 March 1988, in each case giving also the figures adjusted for inflation.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 11 November 1992]: The information is given in the tables, with the figures updated to 1992 prices being shown in brackets.

Further and Higher Education

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the extent of the market research commissioned by his Department to sample the views of students, potential students and people in the wider community in respect of further and higher education in Scotland; and if he will make available the questions to be asked and the results; and who within the wider community will be consulted.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 9 November 1992]: As part of the process of preparation of the Scottish further and higher education charter, the Scottish Office Education Department has commissioned market research. It will seek the views of a representative sample of almost 1,000 people in Scotland, approximately half of whom will be current or potential students in further and higher education, and the others a cross-section of the population including parents of students and others in the wider community.

The aim of the research is to ascertain what consumers expect of futher and higher education services, what aspects of such provision they regard as most essential, and what they would expect to see in a charter for further and higher education.

The findings will be used to inform the preparation of the charter. No decision has yet been made about the separate publication of the findings or of the questions asked.

In addition to the research, widespread consultation with a range of educational, employment and student bodies has already been undertaken; further consultation on the development of the charter will be carried out.

Drinking Water

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration he is giving to the 10 micrograms of lead per litre of water recommended by the World Health Organisation; what level is recommended by the EC drinking water directive; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 9 November 1992]: It is expected that the World Health Organisation will recommend a new guideline for lead in drinking water in mid-1993. My right hon. Friend is considering this carefully as part of the review of public exposure to lead in drinking water announced in "Scotland's Health—A challenge to us all" published in July this year.

The EC Drinking Water Directive sets a maximum admissible concentration of lead of 50 micrograms per litre in running water. Where lead pipes are present the directive recommends that the lead content should not exceed 50 micrograms per litre in a sample taken after flushing. The directive also recommends that if the sample is taken either directly or after flushing and the lead content either frequently or to an appreciable extent exceeds 100 micrograms per litre, suitable measures must be taken to reduce the exposure to lead on the part of the consumer. The United Kingdom regulatory standard of 50 micrograms per litre in any sample is tighter than that in the directive.

Domestic Rates

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many appeals are still outstanding relating to bills received under the old domestic rating system.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 9 November 1992]: There are no such valuation appeals outstanding.

Business Rates

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many appeals were still outstanding on 1 November relating to bills received under business rates.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 9 November 1992]: There were 6,973 valuation appeals outstanding from the 1990 revaluation.

Science Education

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to review the teaching of science in (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools in view of the findings of the science assessment of achievement programme; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 10 November 1992]: National guidelines on environmental studies from age five to 14 will be published in the next few months. These contain advice on the teaching of science in primary schools and the first two years of secondary schools. They will take account of the findings of the science assessment of achievement programme. We expect the guidelines to enhance the quality of science teaching, and the progress which pupils make in this subject up to the age of 14.

Any review of the teaching of science in the later years of secondary schooling will be in the context of the Government's response to the proposals on which we are currently consulting for the 14 to 18 curriculum.

Hake

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what steps are taken to ensure non-sector boats keep within hake quota limits within west of Scotland waters;

(2) what measures are taken to monitor boats fishing for hake in west of Scotland waters.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 11 November 1992]: All vessels fishing in the waters off the west coast of Scotland are subject to inspection by officers of the Scottish Fisheries Protection Agency. In 1991, 1,130 fishing vessels were inspected by the agency's fishery protection vessels in west coast waters and over 35,000 landings of whitefish were inspected at Scottish ports. These control measures apply to hake and other species. They are designed to ensure that vessels catch and land only the species for which they are licensed and that the quantities landed by vessels fishing against non-sector allocations do not exceed their quotas. All landings are individually recorded on a computer system to show the quantities and species landed by each vessel.

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what quota arrangements currently exist for hake as applicable to the west coast of Scotland.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 11 November 1992]: Quotas for Western hake this year have been managed by two Scottish producer organisations (the Scottish Fishermen's Organisation and the North East of Scotland PO), the two Irish Producer Organisations (NIFPO and ANIFPO), and two English Producer Organisations (Fleetwood and Cornish). A copy of the rules on the quota management arrangements for white fish stocks in 1992 has been placed in the Library. Almost 54 per cent. of this year's quota is allocated to the rest of the fleet and is managed by Fisheries Departments which set monthly limits on vessel's landings, following consultation with relevant fishing interests.

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland to what extent Scottish Producers Organisation hake quotas were reduced part way through the quota year for west of Scotland waters; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 11 November 1992]: The methodology for allocating the United Kingdom quota of Western hake, and area VII anglers and megrim, to producer organisations and vessels in the non-sector was adjusted this year to take account of vessels which were de-registered in 1989, under the Merchant Shipping Act 1988, and which subsequently rejoined the United Kingdom fleet.

In accordance with the timetable for issue of allocations, agreed with the industry, producer organisations were advised on 9 March of their provision allocation and had two weeks to make representations. No representations were received from the Scottish producers organisations and final allocations were issued on 15 April.

Fishing Boats

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what restrictions exist to limit numbers of boats registered in the ports of Ayr, Troon and Girvan.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 11 November 1992]: Fishing vessel numbers are restricted through the licensing scheme established under the terms of the Sea Fish (Conservation) Act 1967. Questions relating to the registration of vessels, including fishing vessels, are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Transport.

Health Boards

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last considered the relevance and appropriateness of the criteria employed in the recruitment and selection of persons for health boards in accordance with the procedure in paragraph 52 of "Questions of Procedure for Ministers".

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 11 November 1992]: My right hon. Friend keeps the relevance and appropriateness of the criteria for selection of non-executive members of health boards under review, and this year has widened the base of selection for appointments currently under consideration through press advertisements and approaches to a greatly increased number of organisations.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the current ratios of members of health boards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 11 November 1992]: Current health board member ratios, approximately, are:

Male:female = 3:1

Non-executive:executive = 3:2

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Mortgage Repossessions

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many court actions for mortgage repossessions were made at Nelson county court in each year since 1987.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The table shows the total number of mortgage possession actions entered in Nelson county court for each year from 1987. At this stage the 1992 figure is provisional and therefore liable to revision in the future.

Immigration Appeals

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department on what date Mr. J. I. Disley was appointed an adjudicator for the conduct of immigration appeal tribunal hearings; how many complaints of alleged unfair treatment by appellants or sponsors have been made about Mr. Disley's conduct of proceedings; and how many have been found to be (a) substantiated and (b) unsubstantiated.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Mr. J. R. Disley (sic) was appointed as an adjudicator of immigration appeals on 1 May 1991. Most appellants complain about the conduct of proceedings by an adjudicator by appealing to the immigration appeal tribunal. No statistics are maintained of the number of cases determined by individual adjudicators and taken to the tribunal. Complaints are also sometimes made to the chief adjudicator. There has been one such complaint in relation to proceedings conducted by Mr. Disley but it was sub judice at the time and the matter was dealt with as part of the appeal by the tribunal which ultimately dismissed the appeal. The chief adjudicator sees every tribunal determination and where necessarry he or the appropriate regional adjudicator brings the matter to the attention of the adjudicator concerned.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many complaints of alleged unfair treatment by an adjudicator at immigration appeal hearings have been lodged with the chief adjudicator of immigration appeals, in each of the last five years; and how many have been found to be (a) substantiated and (b) unsubstantiated.

Mr. John M. Taylor: No statistics have been maintained as to complaints made directly to the chief adjudicator.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the workload expected to be undertaken by persons appointed to be adjudicators at immigration appeal tribunal hearings.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Adjudicators of immigration appeals (as opposed to immigration appeal tribunal members) who are full time normally sit for five days each week as and when required, including, where necessary, weekends and public holidays. They are allowed 30 days leave a year plus 10½ days public holidays and privilege days (or days in lieu of these). Part-time adjudicators sit for a seven-hour day. The Lord Chancellor expects part-time adjudicators to sit for at least 20 days but not more than 50 days a year (unless the person concerned is retired or a consultant in which case the maximum can be relaxed to 70 days). The precise number of days sat will vary within these parameters.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the current remuneration of adjudicators at immigration appeal tribunal hearings, including any expenses; and what was the level from which it was last raised.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The current remuneration of full-time adjudicators of immigration appeals (as opposed to immigration appeal tribunal members) is £52,520 a year. Part-time adjudicators are paid a daily fee of £215. These figures were raised in April 1992 from £50,500 and £207 respectively. Since full-time adjudicators are allocated to a particular hearing centre the question of expenses does not usually arise. Part-time adjudicators are entitled to a first class rail fare to and from the hearing centre (or a mileage allowance if a private car is used). Where their total time exceeds seven hours they are entitled to claim additional expenses for writing up determinations pro rata to their daily fee.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the current number of immigration appeal tribunal adjudicators; and if he will give details of sex, age, ethnic background and professional or other qualification.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The relevant information relating to immigration adjudicators (who are not part of the immigration appeal tribunal which deals with appeals from decisions of the adjudicators) is as follows.

There are 17 full-time adjudicators. They are all men. Their ages are 41, 47, 50, 57 (two adjudicators), 59, (two adjudicators), 60 (four adjudicators), 61, 62, 65 (two adjudicators), 67 and 68. Two of them are known to be from the ethnic minorities. Eight are barristers, seven are solicitors, one is a Scottish advocate and one is an experienced civil servant with a history degree.

There are 81 part-time adjudicators: 63 are men and 18 are women. Their ages are 36, 37 (two adjudicators), 39 (two adjudicators), 40 (four adjudicators), 41 (two adjudicators), 42 (six adjudicators), 43, 44 (three adjudicators), 46 (three adjudicators), 47 (seven adjudicators), 48 (three adjudicators), 49 (two adjudicators), 52 (four adjudicators), 53, 54 (four adjudicators), 55 (three adjudicators), 56, 57 (three adjudicators), 58, 60 (three adjudicators), 61 (four adjudicators), 62 (five adjudicators), 62 (two adjudicators), 64 (two adjudicators), 65, 66 (four adjudicators), 67 (two adjudicators), 68, 69, 70 (two adjudicators) and 71. Four are known to be from the ethnic minorities. Twenty-nine are barristers, 50 are solicitors, one is an academic lawyer and one is a non-law graduate.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many immigration appeal tribunal adjudicators have been removed in each of the last five years following complaints of alleged unfair treatment by appellants or sponsors about the adjudicator which have been found to be substantiated.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Adjudicators of immigration appeals are not part of the immigration appeal tribunal which has appellate jurisdiction over decisions of the adjudicators. No adjudicator has been removed in any of the last five years.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what action the chief adjudicator of immigration appeals takes when a complaint of alleged unfair treatment at an immigration appeal hearing by an adjudicator is found to be substantiated.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Most appellants complain about the conduct of proceedings by an adjudicator by appealing to the immigration appeal tribunal. The chief adjudicator sees every tribunal determination and where necessary he or the appropriate regional adjudicator bring the matter to the attention of the adjudicator concerned. Where there is a direct complaint to the chief adjudicator he refers the matter to that adjudicator and, where he feels it sufficiently serious, to the Lord Chancellor.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department whether those making complaints of alleged unfair treatment by an adjudicator at immigration appeal hearings to the chief adjudicator are interviewed to obtain precise details of such complaints.

Mr. John M. Taylor: If complainants seek an interview with the chief adjudicator it is never refused.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department by what process the chief adjudicator of immigration appeals investigates complaints of alleged unfairness in the conduct of appeal hearings by an adjudicator.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Most appellants complain about the proceedings by an adjudicator by appealing to the immigration appeal tribunal. The chief adjudicator sees all determinations by the tribunal and where necessary he or the appropriate regional adjudicator bring the matter to the attention of the adjudicator concerned. Complaints may also be made directly to the chief adjudicator who will investigate the complaint, seek the comments of the adjudicator concerned and respond as he thinks appropriate.

Legal Aid

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what measures he is proposing to take to restrain the rate of growth in legal aid expenditure.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Government's plans for legal aid expenditure over the next three years have been published today. They provide for the net cost of legal aid in England and Wales to grow to £1,284 million in 1993-94, £1,406 million in 1994-95 and £1,528 million in 1995-96. Five years ago spending was £426 million. Legal aid spending will continue to grow rapidly during the next three years, on average by 10 per cent. a year from present levels. A number of measures will be necessary to ensure that legal aid spending does not rise even faster.

As far as financial eligibility is concerned, the Government's objective is to strengthen the legally aided client's financial interest in the progress of the case, and to bring the means assessment for legal aid more closely into line with that used for other means-tested benefits. The Lord Chancellor intends to lay regulations to provide that, from 1 April 1993, the lower income limit for civil legal aid (ie the limit of disposable income below which an applicant for legal aid pays no contribution) will be reduced to the equivalent income support limit. This means that, on current figures, the limit will be reduced from £3,060 per annum to £2,213 per annum.

The Lord Chancellor also intends to lay regulations providing that, from 1 April 1993, dependants allowances for civil legal aid will be reduced to income support levels.

Equivalent changes will be made to the financial eligibility regimes for criminal legal aid and advice and assistance.

The upper eligibility limits for civil legal aid (ie the limits of disposable income above which an applicant for civil legal aid ceases to be eligible for assistance) will not be increased in April 1993.

The Lord Chancellor intends to lay regulations providing that, from 1 April 1993, all those granted civil legal aid will be required to pay a contribution of one-third of their disposable income above the lower limit and that such contributions should continue for the life of the case. Equivalent provisions will be made in respect of criminal legal aid, and assistance by way of representation.

The Lord Chancellor also intends to lay regulations providing that only those who would qualify for assistance free of contribution shall, in future, be able to receive advice and assistance under the green form scheme.

In respect of remuneration, as he has already announced, the Lord Chancellor intends to introduce standard fees in the magistrates courts at the beginning of next year.

The Lord Chancellor will then be taking steps to extend the existing standard fee scheme in the Crown Court to cover more cases. He will also be introducing a fixed hourly rate of payment for solicitors in civil non-matrimonial cases which are legally aided, and taking corresponding steps to gain control over legal aid payments made to barristers in those cases. He intends in setting these rates and fee levels to have regard to whatever rate would attract sufficient firms or barristers to do the work, while maintaining appropriate levels of quality.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Know-how Funds

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what monitoring procedures of the maintenance of human rights accompanies the payment of moneys under the terms of the know-how fund; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The know-how fund provides British expertise to the relevant countries rather than making payments of money. The purpose of the fund is to promote progress towards the market economy and democracy, including human rights. The human rights situation is monitored both bilaterally and through multilateral bodies such as CSCE and the Council of Europe.

Cash Limits

Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what changes have been made in the 1992-93 cash limit for expenditure by the Overseas Development Administration.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit on the external assistance vote (class II vote 5) will be increased by £54,184,000 from £1,743,015,000 to £1,797,199,000. Included in this amount are additional resources of £14,091,000 for the United Kingdom subscription costs to the European bank of reconstruction and development; £2,966,000 for the finacial sector scheme for the former Soviet Union (FSU); £315,000 to cover transport costs of the delivery of the United Kingdom share of emergency EC food aid to the FSU last winter and a transfer of £150,000 from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for assistance to the FSU food sector. Also included is a further transfer of £450,000 from the Department of the Environment for conservation work in Africa. The balance of the increase is for rollover of underspend against 1991-92 EC attribution provision, £15 million of which has been allocated for additional humanitarian relief for former Yugoslavia. The running costs limit for the ODA has been increased by £432,000 from £46,922,000 to £47,354,000. This includes £224,000 in respect of end of year flexibility arrangements, a transfer of £58,000 from Property Holdings and £150,000 from existing resources to cover additional costs of administering the programme of assistance to eastern Europe and the FSU. All the increases are within the forecast outturn for the planning total included in the Chancellor's autumn statement today.

ADMINISTRATION COMMITTEE

Disabled People

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee what efforts are being made to ensure that people with disabilities can gain access to the Palace of Westminster while lobbying Parliament.

Mr. Martin: The provisions which exist within the Palace of Westminster for the assistance of disabled people are set out in the leaflet "Arrangements for the Assistance of Disabled Visitors". I am arranging for a copy to be sent to the hon. Member. In the event of mass lobbies involving disabled people, special arrangements are made for their reception and admission to Westminster Hall and additional seating, heating and lavatories are provided. Special arrangements are also made when disabled persons need to reach other parts of the building.

A stairlift was installed on the staircase leading to the Grand Committee Room earlier this year and handrails have been fitted to the steps down to the "W" rooms off Westminster Hall to assist those attending meetings. A comprehensive study by consultants has been commissioned to look at additional means of improving access for disabled people to the main public areas. Its recommendations will be considered by my Committee at the earliest opportunity.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police (Equality of Service)

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what effect he expects the application of the citizens charter to the police to have on equality of service in response times to emergency and other inquiries.

Mr. Charles Wardle: A comprehensive set of performance indicators for the police service will be introduced at the end of this year. From April 1993, every police force will be required to set and publish standards of performance for responding to emergencies and telephone enquiries, and publish the achievement of these standards. This fulfils the commitment in the citizens charter that all police forces are expected to set and publish target times for answering telephone calls and arriving at the scene of incidents which require rapid reaction. Work is currently underway in police forces to implement the service's own quality of service initiative by setting standards for the quality of service to be delivered to the public. Every member of the community will know the level of service which they are entitled to expect from their local police.

Primates

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the differences between the minimum standards for primates set out in the Home Office code of practice for the housing and care of animals used in scientific procedures and those applicable to premises in which primates are held for other purposes, including zoos.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Home Office code of practice for the housing and care of animals used in scientific procedures is similar in content to the Laboratory Animals Breeders Association guidelines in relation to primates.

The Home Office code of practice is also broadly similar in content and range to section 9 of the "Standards of Modern Zoo Practice", issued by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, although the Home Office code is more detailed with regard to the temperatures, lighting, ventilation, noise, humidity and space requirements for the housing of animals, and deals separately with the particular needs of primates. The "Standards of Modern Zoos Practice" contain additional requirements relating to hazards from machinery, supervision of controlled drugs, post mortem facilities and safety of the public.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will consider consulting a range of independent primatologists and to establish what standards of housing and care are suitable for primates used in research as part of a wider review on the care and use of laboratory primates.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Home Office animals (scientific procedures) inspectorate has regular contacts with experts in the field of primate care, and draws on the knowledge thus gained in assessing and monitoring projects involving the use of primates. Such contacts have also informed the review of facilities for large primates which the inspectorate is currently carrying out, and will contribute to the consideration being given to a possible code of practice for breeding establishments.

I understand that the animal procedures committee may also consult other experts in the course of the review of laboratory primates which it is conducting.

Prisoners' Release Dates

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information is provided to prisoners of changes in their release dates.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: When prisoners' release dates change, they are advised of their existing dates of release, the number of days by which these have altered, the reasons for the changes and their new dates of release.

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in what circumstances prisoners can be detained once their sentence expiry date has passed.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Prisoners may be detained on the expiry of their sentences where a court has directed this in respect of other proceedings or if they have been ordered to be detained under the Immigration Act 1971.

Visas

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of refusals of visas broken down by country of application for 1991; and what is the current waiting time for refusal in each case.

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of applicants from (a) Third world countries and (b) the United States of America were refused short stay visas to enter the United Kingdom in the first six months of 1992.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The latest information by country of application for grants and refusals of visa applications to enter the United Kingdom, both for settlement and non-settlement is for 1991 and is given in the table. There is no visa requirement for citizens of the United States of America. The information on waiting times for refusal is not held centrally.

Aggravated Vehicle Taking Act

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons have been convicted of offences specified in the Aggravated Vehicle Taking Act 1992 since it received Royal Assent; what assessment he has made of whether the Act is deterring the taking away of vehicles without consent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: Court proceedings data under the Aggravated Vehicle Taking Act 1992, which did not come into force until April 1992, will not be available until autumn 1993. It is therefore too early to say what effect the Act may have in deterring the taking away of vehicles without consent.

Probation Service

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list, by police authority area, the number of probation officers employed for each year since 1987.

Mr. Jack: The numbers are as follows:

Some probation areas have small areas not falling within the one police force area (eg the Metropolitan police covers part of Hertfordshire).

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what additional funding has been provided for the probation service, in each police authority area, as at 1 October, to reflect the demands imposed by the Criminal Justice Act 1991.

Mr. Jack: In 1992-93 current grant support of £276 million has been allocated to probation areas as set out in the following table. This total provides for 560 additional probation staff to take account of the estimated first-year demands placed on area services by the Criminal Justice Act 1991. The information requested cannot be broken down by police area.

Asylum

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what number of asylum seekers have sought judicial review of their cases in each of the past three years.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I understand from the Lord Chancellor's Department that in 1990 there were 102 asylum-related applications for leave to move for judicial review; in 1991 the figure was 95 and in the first half of 1992, 68. The information before 1990 can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what number of cases of exceptional leave to remain given to asylum applicants have been terminated in the past three years; and under what circumstances.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The available information, which may not be fully reliable, is given in the table.

Exceptional leave is given to certain asylum applicants who are found not to be refugees under the 1951 United Nations convention if it would be unreasonable or impracticable in all the circumstances of the case to seek to enforce their return to the country of origin. Leave is usually given initially for a year but applicants may apply for extensions, and for settlement after seven years with exceptional leave status. The decision as to whether to grant an extension is based on the individual circumstances of the case including where relevant, the practicability of removal at that stage.

Police Authorities

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what representations he has received from the Association of Metropolitan Authorities about maintaining the present composition of local police authorities;

(2) what representations he has received from the Association of County Councils about maintaining the present composition of local police authorities;

(3) what representations he has received from the Association of Chief Police Officers about maintaining the present composition of local police authorities;

(4) what representations he has received from the Police Federation about maintaining the present composition of local police authorities.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Ministers and officials have discussed this subject on several occasions with various representatives of those bodies. My right hon. and learned Friend is due to meet the chairmen of the local authority associations on 7 December to hear their views about the future development of the police service.

Drug Traffickers (Assets)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide a table showing for each police area in England and Wales for each year since the power was introduced (a) the number of applications for an order for the confiscation of the assets of drug traffickers, (b) the number of applications approved and (c) the value of assets seized in that year.

Mr. Jack: Information is not available by police area, nor in the form requested at (a). As regards (b), details of the confiscation orders made under the Drug Trafficking Offences Act 1986 between 1987 and 1990 are given in the table.

As regards (c), the amount of money actually realised was £1·1 million in 1989-90 and £1·45 million in 1990-91. Recent estimates show that a cumulative total of £35 million had been ordered to be confiscated under the 1986 Act up to May 1992, of which £15 million has either been realised or is subject to receivership. I would also refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for South Hams (Mr. Steen) on 20 October, Official Report, columns 262-63.

Electoral Registration

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the shortfall between the estimated population eligible for inclusion in electoral registers and those who are on current electoral registers.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Coventry, North-West (Mr. Robinson) on 9 November, Official Report, column 630.

Police Overtime

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what constraints he has placed on police overtime in England and Wales during the last three months; and what circulars or instructions have been issued to police committees on the subject of expenditure since April 1992.

Mr. Charles Wardle: It is the responsibility of a police authority to allocate its resources so as to provide an efficient service. The use of police overtime is a matter for individual police authorities.

The following Home Office circulars which bear on the subject of expenditure have been issued since April 1992:

Circular	Title
41/92	The Police (Amendment) Regulation 1990
50/92	Capital Expenditure etc
55/92	Amendment to Circular 41/92, The Police (Amendment) Regulation 1990
68/92	Financing of the Common Police Services
77/92	Police Pension Scheme
89/92	Special Constables Sick Pay
92/92	Revision of Management of Police Building Programme etc
97/92	Charges for Road Traffic Reports etc
98/92	Pay of Chief Constables etc

Prisoners

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide a table showing the total number of persons sentenced to custody in England and Wales during August, September and October 1992, and for the same months in 1991; and if he will provide the figures for each police authority in each month of 1992 to date.

Mr. Jack: Provisional 1991 sentencing data will not be available until the end of 1992. 1992 data will not be available until autumn 1993.

Immigration (Carriers Liability)

Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the value of outstanding charges levied on carriers under the Immigration (Carriers' Liability) Act 1987; and what steps are being taken to recover this money from the carriers concerned.

Mr. Charles Wardle: On 6 November 1992, a total of £24,114,000 was unpaid. Payments are demanded as and when charges are incurred. The immigration service has recently written to 133 carriers with unpaid charges which arose before 1 July 1992 requesting payment.

Cash Limits

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has for changes to the 1992-93 cash limits within his responsibilities and to his Department's running costs limit.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for Home Office administration, immigration and police support services, England and Wales (class IX, vote 3) will be reduced by £1,281,000 from £1,243,473,000 to £1,242,192,000 to reflect the following transfers of responsibility:

- (i) magistrates courts to the Lord Chancellor's Department;
- (ii) social work training to the Department of Education;
- (iii) juvenile remand accommodation to the Welsh Office;
- (iv) dog byelaw administration to the Department of the Environment; and

(v) broadcasting and sports ground safety to the Department of National Heritage.

The Home Office running costs limit is similarly reduced, by £944,000 from £1,450,020,000 to £1,449,076,000.

Forensic Science Service

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the annual report for the forensic science service; and if he will make a statement about the financial targets for 1992-93.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have today placed copies of the forensic science service's annual report and accounts for 1991-92 in the Library of the House. Further copies can be obtained from FSS headquarters.

I announced on 14 May at column 207 financial and service level targets for the forensic science service for 1992-93 based on a forecast out-turn for 1991-92. The actual out-turn for 1991-92 was better than originally forecast, meaning that the unit cost and associated unit cost efficiency targets were not sufficiently challenging. I have, therefore, agreed that the unit cost target should be £456·86, with a unit cost productivity gain of 1·8 per cent. These targets are more exacting than those originally set. The other performance targets remain the same.

Criminal Welfare

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions were brought by the police relating to criminal welfare; and how many were successful.

Mr. Jack: The information is given in the table. Provisional 1991 data will be available by the end of 1992.

Number of prosecutions brought by the police for offences relating to animal welfare by result, 1990

England and Wales

Vehicle Marking

Mrs. Chaplin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police forces have adopted vehicle marking schemes.

Mr. Jack [pursuant to his answer, 22 October 1992, column 374]: I wish to advise that vehicle watch schemes —some force-wide, some more local—are now operating in 27 police force areas in England; the four Welsh force areas are covered by the all-Wales vehicle watch scheme. A proprietary scheme called "Match Up" has been introduced in five police force areas in England; two of these forces also operate vehicle watch schemes.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Green Issues

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Lord President of the Council who in his Department has been appointed to oversee and develop green issues; how many civil servants have been allocated new or additional responsibilities to deal with the management and development of green issues; and what additional allocation of resources has been made to support programmes related to green issues in his Department.

Mr. Newton: The Privy Council Office participates in initiatives on recycling and energy conservation. Given its size (32 staff), it would be inappropriate to devote particular posts or resources to issues of this kind.

Public Record Office

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many papers his Department has currently withdrawn from the Public Record Office; if he will list their titles; and when he estimates that they will be returned.

Mr. Newton: The Privy Council Office currently holds three volumes of Council papers dating from the early 18th century and a small number of papers relating to chartered corporations founded in the 19th century, for purposes of research. All will be returned to the Public Record Office in due course.

DEFENCE

Trident

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when testing of the warheads for missiles on the Trident submarine will be complete.

Mr. Aitken: The underground testing programme for development of our Trident warhead is complete, and the warhead is now in production.

Nuclear Tests

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many nuclear tests have been allocated to Britain in the new limited programme in the United States for 1993 to 1996; and what financial arrangements now exist between Britain and the United States of America to enable tests to continue.

Mr. Aitken: United States legislation provides for the United Kingdom to carry out three tests between 1 July 1993 and 30 September 1996. United Kingdom nuclear tests are carried out at the Nevada test site under the 1958 agreement between the United Kingdom and United States Governments for co-operation on the uses of atomic energy for mutual defence purposes.

Tactical Weapons

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether work has started at the atomic weapons establishment at Aldermaston on the design of a new tactical warhead; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: Preliminary work has begun on the design of a warhead that could be suitable for a replacement for the WE177 free-fall bomb.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what options, other than a tactical air-to-surface missile, are being studied for the replacement of the WE177 free-fall nuclear bomb.

Mr. Aitken: We are continuing to study a range of possible options for the eventual replacement of the WE177. No decision has yet been taken.

Challenger II

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will authorise the release by his Department of a Challenger II prototype to take part in the contest for the Swedish requirement of 200 tanks.

Mr. Aitken: It is a matter for Vicker's commercial judgment to decide the allocation of priorities for the Challenger 2 prototypes.

Defence Research Agency

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his oral answer to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) of 27 October, Official Report, column 852, if he will make a further statement on the links between the Chilean military and the British Defence Research Agency.

Mr. Aitken: The Aberporth range referred to by the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) in his question of 27 October is no longer the responsibility of the Defence Research Agency (DRA). It was transferred to the newly-formed directorate general of test and evaluation (DGT&E) on 1 April 1992. Neither whilst Aberporth belonged to the DRA, nor since then, has the DRA had any formal or direct links with the Chilean military. One Chilean officer visited the site two years ago.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on procedures used in the measurement and categorisation of radioactive waste at the atomic weapons establishment Aldermaston.

Mr. Aitken: The procedures used in the measurement and categorisation of radioactive wastes at AWE Aldermaston are very similar to and of equivalent quality to the procedures used elsewhere in the United Kingdom nuclear industry.

Public Record Office

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many papers his Department has currently withdrawn from the Public Record Office; if he will list their titles; and when he estimates that they will be returned.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As at 6 November 1992, some 1,697 pieces were on loan to the Ministry of Defence. It is not possible to list the title of each without disproportionate cost.

The MOD, like all Government Departments, has a statutory right, under the Public Records Act, to retrieve records temporarily from the Public Record Office for its own administrative use. Records which are in the public domain but on loan to the MOD are returned as soon as departmental action has been completed. There are well established procedures to ensure that the public continues to have access whilst the records are on loan.

RAF Bands (Sponsorship)

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the sponsorship by Superkings cigarettes of the recent concert tour of the massed bands of the Royal Air Force.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The concert tour—which this year was held between 24 October and 1 November—is organised and sponsored annually on behalf of the Royal Air Force Benevolent Fund by the fund's commercial arm, the international air tattoo. Neither the fund nor the tattoo have any formal links with the Ministry of Defence, and make their own sponsorship arrangement for the concert tour. The international air tattoo has negotiated with 11 commercial firms for financial and other assistance to offset their costs in arranging the concert tour, which provides excellent public relations for the RAF and makes an invaluable contribution to the RAF Benevolent Fund's charitable efforts.

Amphibious Forces

Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made on the provisions for amphibious forces announced by the Minister of State for Defence Procurement in the House on 13 February.

Mr. Aitken: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) on 11 November, Official Report, column 823.

Fleet Maintenance and Repair Organisation

Mr. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has yet reached a decision on the future of the fleet maintenance and repair organisation, Portsmouth.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As part of our continuing efforts to find the most cost-effective arrangements for the support of the Fleet, we propose to cease all ship refits at the Fleet Maintenance and Repair Organisation (FMRO) in Portsmouth. Such work will in future be undertaken in the Royal dockyards and industry. The FMRO will continue to undertake repair, maintenance and enhancement work for ships based at Portsmouth, and unprogrammed work in respect of defects in operational ships. We expect that some 400 civilian staff would be affected by this proposal. Every effort will be made to find alternative employment in the Ministry of Defence or other Government Departments, but some redundancies may be unavoidable. Where that is the case, staff will be eligible for compensation under the relevant pension scheme and for counselling on alternative employment prospects.

This proposal is the subject of consultation with the trade unions and final decisions will be taken in the light of any representations made by interested parties. A copy of the consultative document has been placed in the Library of the House.

We also plan to market test the FMRO. This will be the subject of separate consultation with the trade unions.

Sea Training

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the future of operational sea training for the Royal Navy and Portland naval base.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As part of our continuing work to achieve the best balance between the front line and support we are proposing to transfer the Royal Navy's operational sea training (OST) base from Portland to Devonport and to close Portland naval base by April 1996.

This proposal will save some £70 million over the next ten years and some £11 million per annum thereafter. Some 550 service and 475 civilian personnel will be affected by the proposal. While every effort will be made to redeploy civilian staff within the Ministry of Defence or with other Government Departments, some redundancies may be unavoidable. Where that is the case, staff will be eligible for compensation under the relevant pension scheme and for counselling on alternative employment prospects.

Some 1,200 naval personnel and 200 MOD civilians will continue to be based at the royal naval air station at Portland, which will remain in operation.

This proposal is the subject of consultation with the trade unions and final decisions will be taken in the light of any representations made by interested parties. A copy of the consultative document has been placed in the Library of the House.

PRIME MINISTER

Maastricht Treaty

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister what consideration has been given to publishing an explanatory booklet on Maastricht for general distribution to all United Kingdom households.

The Prime Minister: The Government's pamphlet on the European Community and the Maastricht treaty was published on 10 November. It will not be sent to every household, but copies are being distributed to all right hon. and hon. Members, public libraries and other institutions and are available free on request. Freepost and freephone facilities are being provided.

The freepost address is PO Box 1992, Burgess hill, West Sussex. The freephone number is 0800 778866.

Government Publications

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list for each of the past 20 years the booklets or leaflets published by the Government and distributed free of charge to all households in the United Kingdom giving the publication costs in each case in 1992 prices.

The Prime Minister: This information is not available centrally.

Pay Fixing

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister what statutory bases there are for pay fixing, other than wages councils; and what plans there are for their abolition in each case.

The Prime Minister: The Agricultural Wages Board (AWB) has statutory powers under the Agricultural Wages Act 1948 to set wages for agricultural workers in England and Wales. Separate legislation and boards exist for Scotland and Northern Ireland. Wages orders made by the AWB enable the United Kingdom to fulfil two conventions of the International Labour Organisation (ILO) and these cannot legally be reviewed until the second half of next year and 1994. Decisions on the future of agricultural wages legislation will be taken when we are able to review our ILO commitments.

Engagements

Dr. Wright: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 12 November.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 12 November.

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 12 November.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today.

Cash Limits

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Prime Minister what proposals there are to change the 1992-93 cash limit or running costs limit for the Cabinet Office: other services vote.

The Prime Minister: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for the Cabinet Office: other services vote (class XIX vote 2) will be increased by £2,000,000 from £23,647,000 to £25,647,000. This increase reflects take-up under the end year flexibility arrangements for capital expenditure as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 15 July 1992 (Official Report, columns 698-702). Also, the running costs limit for this vote will be reduced by £120,000 from £20,410,000 to £20,290,000, reflecting the transfer of certain administrative functions following the machinery of Government changes announced after the general election. All the changes are within the forecast outturn for the planning total included in the Chancellor's autumn statement today.

Meetings

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Prime Minister what advice he gives to Ministers in respect of the time within which a request from an hon. Member for a meeting should be acknowledged and replied to.

The Prime Minister: It is for Ministers in each Department to decide how such requests are handled.

Political Parties (Funding)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to make funding available to political parties for security costs associated with the annual party conferences.

The Prime Minister: Central funding for this purpose has been available to all parties since 1986. The scheme, which was extended this year to include part of the cost of issuing photographic security passes, provides for political parties to be reimbursed for specified security costs, where the chief constable concerned certifies that the expenditure was incurred on security measures which were necessary and in line with the assessed threat.

WALES

Clinical Scientific Services

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish an information guide for area health authorities and fund-holding general practitioners on the availability of specialist clinical scientific services outside their own geographical boundaries.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I have no plans to do so.

Warrant Sales

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many warrant sales have been conducted in each of the last five years in each of the borough and district councils of Clwyd.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is not available centrally.

Animals (Transport)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to improve the welfare of live animals transported (a) within the United Kingdom and (b) to the rest of the European Community.

Mr. David Hunt: A new EC directive on the protection of animals during transport is due to be implemented across the Community by 1 January 1993. The Commission is to table proposals for further detailed rules to supplement the directive and during negotiations the Government will be seeking the highest possible safeguards for all animals.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received on the transportation of live animals.

Mr. David Hunt: Several.

Mardy Hospital, Merthyr Tydfil

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what his estimate is of the captial cost of establishing the elderly mentally infirm unit at the Mardy hospital, Merthyr Tydfil; and under what budget this expenditure was incurred.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The capital cost of establishing the elderly mentally infirm unit at Mardy hospital, amount to £456,000, was met by Mid Glamorgan health authority from its discretionary allocation.

Home Helps

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the percentage change in the number of home helps in Wales from 1979 to 1992.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The number of home helps—whole-time equivalent—increased by 51 per cent. from 1979 to 1991, the latest date for which information is available.

Local Government

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he proposes to make a statement on the future organisation of local government in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my statement on 3 March 1992, at column 171.

Emergency Ambulances

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of emergency ambulances in Wales, since April 1992, arrived within (a) 14 minutes in an urban area, (b) 18 minutes in a rural area or (c) 21 minutes in a sparsely populated area.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The latest available information relates to the quarter ended 30 June 1992 and is as follows:

Urban areas—91 per cent. arrived within 14 minutes
Rural areas—97 per cent. arrived within 18 minutes
Sparsely populated areas—92 per cent. arrived within 21 minutes

Health Promotion Authority

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales for what remaining period he expects his grade 7 official to remain on secondment with the Health Promotion Authority for Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: The grade 7 official referred to is expected to complete his agreed period of secondment in March 1993.

Fluoride

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what powers he has to require the fluoridation of water supplies.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: None. Section 87(1) of the Water Industry Act 1991 provides only that water undertakers may increase the fluoride content of water supplies at the request of a health authority.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidelines he has issued to hospital managers to cover their operations in the period between approval as NHS trusts and commencement of actual operations as trusts.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: A wide range of advice has already been issued to support the preparation for formal operation as an NHS trust. The order establishing each NHS trust specifies the functions of the trust, both before and after its operational date.

Wrexham Maelor Hospital

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received relating to the establishment of an opt-out trust at the Wrexham Maelor hospital.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Up to and including 29 October, the number of representations received are as follows:

	Number
In support	9
Opposed	10
Undeclared	10
Total	29

NHS trusts are, and will remain, an integral part of the national health service.

Deeside Industrial Park

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 29 October, Official Report, column 778, and his speech of 21 October, Official Report, columns 527-28, what was the source of the figure of 10,000 people employed on the Deeside industrial park.

Mr. David Hunt: Census of employment figures.

Cardiff Bay Opera House

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total cost of the Cardiff Bay opera house feasibility study; and how much and what percentage of the total cost was spent on each of the studies by (a) Comedia on the demand, size and scope plus artistic profile, (b) Symonds and Co. on quantity surveying, (c) Ahrends, Burton and Koralek on the architectural brief, (d) Veryard and Partners on civil engineering, (e) KPMG management consultancy on economic appraisal, (f) Cooke and Arkwright on the betterment analysis, and (g) AEA on project funding.

Mr. David Hunt: The total cost of the Cardiff Bay opera house feasibility study was £105,225·72, broken down as follows:

	£	per cent.
Comedia	21,824·02	20·7
Ahrends Burton and Koralek	2,460·00	2·3
Veryard and Partners	7,550·00	7·2
KPMG Management Consulting	31,244·40	29·7
AEA	37,297·30	35·4

A sum of £4,850—4·6 per cent.—was paid to Grant Thornton as commissioning costs for the inception study. Symonds and Cooke and Arkwright supplied information direct to the Comedia and KPMG Management Consulting; they received no direct payment from Cardiff Bay development corporation.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library a copy of the engineering and infrastructure study carried out under paragraph (b) of the terms of reference of the feasibility study on the proposed Cardiff Bay opera house.

Mr. David Hunt: I arranged for the executive summary to be placed in the Library of the House on 4 November. I have no plans to publish any further documents relating to the feasibility study on the proposed opera house.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Cardiff Bay development corporation concerning the feasibility study of the opera house; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The chairman of Cardiff Bay development corporation and I have discussed the proposed Cardiff Bay opera house and I look forward to receiving further advice on this matter from the corporation in due course.

St. Lawrence Hospital, Chepstow

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on how many occasions the regional burns unit for Wales at St. Lawrence hospital, Chepstow, has been closed to admissions from (a) 1 April 1991 to 1 April 1992 and (b) since 1 April 1992.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The operational responsibility for the burns unit at St. Lawrence hospital is a matter for the unit's management. However, I understand that the burns unit has not been closed in the period 1 April 1991 to present, although on one occasion the dependency of patients on the burns unit was such that for a 24-hour period—2 November—arrangements were made for resuscitation cases to be taken to the Frenchay burns unit at Bristol.

General Practitioner Fund Holders

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidelines he has issued on the parity of access to hospital treatment for non-emergency surgery and procedures between fund holding general practitioners and non-fund holding general practitioners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The National Health Service Management Executive for England and the joint consultants committee of the British Medical Association has issued guidance on general practitioner fund holding on EL(91)84. This sets out the criteria for acceptable contracts to be agreed between general practitioner fund holders and all national health service hospitals. It clearly states that hospitals should not offer contracts to fund holders which would disadvantage patients of other purchasers. This guidance has been issued to general practitioner fund holders in Wales.

Severn Bridge

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will undertake a study into the side effects on the Welsh economy of the Severn bridge toll increases over the period 1992 to the year 2000; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Evidence produced for inquiries into toll increases on the existing bridge, and research undertaken by the Planning, Industrial and Economic Development Advisers on the economic impact of the second Severn crossing, does not indicate a detrimental effect on the Welsh economy.

Cash Limits

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has for changes to the cash limits for his Department in the current financial year.

Mr. David Hunt: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates, the cash limit on class XVI, vote 5 will be increased by £4,690,000 from £496,482,000 to £501,172,000; the cash limit on class XVI, vote 8 will be increased by £6,389,000 from £1,270,525,000 to £1,276,914,000; the cash limit on class XVI, vote 9 will be reduced by £1,174,000 from £60,297,000 to £59,123,000; and the cash limit for class XVI, vote 10 will be reduced by £2,960,000 from £2,172,936,000 to £2,169,976,000. In addition, a new cash limited vote has been introduced, class XVI, vote 12—provision for which has been set at £1,832,000. The urban block cash limit—WO/UA—will be increased by £3,694,000 from £78,315,000 to £82,009,000, the local authority capital cash limit—WO/LACAP—will be reduced by £5,900,000 from £457,234,000 to £451,334,000, the running costs limit for the Department will be reduced by £1,273,000 from £74,361,000 to £73,088,000 and a new running costs limit of £1,819,000 has been introduced in respect of the office of Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools, in Wales.

The increase in the cash limit for vote 5 represents the net effect of: (a) increases in respect of (i) the take-up of end-year flexibility entitlement of £60,000 for running costs expenditure; (ii) a transfer of £9,000 from class VIII vote 7 to cover additional maintenance costs; (iii) an increase of £70,000 to cover the residual costs of water privatisation; (iv) a transfer of £4,220,000 from class XVI, vote 10 in respect of the annual maintenance grants of grant maintained schools; (v) a transfer of £223,000 from class XVI, vote 8 to cover the costs of medical course organisers; (vi) a transfer of £150,000 from class XI, vote 3 in respect of secure accommodation; and (vii) additional provision of £59,000 following the 1992 report of the review bodies for nursing staff, midwives, health visitors and professions allied to medicine; and (b) reductions in respect of (i) a transfer of £59,000 to class XVI, vote 12 to cover publicity and other costs to be incurred by the new office of Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools in Wales (OHMCI); and (ii) a transfer of £42,000 to class XI, vote 2 in respect of social work funds.

The increase in the cash limit for vote 8 comprises the take-up of both capital, £6,352,000, and current £200,000, end-year flexibility entitlement, and a transfer from class XVI, vote 7, £60,000, for the safe disposal of medicines; partly offset by a transfer, £223,000, to class XVI, vote 5 to cover the costs of medical course organisers.

The reduction in the cash limit for vote 9 represents the net effect of: (a) increases in respect of (i) the take-up of both running costs, £234,000, and capital £181,000, end-year flexibility entitlement; and (ii) a transfer of £184,000 from class VIII, vote 7 to cover additional accommodation costs; and (b) a transfer to class XVI, vote 12 to cover (i) the running costs expenditure, £1,760,000, and (ii) the capital expenditure, £13,000, of OHMCI.

The net reduction in the cash limit for vote 10 takes account of the transfer of £4,220,000 to class XVI, vote 5 in respect of grant maintained schools, partly offset by an increase of £1,260,000 in respect of rating work services.

The cash limit for vote 12 comprises transfers from class XVI, vote 5 of £59,000 and vote 9 of £1,773,000 in respect of the administration and associated costs of OHMCI.

The increase in the WO/UA cash limit represents the take-up of capital end-year flexibility entitlement from 1991-92 of £3,694,000.

The WO/LACAP cash limit will be reduced by £5,900,000 because provision which was made for prior-year capital grant adjustments is no longer required.

The entitlements to end-year flexibility for WO/UA and votes 8 and 9 were announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 15 July, Official Report, columns 698-702. So also was the increase in the Department's running costs limit which features in both vote 5, £60,000, and vote 9, £234,000.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his current estimate of the date of publication of the Welsh Development Agency's annual report and accounts for 1991-92; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Arrangements are being made for the agency's annual report to be laid before the House on 20 November together with the statement of accounts and the Comptroller and Auditor General's report thereon. The annual report and accounts will be published the same day.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what his proposals are for local government revenue spending in 1993-94.

Mr. David Hunt: I propose to set a level of £2,598 million for total standard spending (TSS) in Wales in 1993-94. This figure comprises an increase of 3·1 per cent. on the TSS for 1992-93, adjusted for functional transfers, and £35·9 million in additional resources for county authorities' new responsibilities for care in the community from 1 April 1993, as announced to the House by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State on 2 October. I propose to set central Government support for TSS through aggregate external finance (AEF) at £2,343 million. This comprises a 1·7 per cent. increase on the comparable level of AEF for 1992-93 and 100 per cent. funding for the £35·9 million community care spending.

I am still considering whether there is need for transitional arrangements to accompany the introduction of the council tax. I will announce my decision in due course. Any transitional arrangements would be funded from within AEF.

The levels of TSS and AEF I propose take account of other changes in local government functions which take effect on 1 April 1993. Responsibility for the majority of further education services will transfer to the Further Education Funding Council and similarly residual higher education services will transfer to the Higher Education Funding Council. The phased transfer of responsibility for school inspection to the office of Her Majesty's chief inspector for Wales also begins in 1993-94. I consider that £126 million is an appropriate level of funding to transfer from local authorities to these bodies in 1993-94. I have adjusted the levels of TSS and AEF accordingly.

I consider my proposals to be realistic in the current economic climate. They give a level of settlement increase above projected inflation.

I recognise that local government in Wales will have to make hard choices about spending priorities if authorities are to stay within my plans. They are not alone in this. The Government have had to take very tough public expenditure decisions for 1993-94. It is essential to economic recovery that we continue to keep inflation and public expenditure down. Local government must play its full part in this and Welsh local authorities will need rigorously to examine their budgetary priorities and pursue efficiency savings.

I shall be announcing provisional standard spending assessments and council tax-capping criteria for 1993-94 in due course to help local authorities with their budgeting.

I intend to consult the Welsh local authority associations on my settlement proposals later this month and I will announce final settlement details to the House early in the new year.

Finally, I propose to raise the non-domestic rate poundage for 1993-94 to 44p from its 1992-93 level of 42·5p. This is an increase of 3·5 per cent. in line with the change in the retail prices index over the 12 months to September 1992. It is consistent with the statutory requirement to limit increases to the rate of inflation.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Cash Limits

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what changes will be made to his Department's cash limit or running costs limit for 1992-93.

Mr. Brooke: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates, the following changes will be made:

(i) The cash limit for class VIII, vote 6 (Royal Palaces, Royal Parks, historic buildings, etc) will be increased by £28,000 from £190,596,000 to £190,624,000. The increase is required to cover the cost of new charges by Property Holdings for services provided to the Royal Commission on Historic Monuments for England. This increase is offset by equivalent transfers of provision from class VIII, vote 7 (Department of the Environment (Property Holdings and Central Support Services)).

(ii) The cash limit for class XII, vote 2 (Arts) will be increased by £458,000 from £252,903,000 to £253,361,000. The increase is to meet the balance of Government support for the European Arts Festival in 1992. A corresponding saving is being made on class XII vote 1.

(iii) The cash limit for class XII, vote 4 (Administration) will be increased by £9,218,000 from £2,446,000 to £11,664,000 and the running costs limit increased by £4,878,000 from £5,574,000 to £10,452,000. The increase is to provide additional provision for the administration costs associated with the creation of the Department of National Heritage. A combined offsetting saving of £9,218,000 is being made on class XII, vote 1 and vote 3.

(iv) The departmental running cost limit will be increased from £13,930,000 to £18,731,000 as a result of the reallocation of resources to meet the needs of the new department (£4,878,000 on class XII, vote 4). This increase is offset by savings of £77,000 made in the programme of consultancies which provides specialist advice to the Royal Parks division (class VIII, vote 6). There is no change to the net running cost control of the Historic Royal Palaces Agency.

All the changes are within the forecast outturn for the planning total included in the Chancellor's autumn statement today.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many (a) public libraries, (b) galleries and (c) museums he has visited in an official capacity since taking up his appointment.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 10 November 1992]: The information is as follows:

(a) I have not visited any public libraries since taking up my appointment as Secretary of State.

(b) The Yorkshire sculpture park. I am due to visit the Tate gallery shortly.

(c) The Royal Pavilion, Brighton, the natural history museum and the opening of the Joseph E Hotung gallery of oriental antiquities by Her Majesty the Queen at the British museum. I have also met representatives from the science museum to discuss their future plans and I have incidentally visited the pathology museum at St. Bartholomew's hospital.

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage on what dates he met the chairman of (a) the Arts Council, (b) the Library Association, (c) the Publishers Association, (d) the Museums and Galleries Commission, (e) English Heritage, (f) the Royal Fine Art Commission, (g) the Radio Authority and (h) the Independent Television Commission, in an official capacity since taking up his appointment.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 10 November 1992]: So far, I have met the chairmen of the Arts Council (on several occasions), the Radio Authority and English Heritage, and I shall shortly be meeting a delegation from the Library Association which will include its president and its chief executive. I have met informally the chairmen of the Museums and Galleries Commission and the Independent Television Commission. I look forward to meeting the chairman of the other bodies referred to by the hon. Member as soon as my diary allows.

EDUCATION

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) how many formal complaints he has received from parents alleging misconduct by a local education authority during the holding of a parental ballot on grant-maintained status;

(2) how many formal complaints he has received alleging misconduct by a headteacher or governing body during the holding of a parental ballot on grant-maintained status.

Mr. Forth: This information is not available centrally. Complaints about misconduct during GM ballots are received in various quarters. Some are made to the local authority, some to the school, some to us at the Department and some to the grant-maintained schools centre. My right hon. Friend has made clear that any complaints made to the Department will receive full consideration and, where necessary, he will call for a report from the local authority concerned.

Cash Limits

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what proposals there are for changes to the cash limits on votes within his responsibility for 1992-93.

Mr. Patten: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates, the cash limits for class XI, vote 1, schools, research and miscellaneous services, vote 2, higher and further education and vote 4, administration, will be increased. The cash limit changes are as follows:

Class and vote	Current cash limit £	Change £	Revised cash limit £
XI.1	766,535,000	+1,831,000	768,366,000
XI.2	3,034,485,000	+2,505,000	3,036,990,000
XI.4	108,427,000	+1,566,000	109,993,000

The increase on class XI, vote 1 includes the take-up of £1,977,000 capital end-year flexibility entitlement announced by my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 15 July 1992 at columns 698-702. It also takes account of a reduction of £146,000 to offset in full an increase to the cash limit on the higher and further education vote, class XI, vote 2.

The increase on class XI, vote 2 includes the take up of £839,000 capital end-year flexibility entitlement. It also takes account of an increase of £1,392,000 in provision for the costs of extended and upgraded courses in social work, offset in full by transfers of funding from the Home Office, the Department of Health and the Welsh Office; an increase of £146,000 to the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council following the transfer of responsibility for the funding of the YMCA National College, offset in full by a reduction to provision for youth services on Class XI, Vote 1; and an increase of £128,000 in provision for grant-in-aid for the running costs of the Further Education Funding Council, offset in full by a reduction on the administration vote, class XI, vote 4.

The increase on class XI, vote 4 includes the take-up of £1,543,000 capital and running costs end year flexibility entitlement and a transfer of £151,000 from Property Holdings. It is net of the transfer of £128,000 to class XI, vote 2. The Department's running costs limit has been reduced by £7,933,000 to £95,597,000 principally as a result of transfers to the new vote for the Office of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector (class XI, vote 7) and to the Office of Public Services and Science (class XIX, vote 4).

All the increases are within the forecast outturn for the planning total included in the Chancellor of the Exchequer's autumn statement today.

Advertising Expenditure

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the actual expenditure in the financial year 1991-92 by his Department on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material; and what is his latest estimate for 1992-93.

Mr. Forman: The actual expenditure figures for advertising and other promotional materials by this Department for the financial year 1991-92 and the latest estimate for 1992-93 are given in the table.

	£000s 1991-92	£000s 1992-93 (estimate)
Television advertising	800·0	—
Radio advertising	—	—
Newspaper advertising	2,237·9	718·0
Other promotional material	5,842·7	5,822·0

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement about his Department's expenditure plans for the financial years 1993-94 to 1995-96.

Mr. Patten: The information is as follows:

1. As my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced in his statement today, the Department for Education's spending programme in 1993-94 will total £9,523 million. That total is £523 million or 5·8 per cent. higher than equivalent expenditure in 1992-93.

2. Total expenditure in 1994-95 is planned to be £10,115 million and in 1995-96 £10,497 million.

3. Within these totals the Government have given high priority to the launch of the new further education sector so as to build up the supply of those with technical and other skills, where this country still falls short of its main competitors such as Germany and Japan. The staying-on rate at age 16 and 17 has increased sharply in the last few years. With the co-operation of the colleges, the Government's plans should over the next three years lift us towards the top of the international league table for participation in education among 16-19 year olds. The Government have also given priority to the funding of the rapidly expanding grant-maintained schools programe, and to enabling higher education participation to continue at its present record level. Against the background of the exceptionally demanding Public Expenditure Survey the Government are planning for continuing growth in their expenditure on education.

Grant-maintained schools

4. There are currently 342 grant-maintained schools open or approved. That number is projected on present trends to rise to some 500 by next April. The Government's spending plans provide for the number of GM schools to grow to 1,500 in April 1994.

5. The great bulk of recurrent funding for GM schools is found from within the totals for local authority expenditure. Central Government expenditure on recurrent and capital grants to GM schools is planned to rise substantially over the next three years as the number of GM schools grows. Total central Government expenditure on GM schools is planned to total £61 million in 1992-93 and £157 million, £294 million and £446 million in 1993-94, 1994-95 and 1995-96. Capital expenditure alone will total £501 million over the next three years. The funding plans include provision for the running costs of the proposed funding agency for schools.

Further education

6. From 1 April 1993 further education and sixth form colleges will be funded direct by the new Further Education Funding Council, set up under the Further and Higher Education Act 1992. The plans provide for the launch of the newly independent sector. Total recurrent spending is planned at £2,549 million, £2,734 million and £2,943 million in 1993-94, 1994-95 and 1995-96. That increase in funding will allow for an assumed 25 per cent. increase in student numbers between 1992-93 and 1995-96:

Financial year	FT student numbers (thousand)
1992-93	899
1993-94	970
1994-95	1,038
1995-96	1,121

7. The priority being given to this expansion in numbers will be a direct contribution to enhancing the skills of the nation: those skills will be increasingly in demand to sustain and improve our competitiveness.

8. In order to encourage efficiency in the achievement of these increased student numbers, part of the provision to be made available to the Further Education Funding Council will be directly related to actual student numbers. This funding approach will encourage institutions to compete for students and will enable the sector as a whole to improve its efficiency.

9. Capital expenditure on FE is planned to be £152 million, £157 million and £159 million in 1993-94, 1994-95 and 1995-96. The current level of capital spending on colleges will be sustained and the new sector will be able to begin to improve the state of its accommodation and stock of its equipment.

Higher Education

10. The number of students on full-time and sandwich courses in higher education has expanded even faster than the rapid rate of growth envisaged as recently as in the Government's Higher Education White Paper (Cm 1541) of May 1991, on which the Government's previous expenditure plans were based. The numbers of young people entering higher education in 1992 are already between one in four and one in three.

11. The Government have provided substantial additional funding for further education to enable the country's needs for skills to be met. Given the need to strike a balance with the rate of expansion of further education, the government envisages a period of consolidation in higher education after its recent very rapid growth beyond the levels projected as recently as May 1991. The figures underlying the expenditure plans announced today accordingly assume that the proportion of young people entering higher education will remain broadly steady in the next three years, and increase to the level of one in three at the end of the decade which has long been assumed in our forward projections.

12. The expenditure plans provide for total FTE student numbers in higher education to rise by 13 per cent between 1992-93 and 1995-96:

Financial year	FTE student numbers (thousand)
1992-93	776
1993-94	842
1994-95	877
1995-96	880

13. Total recurrent funding for teaching and research in universities and colleges in England—including grant paid by the HE Funding Council for England and related tuition fees—is planned at £3,824 million, £3,995 million and £4,024 million in 1993-94, 1994-95 and 1995-96. I shall be inviting the Funding Council to consider its approach to funding in the light of these revised assumptions about growth.

14. Provision for capital spending through the Funding Council will be £319 million, £322 million and £329 million in 1993-94, 1994-95 and 1995-96. In addition the Government are ending the prohibition of borrowing by HE institutions against the security of Exchequer funded assets: this will be widely welcomed in the university world.

15. Some of the increase above projected numbers of total students flows from the increasing proportion of students on longer courses. I have already asked the Funding Council to develop funding incentives for two year diploma vocational courses. In order to enable universities and colleges to admit as many young people as possible within the total numbers assumed, I am also asking the Funding Council to advise me on what action it can take to deter any trend towards longer courses.

16. Many of the new vocational diploma courses will be in engineering and technology. In addition, I am encouraging the Funding Council to promote continuing expansion at all levels in engineering and technology, where recruitment in recent years has continued to be disappointing. The Government's commitment to high quality research in the humanities is reflected in an increase of 11 per cent. in the grant to the British Academy.

Pay

17. The Department's spending plans assume that pay settlements in 1993-94 will fall within the range 0 to 1½ per cent. in line with the terms of the Chancellor's statement. I shall direct the School Teachers' Review Body to have regard to this policy. I shall hold back £50 million of the planned provision for the Further Education Funding Council and £50 million from the Higher Education

Funding Council for England against the delivery of pay settlements within this range for all of the staff of the institutions within their sectors.

Student Support

18. The spending plans allow for total expenditure on student maintenance in England and Wales of £1,206 million, £1,311 million and £1,360 million in 1993-94, 1994-95 and 1995-96. The level of student loans will be increased in the academic year 1993-94 so that the average value of student support in grants and loans rises by 2·75 per cent. in line with the assumed increase in the GDP deflator. Spending on the access funds will be sustained in 1993-94.

Capital Expenditure on Schools

19. Total central Government provision for capital expenditure on grant-maintained and LEA-maintained schools is £598 million, £613 million and £624 million in 1993-94, 1994-95 and 1995-96. Local education authorities will in addition be able to take advantage of the change which the Chancellor has announced on the permitted use of capital receipts. Taking account of that and other flexibilities, gross capital spending on schools in real terms should be at least equal to the total in 1992-93, which will reflect the 15 per cent. increase in central Government provision announced last year by my predecessor. Further details of annual capital guidelines and allocations to voluntary aided and grant-maintained schools will be announced later.

Students (Funding)

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what changes he intends to make to the arrangements through which validation fees for higher education courses are met from student awards.

Mr. Forman: Following consultation with the higher education sector, I have decided that, for publicly-funded institutions, the costs of external validation by institutions with degree awarding powers for colleges without degree-awarding powers should be met by those colleges from funds made available to them, rather than through fees paid with the student award. This arrangement will enable the charge for validation and related services to be negotiated, within the public funds available, in a way which more closely reflects the range and cost of the services provided. The change will come into effect for the 1993-94 academic year. Appropriate transfers will be made for this purpose from the planned public expenditure provision for mandatory awards to that for the Higher Education Funding Councils for England and for Wales. These will be reflected in the relevant supply estimates for 1993-94 to be laid before Parliament in due course. The Mandatory Award Regulations will be amended for 1993-94 on account of the change.

The arrangements for meeting the costs of validation fees for mandatory award holders at privately funded institutions will remain unchanged for the time being.

EMPLOYMENT

Wages Councils

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many checks were carried out by wages councils in London which found workers underpaid in each year since 1979.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information for the wages inspectorate's London division is as follows:

Year	Number of checks which found workers underpaid	Percentage of total checks
1979	680	18·9
1980	754	25·2

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many establishments in London were (i) found failing to post wages council notices, (ii) found failing to keep adequate records of wages paid, (iii) found failing to keep adequate records of hours worked and (iv) the subject of criminal prosecutions against employers under the Wages Acts, for each year since 1979.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information for the wages inspectorate's London division is as follows:

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment she has made of the level of bureaucracy added to the labour market or to burdens on business by the wages councils.

Mr. McLoughlin: Employers are required to maintain records, keep them for three years, make sure they are available for inspection on request, display notices of proposals made by wages councils, display notices of orders made by wages councils and provide any other information to do with the enforcement of a wages order requested by a wages inspector. When negotiating pay employers are constrained by existing minimum rates and the likely timing and magnitude of wages council increases for the different councils which may affect their businesses. Administration and wages inspection cost taxpayers some £2,500,000 per year and occupies about 130 civil servants.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will estimate the employment elasticity for (a) each main wages council industry and (b) all employees in the public sector.

Mr. McLoughlin: The margins for error in estimating employing elasticities are far greater for individual industries than for the economy as a whole, and it is not possible to provide reliable estimates for particular industries. However, it is clear that the repeal of legislation, which prevents employers from offering jobs below specified minimum rates, should lead to additional opportunities for employment.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been (a) nominal and (b) real change in (i) wages council rates and (ii) rates agreed by Government for their own employees, since 1979.

Mr. McLoughlin: Since 1979, the responsibilities of wages councils have changed and a number of councils have merged. It is not possible to calculate changes in rates on a comprehensive basis but the following figures are based on the average minimum rates set by six of the largest councils.

Changes in rates of pay: 1979-92

Minimum rates set by Wages Councils
(a) nominal change of some 170 per cent.,
(b) real percentage growth of about 16 per cent.;

Pay rates of non-industrial civil servants
(a) nominal change of 128 per cent.,
(b) real change of minus 3 per cent.

I regret that information on industrial grades is not available.

16 to 18-year-olds

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of 16 to 18-year-olds are in education and training in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) Germany, (c) Japan and (d) the USA.

Mr. McLoughlin: Latest estimates of the percentage of 16 to 18-year-olds in education and training in the United Kingdom, Germany, Japan and the USA are given in the following table.

Participation in education and training[1] of 16 to 18-year-olds

Labour Statistics

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are currently in work; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The work force in employment in the United Kingdom stood at 25,361,000 in June 1992—1,798,000 higher than in March 1983, the low-point in employment during the last recession.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of those leaving employment training (a) entered further education or training, (b) entered a job club, (c) found voluntary work and (d) became self-employed in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested is given in the following table:

Employment Training Great Britain: January—December 1991 leavers outcomes—3 months after leaving

Entered other Government training programme or full-time education/training	4
Entered a job club	2
Found voluntary work	3
Self-employed (including EAS)	6

Source: ET National follow-up survey

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the job entry rates for those leaving employment action at (a) three months and (b) six months in the latest period for which figures are available.

Mr. McLoughlin: Information about employment action outcomes is not yet available.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of those attending a job interview guarantee got the job in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. Fogden to Mr. Tony Lloyd, dated 12 November 1992:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question about the Job Interview Guarantee. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

You asked what percentage of those attending a Job Interview Guarantee got the job in the latest year for which figures are available. In 1991/92, 20% of people who went forward for an interview under this initiative were placed into jobs.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Employment Training

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what percentage of those leaving employment training gained a vocational credit in the latest year for which figures are available;

(2) what percentage of those leaving employment training gained a vocational qualification in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested is given in the table:

Sunday Working

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make a statement on the role of the wages councils in determining rates of pay for Sunday working.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The wages councils have no such role. Their powers to set special rates for Sundays were removed in 1986.

Training Review

Mr. Booth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether she has completed her review of her Department's employment and training measures for unemployed people; and if she will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I have concluded my review and am today announcing a new framework of employment and training measures to help unemployed people back to work. This will operate from April 1993 onwards.

As a result of these changes, there will be half a million more opportunities on our programmes in 1993-94 than we are providing this year. The extra opportunities will be concentrated on long-term unemployed people and those who face particular difficulties in the labour market, such as people with disabilities. These are the people who are most in need of special assistance to get back to work.

TEC-delivered programmes

Training for Work, a new adult training and work programme, to be run by training and enterprise councils (TECs) in England and Wales and local enterprise companies (LECs) in Scotland, will replace employment training and employment action. TECs and LECs will have important new flexibilities to develop programmes of skills training, temporary work and job preparation to meet the needs of local unemployed people and local circumstances. TECs and LECs will be encouraged to use these flexibilities to make best use of their resources, for example by developing training credit schemes and expanding useful temporary work in our public services. I expect the new programme to provide 320,000 opportunities in 1993-94.

In order to help improve performance, the funding regime will be developed to offer a progressively higher proportion of payment for results, including payments for participants gaining jobs or qualifications. This will strengthen the incentives for TECs to deliver programmes that best help individuals and meet labour market needs.

Today's announcement incorporates most of the recommendations made by the TEC adult training working group, including the merger of employment training and employment action and the development of a new payment system based on starts and outputs.

Employment Service Measures

There will be a further expansion of the successful job club and job interview guarantee programmes. We will also be developing work trials of up to three weeks with employers, which give unemployed people the opportunity to prove themselves in a job, without their benefits being affected. In all, these employment service measures are expected to provide an extra 180,000 opportunities in 1993-94.

A major point of entry into other opportunities will be the new jobplan workshops to be run by the employment service. These will advise and assess the needs of people unemployed for a year or more, principally those who have not taken up other offers of help open to them. The successful experience of existing Restart courses and job review workshops will be drawn on, but the new workshops will offer more intensive support from workshop leaders, including one-to-one advice and guidance, new computer-aided guidance and an enhanced action plan. Those completing workshops will have priority access to other programmes. It is expected that around 300,000 people will pass through the programme in 1993-94.

Employment service advisers will offer places in job plan workshops to all those out of work for a year who have not taken up an offer of help back to work. As is currently the case with Restart courses offered to people unemployed for two years those who do not take up places offered to them may lose their benefit for a period of time. The social security advisory committee will be consulted shortly about the benefit for non-attendance in these circumstances.

Eligibility

All those unemployed for over six months, including lone parents, will be eligible for these programmes, with earlier access available to all of them for people with disabilities, ex-service personnel, ex-detainees, labour market returners, people who need help with literacy, numeracy or basic English and those unemployed as a result of major redundancies.

Unemployed people with disabilities and those leaving the new job plan workshops will have priority access to these programmes. These priorities will replace the current aim and guarantee which were designed to help certain groups of unemployed people in rather different labour market circumstances.

Other measures

All unemployed people will of course remain entitled to the full range of jobcentre services to help them back to work as soon as possible. There will also be an extra 10 thousand places in job review workshops for short-term unemployed people and more career development loans will be made available to enable more unemployed people to invest in their own training.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Social Fund

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the social fund budget in total and for (a) crisis loans, (b) community care grants and (c) budgeting loans for each social security or Benefits Agency office in each year since 1988-89, in cash and real terms.

Mr. Scott: Expenditure on crisis and budgeting loans comes from a single loans budget. Information on expenditure on grants and loans for the years 1988-89 to 1991-92 has been placed in the Library.

Real term figures have been calculated using the current GDP deflator and may alter.

Motability

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will give details of the extent of the computer breakdown dealing with Motability claims;

(2) how many claimants from Stoke-on-Trent, North have had their Motability claims delayed; how soon he expects to deal with this backlog; what emergency arrangements have been made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the scheme is a matter for Motability which is an independent organisation. Any questions on the issue should be directed to Mr. K. Keen, director of Motability.

Cash Limits

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals he has to change the cash limits or running costs limit of his Department for 1992-93.

Mr. Scott: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class XIV, vote 3 (housing benefit administration, payments into the social fund in respect of discretionary expenditure and other grants) will be increased by £4,250,000 from £365,972,000 to £370,222,000. The cash limit for class XIV, vote 4 (administration and miscellaneous services) will be increased by £1,922,000 from £2,270,076,000 to £2,271,998,000.

The revision for vote 3 takes account of a grant to make repayable sums available to pension funds linked to the former companies of Robert Maxwell to assist in the payment of pensions (£2,500,000) and subsidies to housing and local authorities toward the costs of administering the housing benefit scheme and to charging and levying authorities towards the costs of administering the community charge benefit scheme (£1,750,000).

Vote 4 revisions take account of the additional administrative expenditure arising from higher unemployment (£9,472,000), of which £6,496,000 is running costs, an increase of £16,528,000 (of which £10,795,000 is running costs) in respect of end year flexibility arrangements, a transfer from Department of the Environment (property holdings and central support services): civil accommodation and administration etc., class VIII, vote 7 of £2,015,000 (running costs) an increase of £60,000 towards the administration costs of the Maxwell Pensioners Trust, a transfer from Department of Health and Social Security (Northern Ireland) vote 3 of £437,000 (running costs) a transfer to Department of Employment: programmes and central services, class VI, vote 1 of £58,000 (running costs) and a reduction of £35,000 following the transfer of responsibility for the departmental records officer to the Department of Health. The additional requirements are partially offset by an increase in receipts of £26,497,000 and the balance (£1,922,000) totally represents transfers from other Departments.

In addition to the running costs changes included above there is also a reduction of £2,906,000 to take account of expenditure previously classified running costs now being reclassified as capital and other current.

As a result of these changes the running costs limit of the Department of Social Security will be increased by £16,779,000 from £2,521,125,000 to £2,537,904,000.

All these increases are within the forecast outturn for the planning total included in the Chancellor's autumn statement today.

Income Support

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what consultations he has had over the proposed income support regulations concerning unemployed people not actively seeking work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Following consultation with the social security advisory committee, we have today laid regulations which will remove entitlement to income support from most unemployed single people and childless couples who fail actively to seek work. Accompanying the regulations, as Cd 2099, are the social security advisory committee's report and my response. Pregnant women, the disabled and people responsible for the care of a child or young person will remain eligible for a reduced rate of income support if they would otherwise suffer hardship.

Benefits Expenditure

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out the latest plans for expenditure on the social security programme including details on the new rates of benefits proposed for April 1993.

Mr. Lilley: Economic recovery means keeping public expenditure under control, while preserving capital programmes. Spending on social security, therefore, which comprises one third of total Government spending, must play its part in this. In his autumn statement to the House today my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer reported that expenditure on social security would be £79·8 billion in 1993-94, £82·9 billion in 1994-95 and £87 billion in 1995-96. These plans reflect the Government's manifesto commitments on retirement pension and child benefit. I have also made it a high priority to protect less well-off people by increasing all major benefits in line with prices, but I have also rigorously scrutinised my programme for areas where value for money can be improved.

Social security fraud

Efforts to tackle fraud and abuse of benefits will be stepped up. DSS fraud teams are already saving significant sums—nearly £500 million this year—and they will be improving their efficiency. Increasing use of computer technology will weed out false claims and ensure money goes only to bona fide recipients, who make up the vast majority.

These measures should save some £80 million extra from fraud in the first year, rising to £120 million by 1995-96. In addition, consultations will begin with the local authority associations about fresh incentives for local authorities to investigate fraud affecting housing benefit and the new council tax benefit.

From next April, I intend that local authorities will receive direct financial reward for their increased efforts to prevent payment of benefits to those not entitled to them. These incentives will benefit local finances, and also save the taxpayer as much as £180 million next year, on top of the fraud savings already made by local authorities. By taking these measures I hope the total of fraud identified and stopped will increase to nearly £1 billion each year.

Operational resources

There will be continued investment in information technology and further improvements in the Department's offices around the country. The public will receive a standard of service which continues to reflect my Department's full commitment to the aims of the citizens charter. Capital spending will increase by some £159 million over the next three years, bringing capital spending to over £1 billion in that period.

My programme to ensure best use of operational resources includes action to extend and encourage the use of automated credit transfer for the payment of benefits. This will improve the method of payment on offer and also save resources. In addition, my Department will be working with the Post Office to improve efficiency and to reduce theft and fraud involving order books and giros.

Uprating

The uprating of social security benefits will take place for most benefits, as usual, in the first full week of the tax year—which in 1993 will be the week beginning 12 April. I have reviewed social security benefits in accordance with section 150 of the 1992 Administration Act and my proposals are set out below. The statutory instruments to implement them will be laid before both Houses for debate. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland proposes to introduce similar changes for Northern Ireland. All the proposed new benefit rates are in the schedule.

The normal basis for uprating most benefits is the annual increase in the retail prices index up to September which this yeaer is 3·6 per cent.

Retirement pensions

Retirement pension, which is received by 10 million people, will rise next April in line with the RPI. The basic pension for a single person will be increased by £1·95 per week to £56·10 and for couples by £3·10 to £89·80. This uprating alone will cost the national insurance fund almost £1 billion next year. Public service pensions will be increased across the board by 3·6 per cent.

War pensions

War pensions will be uprated fully in line with prices.

The special Ministry of Defence payments to pre-1973 war widows, which are the responsibility of my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence, will rise in line with the RPI from £46·18 to £47·84 per week.

There are two other proposals affecting the war pensions scheme.

I propose to introduce a threshold for claims for noise induced hearing loss, bringing the war pensions rules more into line with those for industrial injury awards. The effect will be that those with less than 20 per cent. disablement in respect of noise induced hearing loss will in future receive no award. We propose to use savings from that change to remove rank differentials in war disablement pensions.

As a result of these changes, almost 200,000 severely disabled ex-service men will gain up to an extra £5 per week. No existing war pensioner will suffer a reduction in the cash he or she is receiving.

The Central Advisory Committee on War Pensions will be consulted on the proposed changes.

Other benefits

All national insurance benefits will be increased by 3·6 per cent. Unemployment benefit for a single person will therefore rise from £43·10 to £44·65 per week and the rate for couples will rise from £69·70 to £72·20.

All disability benefits will also be uprated in line with prices. For example the disability living allowance care component at the higher rate will go up in April from £43·35 to £44·90 per week.

Child benefit will also be fully uprated in line with prices. The new rates of child benefit will be £10 for the first or eldest eligible child, and £8·10 for each subsequent child. One-parent benefit will also be increased to £6·05. The lower rate of statutory maternity pay will be increased from £46·30 to £47·95.

Sickness benefit and invalidity benefit will also be uprated by prices. For example, invalidity benefit for a single person will go up from £54·15 to £56·10 and for a couple from £86·70 to £89·80. I have been considering the operation of the statutory sick pay scheme—which now covers most short term sickness. The lower rate of statutory sick pay will rise in line with the RPI from £45·30 to £46[illegible]5. I judge however that an increase in the higher rate, which goes to employees earning more than £195 per week, would not be a sensible use of scarce resources, especially as most of these employees will already be working for employers who operate occupational sick pay schemes. I therefore propose to make no change in the higher rate of statutory sick pay next year.

Changes to invalidity benefit

There has been a significant increase in expenditure on invalidity benefit and in the numbers receiving it.

Since 1978-79, the caseload has more than doubled and the costs have risen by nearly 140 per cent. in real terms. By 1995-96, invalidity benefit will be costing well over £7 billion.

Against this background, in order to ensure that the benefit is focused on those for whom Parliament intended it, I plan to tighten up the administrative and medical control procedures from April 1993, operated by my Department. This will ensure that medical examinations are better targeted and that more effective action will be taken when people fail to attend for examination or are found capable of work. These changes are expected to reduce expenditure by £240 million over the survey period.

A major research study into IVB was launched in August 1991. Some results have been received and others will be received during 1993. I will consider these results carefully as they become available.

Income-Related benefits

Income-related benefits are normally uprated by the retail prices index less certain housing costs—the so-called Rossi index. This year the September—September increase in the Rossi index was the same as for the RPI, that is 3·6 per cent.

Premiums for income-related benefits for elderly people have been uprated twice in the past year as part of our policy to target benefits on the most vulnerable groups in society. From next April all the relevant income-related benefit allowances and premiums (eg for income support, housing benefit, family credit and disability working allowance) will rise by 3·6 per cent.; for council tax benefit the rates will be set at these new levels. This means for example that a pensioner couple aged 75 or more will receive an increase in income support from £94·60 per week to £98·00 and benefit for a single person over 25 will go up from £42·45 to £44·00

Earlier this year the Government introduced improvements to the arrangements in respect of non-dependant deductions which apply both to housing benefit and housing costs in income support. This year the three earnings thresholds which determine the appropriate level of deduction will increase by £5. However, the three lowest rates of deduction will not rise pro-rata but will remain at their present level, which will provide extra help to 295,000 households with lower paid non-dependants. The top rate deduction will increase by £3 a week from £18 to £21, which means a fairer contribution from those non-dependents with the most substantial income.

I have also taken the opportunity to raise the levels of the earnings thresholds for non-dependant deductions and second adult rebates in council tax benefit. This will bring further small gains to around 3,000 people liable to pay the council tax.

As foreshadowed in the social security benefits (uprating) statement made in October 1991, we will not reduce benefits to compensate for the removal of the minimum contribution to local taxes. This means a real increase in the disposable income of the least well off. For example, a single person aged 25 or over on income support will benefit by £1·60 per week, and a couple by £2·80 per week.

Social fund

Following my recent announcement of the allocation of an additional £8 million to the social fund discretionary budget in the current year, there will be a further substantial increase next year when I expect this budget to increase to around £340 million. This further large increase means that the budget will be 12 per cent. higher than at April 1992 and nearly 50 per cent. above its 1991 level.

These increases have been made possible largely by the success of the loans system introduced in 1988 which enables more help to go to more people than would be possible if the same amount of taxpayers' money were only used for grants.

Residential care and nursing homes

From the 1 April next year, new residents requiring help with their care needs will be assessed by local authorities under the new community care arrangements. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health announced on 2 October the funding for the new arrangements including the transfer of funds from the Department of Social Security. The new limits I propose will therefore apply only to existing income support recipients in residential care and nursing homes, that is to say those with preserved rights to support under the present arrangements.

All the limits in residential care homes will be increased by £10 a week, including those for elderly people, mental illness, mental handicap and drug and alcohol abuse. This is well above the amount which a straight inflation increase would produce. I am also able to improve the relative amount given to the lowest limit—that for elderly people. I have done this in recognition of the increasing age and frailty at which people enter care.

I also propose to increase almost all the limits for nursing homes by £10 a week. The only exception is the limit referred to as the terminal illness limit. I propose instead to steer additional help to hospices.

Last year, my predecessor announced that additional funds of £1 million a year would be transferred from the social security budget to the NHS for the direct funding of hospices for each of the three survey years. I am pleased to announce a further £1 million transfer in 1993-94.

The personal expenses allowance will be increased fully in line with inflation to £12·65. The total annual cost of the increases will be over £100 million. This significant increase reflects this Government's continuing commitment to elderly and disabled people in residential or nursing care.

Other proposals

There are also some proposals for changes which involve only relatively small amounts of money, but will be welcomed by those helped. These fall into three main categories: measures which help disabled people; those for carers; and measures which mainly affect orphans.

First, disabled people. In income support, housing benefit and community charge benefit the severe disability premium is at present only available where the recipient is a disabled person on disability living allowance (DLA) or attendance allowance (AA) who is living independently or with someone who is also getting DLA/AA. From next year, I intend to extend eligibility to those who cannot get it now because they live with a person, and that person is registered blind.

More resources will be given to Motability, the charity which arranges the provision of vehicles for disabled people. Their success has meant a 15 per cent. increase in business in the last year and this trend is projected to increase into the future. My Department will increase its core funding for Motability's administrative costs in line with this expansion—taking our total funding to £2·8 million in 1995-96. In addition I intend to increase on an ongoing basis the Mobility Equipment Fund which allows Motability to make charitable donations to customers who require very expensive vehicle adaptations which they cannot afford. From April I intend to double the amount of money available to £2 million and place the grant on a three year basis thereby replacing the existing arrangement where our funding is re-considered every year. This will assist their financial planning.

I intend to give £45,000 per annum to the British Limbless Ex-Servicemen's Association to assist them with the provision of specialised car components, eg gearboxes, for arm amputee war pensioners.

For carers, I intend to introduce two measures next April. The first would increase from £40 to £50 the amount which recipients of invalid care allowance can earn before losing their benefit. This is further to last year's increase which raised the ceiling from £30 to £40. The second will introduce into income support, housing benefit and council tax benefit a carers' earnings disregard of £15. Those people who presently qualify for an earnings disregard of less than £15 and who are entitled to the carer premium will now be able to earn up to £15 a week without losing any of their income related benefit. Both of these measures will help many carers who wish to keep in touch with the world of work, as well as giving them valuable additional cash.

Finally, I am pleased to announce changes which will provide significant extra help for two groups of people who, in difficult personal circumstances, take responsibility for bringing up children whose parents have died.

Guardian's allowance will be ignored in family credit, housing benefit, council tax benefit and disability working allowance.

Those who have to bring up a child on their own will be able to receive one-parent benefit in addition to guardian's allowance. At present—following a commissioner's decision—these benefits can only be paid together if the child whose parents have died is not the eldest child in the new family. Both these changes will be implemented from 1993.

National Insurance

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has yet completed his review of national insurance contributions for 1993-94.

Mr. Lilley: I have completed the annual review under section 141 of the Social Security Administration Act 1992. My proposals will take effect from 6 April 1993. The levels of contributory benefit expenditure I am maintaining will mean a shortfall in the national insurance fund between income and outgoings. I propose to meet this shortfall by introducing legislation to make an Exchequer grant available; in 1993-94, the first year, this would be up to 20 per cent. of contributory benefit expenditure. This legislation will also introduce the 1 per cent. additional rebate for appropriate personal pension holders aged 30 and over.

Employers and employees

There will be no change to the standard rates of contributions for either employees or employers, which remain at 9 per cent. and 10·4 per cent. respectively.

In line with the Social Security Contributions and Benefits Act 1992, the lower earnings limit for class 1 contributions is to be raised to £56 a week, which is the nearest whole pound to the basic retirement pension rate for a single person from April 1993. The upper earnings limit is to be raised to £420 a week, which is slightly less than seven and a half times the new basic pension rate as provided by the Social Security Contributions and Benefits Act. These new earnings limits will replace the current ones of £54 and £405 respectively.

Under the current structure employees whose earnings reach the lower earnings limit will continue to pay an initial contribution of 2 per cent. of that limit and standard rate contributions of 9 per cent. on that portion of their earnings which exceeds the lower but not the upper earnings limit. For employers the reduced contribution rates of 4·6 per cent., 6·6 per cent. and 8·6 per cent. for the lower paid will continue unchanged. However, the thresholds for these rates will be raised so that from April 1993 they apply to weekly earnings which fall below the ceilings of £95, £140 and £195 respectively, compared with £90, £135 and £190 at present.

Not contracted-out employees and their employers

Neither the employee nor his employer will have to pay any contributions if earnings are less than £56 a week. Those whose earnings do not exceed £405 (the former upper earnings limit) will pay 14 pence a week less in contributions than at present. This is because a further £2 of their weekly earnings will be subject to a deduction of 2 per cent. rather than 9 per cent. For employees with earnings above £405 a week the maximum possible increase will be £1·21 a week. Employers' contributions will generally be unchanged although some will pay less where employees' earnings which were above the former thresholds fall below the new thresholds. There will be no increase for employers of the higher paid since there is no upper earnings limit for employers' contributions.

Contracted-out employees and their employers

The statutory review of the contracted-out rebate for employees and employers, the result of which was announced last February, resulted in a reduction in the rebate from April 1993. Although the main rates of contributions remain unchanged the effect of the reduced rebate is that many employees will pay a little more. Those with earnings between £110 and £405 (the former upper earnings limit) will pay up to 59p a week more. Those who earn more than £405 will pay contributions on the next £15 of earnings from next April (ie up to £420 a week, the proposed upper earnings limit), a maximum increase of £1·67 a week. Contracted-out employees who earn £110 or less will pay the same or slightly less.

Because of the fall in the rebate employers will generally pay more although some will pay less where employees' earnings which were above the former thresholds fall below the new thresholds.

Self-employed people

The flat rate class 2 contribution will be raised by 20p to £5·55 a week.

There will be no increase in the rate of class 4 contributions, currently 6·3 per cent. The annual limits of profits between which class 4 contributions are paid will be raised to £6,340 and £21,840 from £6,120 and £21,060 respectively. Self-employed people who pay only class 2 contributions will pay an extra £10·40 a year in 1993-94.

For people with profits between £6,340 and £21,060 (the former upper profits limit) class 4 contributions will be reduced by £13·86 per year assuming an unaltered level of profits. For those self-employed people with profits at or above the new upper profits limit the annual charge for class 4 contributions will be £35·28 higher.

Class 3 (voluntary) contributions

The rate of class 3 contributions will be raised by 20p to £5·45 a week.

National health service allocation

The allocation to the national health service, currently 1·05 per cent. from employees and 0·9 per cent. from employers, remains unchanged.

As usual, I shall be laying a draft order before Parliament together with a report by the Government actuary describing the effects of my proposals.

Maternity Grants

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security further to his answer of 30 October, Official Report, columns 924-27, if he will list by Benefits Agency district office the number of maternity grants paid in 1990 and 1989.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 6 November 1992]: For 1989-90 information by office is not available. However, the number of maternity payments in the year was 173,600. As the Benefits Agency was formed in April 1991, information for 1990-91 is shown in the table by DSS local office.

Dependent Territories

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he intends to put forward for the future government of the dependent territories; and when they will be implemented.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Wells) to his question of 29 October, Official Report, column 793, which referred to the Caribbean dependent territories. Implementation of these changes has already started. No other changes are planned.

Ahmadi Muslims

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the persecution of the Ahmadi Muslims in Pakistan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have on several occasions expressed to the Pakistani Government our concerns about discrimination against Ahmadis. In 1984 a presidential ordinance made it a criminal offence for an Ahmadi to call himself a Muslim or to preach and propagate his faith. Members of the Ahmadi community have individually suffered from discrimination, although many in the community have prospered in business and the professions. We believe that a recent decision by the Pakistani Government that a citizen's identity card should indicate his religion could make discrimination against Ahmadis and other minority religious groups easier. We have expressed our concern to the Pakistani Government.

Iran

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will take steps in concert with Her Majesty's Government and their partners in the EC to include on the agenda of the current session of the United Nations General Assembly proposals for concrete measures to exert pressure on the Iranian Government to improve human rights.

Mr. Hurd: In my speech of 22 September at the United Nations General Assembly on behalf of the European Community and its member states, I made it clear that Iran's human rights record will affect the extent to which closer relations with and confidence in Iran can be developed. The United Nations Secretary-General's special representative on human rights in Iran, Mr. Galindo-Pohl, will present a report to the United Nations General Assembly later this month. Together with our EC partners, we will work to ensure that his report's findings are fully reflected in any resolution adopted at the General Assembly.

Abu Dhabi

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contact he or his Department has had with the head of the Sheikh of Abu Dhabi's private office.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Our ambassador in Abu Dhabi had a meeting with the chairman of Sheikh Zayed's private department on 30 January 1992.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Sheikh of Abu Dhabi concerning the 17 British citizens who have been detained there concerning the Bank of Credit and Commerce International issue; and if he will make a statement on the conditions under which they are currently being held.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have made numerous representations to senior officials in Abu Dhabi asking for the detainees to be charged or released. Eight detainees entered Abu Dhabi on British passports. There are a further two dual United Kingdom/Pakistan citizens and one Canadian citizen whom we are helping. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs raised their case with the Foreign Minister of the United Arab Emirates on 16 May 1992.

They are being held at the police club, which is comfortable and air-conditioned. They are housed two to a room and have the run of one wing. Food is brought in daily from a nearby hotel. The detainees are visited regularly by a doctor.

Nagorno-Karabakh

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what Her Majesty's Government are doing to urge the Azerbaijani authorities to agree to a negotiated settlement of the Nagorno-Karabakh dispute.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: When he met President Elchibei during his recent visit to Baku, the President of the Board of Trade expressed British support for a general ceasefire which would enable the Rome talks to reconvene. He gave President Elchibei a letter from my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister which also made this point. Separately, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has been in touch with the Turkish Foreign Minister to suggest that Turkey use its influence in the region to help bring about a peaceful settlement.

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what Her Majesty's Government are doing to alleviate the suffering caused by the continuing dispute in Nagorno-Karabakh.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Government are concerned at the situation in Nagorno-Karabakh where humanitarian needs during the forthcoming winter will be considerable. The Government therefore are contributing £250,000 to the International Committee of the Red Cross which has representatives in Nagorno-Karabakh and is distributing aid there. This money will be used to help Armenian and Azeri victims of the conflict alike.

Indian Ocean

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's security interests in the Indian ocean outside the Gulf.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: As a permanent member of the United Nations Security Council, we have a general interest in peace and security in the Indian ocean region. More specifically, we retain sovereignty over British Indian ocean territory in which military facilities are located in Diego Garcia.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Public Record Office

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many papers his Department has currently withdrawn from the Public Record Office; if he will list their titles; and when he estimates that they will be returned.

Mr. Robert Jackson: About 140 items are on loan to the Cabinet Office and Cabinet Office (OPSS) under the provision of the Public Records Act 1958, section 4(6) of which gives Government Departments a statutory right to retrieve records temporarily from the Public Record Office for their own administrative use. This number changes from day to day as records are returned as soon as departmental action has been completed.

Departmental Properties

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list, for each local authority area in south Yorkshire, how many residential properties are currently owned by his Department; and if he will list, by location, those residential properties which are empty, giving the type of accommodation available, the length of time each property has been vacant, and its intended future use.

Mr. Robert Jackson: The Office of Public Service and Science does not own any residential properties in south Yorkshire.

Charter Marks

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he has taken to encourage public organisations to apply for the charter mark awards.

Mr. Waldegrave: The charter mark scheme was publicised in both the local and the national press following its launch in January this year. Interested organisations were invited to contact a freefone number to obtain further details of the scheme. Additionally, the scheme was brought to the attention of the relevant bodies by Departments.

We are currently conducting a review of all aspects of the charter mark scheme, and have commissioned some research which will, amongst other things, identify the best ways of publicising the scheme in future years.

Science Budget

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish the text of his letter to Sir David Phillips, chairman of the Advisory Board for the Research Councils, seeking the board's advice on the allocation of the science budget in 1993-94 and later years.

Mr. Waldegrave: The following is the text of my letter:

Sir David Phillips KBE FRS
Chairman of the Advisory Board for the Research Councils
PROVISION FOR SCIENCE 1993-94 to 1995-96

I am writing to let you know the outcome of this years' Public Expenditure survey, and to seek the Board's help in allocating the funds now available for the science budget for 1993-94 and later years.

As you know, this has been an exceptionally difficult survey. All existing plans for public expenditure have been reviewed to ensure that we meet our over-riding economic objectives. The resulting provision for the science budget will be £1,164·6m in 1993-94, £1,231·5m in 1994-95 and £1,264·7m in 1995-96.

These figures are lower than the previous planning figures announced last November. They take account of the reduction since then in the expected level of inflation, as measured by the reduction in the GDP deflator. After allowing for the dual support transfer, the revised figures provide for at least level funding in real terms throughout the planning period. In the circumstances, I believe that they represent a good settlement for science.

I nevertheless recognise that the lower level of provision now available will require a reassessment of priorities as compared with previous plans. There have also been changes since the Board's advice was submitted last May which affect the position of individual funded bodies.

Before deciding on the distribution of the funds available for 1993-94 and later years, I would find it most helpful to have the Board's assessment of the impact of such changes on individual funded bodies, and its judgment of what our priorities should now be. I am asking the Chief Scientific Adviser, as my representative on the Board, and my officials in the Office of Public Service and Science to work with you to this end.

Since the Science Budget is a matter of considerable Parliamentary and public interest, I propose to follow precedent by publishing the text of this letter in the form of a Parliamentary Answer.

Office of Public Service and Science

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what expenditure will be incurred by the Office of Public Service and Science in the period 1993-94 to 1995-96.

Mr. Waldegrave: Spending on the areas covered by the new Office of Public Service and Science (OPSS) will rise in real terms next year. The programme totals will be £1,255 million in 1993-94, £1,321 million in 1994-95 and £1,349 million in 1995-96.

Planned expenditure on public service functions is £85 million in 1993-94, £84 million in 1994-95 and £78 million in 1995-96.

Provision for science, including expenditure financed by EC receipts, is £1,170 million in 1993-94, £1,237 million in 1994-95 and £1,271 million in 1995-96.

These figures include sums transferred from higher education funding of £125 million, £154 million and £157 million respectively, to cover the additional responsibilities of the research councils for the projects which they support in higher education institutions.

Within these totals, the sums available for distribution on the advice of the Advisory Board for the Research Councils will be £1,165 million, £1,231 million and £1,265 million. Total science provision for each year will be 3·7 per cent., 7·5 per cent. and 10·5 per cent. higher in cash terms than the estimated outturn in 1992-93, excluding the sums transferred.

I am inviting the Advisory Board for the Research Councils to work with the chief scientific adviser and my officials to consider how these sums should be distributed so as to achieve the best value from the resources available.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proposals he has to change the 1992-93 cash limit or running costs limit for the Office of Public Service and Science.

Mr. Waldegrave: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate the cash limit for the Office of Public Service and Science (class XIX, vote 1) will be increased by £3,293,000 from £38,459,000 to £41,752,000. The Department's running costs limit will be increased by £15,046,000 from £49,098,000 to £64,144,000.

A total of £2,774,000 of the increase in cash limit is required to take forward the work of the citizens charter and £519,000 is required to meet certain costs arising from the creation of the new Department. The additional running costs reflect the transfer of certain functions from HM Treasury (class XVIII, vote 1) to the Office of Public Service and Science and, also, covers additional provision for the transfer of functions which resulted from the machinery of government changes announced after the general election. All the changes are within the forecast outturn for the planning total included in the Chancellor's autumn statement today.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Cash Limits

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what changes he intends to make to his Department's cash limits for 1992-93.

Mr. Gummer: The cash limit for class III vote 4 (agricultural, food and fishing services) will be reduced by £18,200,000 from £368,256,000 to £350,056,000. Within this limit expenditure will be reduced by £16,871,000 on agricultural schemes and by £600,000 on sea fishery support. These reductions reflect a predicted decrease in demand and delay in implementation in further areas of these schemes. Expenditure on civil defence will be reduced by £529,000 reflecting a further reduction in the size of the emergency food stockpile. The remaining reduction (£200,000) reflects two transfers of funds to other Government Departments, to ODA £150,000 as part of the United Kingdom Aid to the St. Petersburg seed potato project and to the Cabinet Office £50,000 as part of the United Kingdom support for science in the CIS.

Pesticides

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of cases of birds, by species, whose cause of death was from ingesting grain which had been treated with pesticides in each year since 1985.

Mr. Gummer: The information requested, based on confirmed incidents in England and Wales reported through the wildlife incident investigation scheme is as follows:

HEALTH

Dewsbury Health Authority

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many executive directors and non-executive directors will be paid, and at what remuneration, as members of the Dewsbury health authority for the year 1993-94; and if she will specify their precise responsibilities.

Dr. Mawhinney: All district health authorities comprise a chairman and up to five non-executive members and five executive members. The non-executive members currently receive annual remuneration of £5,000. Details of the remuneration of executive members and the precise responsibilities of both executive and non-executive members are matters for the health authority itself.

Staff Relocation

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what costs will be incurred by her Department from the relocation of staff working for the English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting, Sheffield, to Victory house, London, including (a) the additional salary costs and (b) additional business rate payments;

(2) what plans she has to move national health service staff from regional locations to Victory house, Tottenham Court road, London; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: No costs would be incurred by the Department. The proposals are being considered by the English national board as part of a cost savings programme and would involve only employees of the ENB.

Dentists, Coventry

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many dentists in the Coventry family health services authority have withdrawn from NHS services for adults and for children.

Dr. Mawhinney: No dentists in the Coventry family health services authority's (FHSA's) area have asked for their name to be removed from the FHSA's dental list.

Hospital Waiting Lists, York

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how long on average a patient in the York health authority area has to wait from the date of referral to the date of being seen by a hospital specialist in each specialty at (a) the latest date for which figures are available and (b) 12 months earlier.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett) on 29 October 1992 at column 848.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many patients in the York health authority area had been waiting for an ordinary admission in each specialty for 0 to 11 months, for one to two years, and for more than two years at (a) the latest date for which figures are available and (b) 12 months earlier;

(2) how many patients in the York health authority area had been waiting for day surgery in each specialty for 0 to 11 months, for one to two years, and for more than two years at (a) the latest date for which figures are available and (b) 12 months earlier.

Mr. Sackville: Waiting time information by district health authority is published in "Hospital Waiting List, In-patients and Day Cases", copies of which are available in the Library. Day case figures were first published in September 1991.

Homeless People (Psychiatric Treatment)

Ms. Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many homeless people, including street homeless in London, have received psychiatric treatment within each of the last five years; and what proportion this represented in each year of the total population of homeless people in London.

Mr. Yeo: The information requested is not available centrally.

Child Psychotherapy

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many child psychotherapists are in practice in the United Kingdom.

Dr. Mawhinney: At 30 September 1991, 198·06 whole-time equivalent child psychotherapists were employed within the national health service in England. Information about the number of child psychotherapists in practice outside the national health service is not collected centrally. Information relating to Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland is the responsibility of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

NHS Waiting Lists

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people were on national health service waiting lists in March 1990; and what is the current figure.

Mr. Sackville: Provisional figures for September 1992 show that there was a total of 939,846 people on national health service waiting lists compared with 958,976 in March 1990, a reduction of 2 per cent. More significantly, the number of patients waiting 12 months or more fell by more than 80,000 to 7·5 per cent. over the same period.

Departmental Spending

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what changes will be made to the cash limits and running cost limit of her Department in 1992-93.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The cash limit for class XIII vote 1 (hospital, community health, family health services (part) and related services, England) will be reduced by £54,991,000 (from £18,564,499,000 to £18,509,508,000). This decrease allows for transfers to class XIII, vote 4 (family health services (part) and national health service trusts external financing etc., England) of £37,399,000 reflecting an increase in the NHS trusts' aggregate external financing limit and £18,492,000 for the unallocated element of the original estimate of GP fundholders' drug budget requirements. These reductions are partly offset by a transfer from class XIII, vote 2 (family health (part) and other services, England) of £900,000 for the safe disposal of drugs. The cash limit for class XIII, vote 3 (Department of Health, administration, miscellaneous health services and personal social services, England) will be reduced by £958,000 (from £822,481,000 to £821,523,000). This reduction allows for a transfer of £735,000 to class XI, vote 2 (Department for Education higher and further education) and £223,000 to class XI, vote 3 (Department of Education student awards, loans and compensation payments) for the conversion of social work training courses.

Pay Review Body

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she will be presenting evidence to the pay review body for nurses, midwives and health visitors.

Mr. Sackville: Written evidence was submitted on 18 September.

West Midlands Health Authority

Mr. Barden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 3 November, Official Report, column 185, on meetings with the chairman of the West Midlands regional health authority, which other members of her ministerial team met Sir James Ackers on 28 October; and what matters were discussed.

Dr. Mawhinney: A meeting of the NHS policy board was held on 28 October, at which a wide range of matters concerning the NHS were discussed. The meeting was attended by, amongst others, the Parliamentary Under-Secretaries of State for Health my hon. Friends the Members for Suffolk, South (Mr. Yeo) and for Bolton, West (Mr. Sackville).

London Ambulance Service

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what restrictions have been made in the funding of voluntary overtime offered by the crews of the London ambulance service (a) from January to October and (b) since 1 November last.

Mr. Sackville: The London ambulance service (LAS) must provide its services within the resources agreed with the South West Thames regional health authority. In common with all ambulance services the LAS manages staff expenditure including overtime within their annual budget. The LAS have therefore established a unit to co-ordinate overtime against expected demand on a pan-London basis.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what powers she has to instruct the South West Thames regional health authority to cease budget capping of emergency ambulance crews of the London ambulance service; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The London ambulance service (LAS) must provide its services within the resources agreed with the South West Thames regional health authority. In common with all ambulance services the LAS manages staff expenditure including overtime within their annual budget. The emergency service which is provided by the LAS must be managed from within the total budget available to the service. My relationship to the management of the LAS is no different than with any other directly managed unit within the NHS. We have asked the chairman of the South West Thames regional health authority, the accountable management authority, to take immediate action on a number of matters to improve the performance of the LAS.

GP Fund Holders

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will issue guidelines on the parity of access to hospital treatment for waiting list surgery between fund holding and non-fund holding general practices; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: In June last year, the national health service management executive and the joint consultants committee of the British Medical Association issued guidance on GP fundholding in EL(91)84, a copy of which is available in the Library. This sets out the criteria for acceptable contracts to be agreed between GP fundholders and all NHS hospitals. It clearly states that hospitals should not offer contracts to fundholders which would disadvantage patients of other purchasers.

Victory House, London

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much office space for which her Department is responsible was empty in Victory house, Tottenham Court road, London on 31 October.

Mr. Sackville: None. Victory house is occupied solely by the English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting—a non-departmental public body.

Audit Commission Reports

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what powers she holds to require a regional health authority to publish the reports it has commissioned into a district health authority;

(2) what powers she holds to require a regional health authority to publish reports it has commissioned from the Audit Commission.

Dr. Mawhinney: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health has power to give directions to regional health authorities concerning the functions that they discharge on her behalf. This would include the power to direct the publication of a report commissioned by an authority into its exercise of those functions.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 5 November, Official Report, column 348, to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Northfield, if she will list the major reports commissioned from the Audit Commission or outside consultants in respect of the West Midlands health authority or its constituent districts which have (a) been completed and (b) been received in draft.

Dr. Mawhinney: West Midlands regional health authority referred the matter of its regional supplies organisation to its independent statutory auditor who reported in July 1992 under section 15 of the Local Government Finance Act 1982. The findings were published on 10 September 1992. The statutory auditor has also decided to carry out audits of West Midlands RHA on Healthtrac and the maangement buy-out of the Management Information Services Division by Qa Business Services. The timetable for completion of this work is a matter for the Audit Commission. Details of reports carried out by outside consultants on behalf of West Midlands RHA or its constituent districts are a matter for the RHA and the hon. Member may wish to contact Sir James Ackers, the chairman of West Midlands RHA, For details.

ENVIRONMENT

Endangered Species

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will make it his policy to seek the amendment of article 3 of the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species' regulations so that species are included in annex B in instances when trade is deemed incompatible with species survival;

(2) if he will make it his policy to seek the amendment of article 4 of the CITES regulations to allow imports only when benefits to conservation have been proven.

Mr. Maclean: Good progress is being made under the United Kingdom presidency in discussion of the proposed EC CITES regulation. One of our key objectives is to strengthen protection for species in which any trade would be incompatible with their survival. Our policy is that such species should be listed in annex A so that they can be given the highest level of protection. Annex B, which affords less protection, should, however, include species whose survival would be threatened only in certain places or by trade at particular levels.

Imports of annex A specimens should be allowed only in exceptional circumstances, generally when they would be of conservation benefit. Such strict restrictions would not be appropriate for species listed on other annexes in which trade is not incompatible with their survival.

The general approach of the Government to this proposal was set out by my noble friend the Lord Strathclyde in his letter of 14 September to the Lord Moran. The letter is available in the Library of the House together with copies of representations received by the Department in response to a consultation exercise carried out earlier this year.

Right-to-Buy Scheme

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on how many of those homes repossessed because of mortgage arrears in the last three years were bought under the right-to-buy scheme.

Mr. Baldry: The Department does not collect this information.

Housing Waiting Lists

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people in England and Wales are at present on council waiting lists for housing.

Mr. Baldry: Local authorities in England report the number of households on their council housing waiting lists in their annual housing investment programme (HIP1) returns.

The figures, as at 1 April 1992, are in column B5 of the "1992 HIP1 All Items Print", a copy of which is in the Library.

For information about Wales, I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Housing Associations

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library a copy of the research report commissioned by the Housing Corporation into the level of rehabilitation activity by housing associations.

Mr. Baldry: The research in question was commissioned by the Department of the Environment. The report is due to be published next month, and copies will be placed in the Library at that time.

Local Government Pensions

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to reply to the hon. Member for Swansea, West's request for a meeting about pensions for retired local government officers.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. and learned Friend will write to the hon. Member shortly.

"Competing for Quality in Housing"

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many responses have been received by his Department to the consultation paper "Competing for Quality in Housing"; and how many were (a) against and (b) in favour of proposals to amend section 105 of the Housing Act 1985.

Mr. Baldry: A total of 431 responses have now been received to the consultation paper "Competing for Quality in Housing". The majority of those which referred to the proposal to amend section 105 of the Housing Act 1985 were not in favour. However, that was before respondents had the opportunity to consider the detailed provisions now included in the Housing and Urban Development Bill, which give tenants enhanced powers to influence practically and constructively the ways in which their houses are managed.

Council House Sales

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has concerning the number of former council properties that have been re-sold following purchase under the right-to-buy legislation.

Mr. Baldry: An estimated 200,000 households owned different accommodation in 1991 having previously bought a dwelling from a local authority as sitting tenants, whether through voluntary sales by the local authority or under the right-to-buy legislation. Purchasers from a local authority who were no longer owner occupiers are not covered by this estimate.

This figure is the most recently available and is from the 1991 Labour Force Survey housing trailer. The LFS is a sample survey and so the estimate is subject to sampling error.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many (a) houses and (b) flats have been sold by councils under the right-to-buy legislation in each London borough, in each year since 1980.

Mr. Baldry: Tables showing the available information on total right-to-buy sales for each English local authority for every financial year since 1980 and a cumulative total to June 1992 were recently placed in the Library. In addition, the tables give data on total sales and on the number of flats sold.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will make a statement on the level of finance available for those seeking to purchase their council properties;

(2) what meetings officials from his Department have had with representatives of lenders and lending institutions concerning lending practices with regard to former council property;

(3) what information he has concerning the availability of mortgage finance for the purchase of former council property in London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Council tenants exercising their right to buy have at present the right to a mortgage from the landlord. Most tenants, however, prefer to take out a private loan. Currently only 4 per cent. of sales by value are financed through a mortgage from the landlord.

When a right-to-buy property is resold, subsequent buyers do not have the right to a mortgage from the landlord but must obtain private finance. Following reports that some prospective purchasers of ex-council flats were having difficulty obtaining mortgages, I met representatives of the Council of Mortgage Lenders and some of the major building societies. They assure me that it is their policy to consider every mortgage application, including those for former council properties, on its merits.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the number of former council properties awaiting sale.

Mr. Baldry: No information is held by the Department on the number of former council properties awaiting sale.

Stockton-on-Tees

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has yet considered Stockton-on-Tees borough council's response to the notice served on the authority on 12 August under section 13 of the Local Government Act 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. and learned Friend has given careful consideration to the response which Stockton-on-Tees borough council has made to the notice served on the authority on 12 August 1992, and has today given a direction under section 14 of the Local Government Act 1988 in respect of refuse collection work. The direction requires the council to retender the contract and to seek the Secretary of State's consent before awarding the work to its direct service organisation.

Housing Revenue Account

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will announce his proposals for housing revenue account subsidy entitlement for 1993-94.

Sir George Young: My Department is tomorrow consulting local authorities about my proposal for the management and maintenance allowances and rent guidelines to be used in calculating authorities' entitlement to housing revenue account subsidy next year. I will place the consultation papers in the Library with a list of proposed guidelines and allowances for each authority.

I propose an average increase in guideline rents of £2·12 a week within a range of £1·50 to £3·00, giving a new average guideline rent of £29·40 a week; at 5 per cent. above inflation, this is a smaller increase in cash terms than for 1992-93.

On management and maintenance, I propose an overall increase of 1 per cent. above inflation, enabling further progress to be made towards targeting allowances according to relative need. For 1994-95 and 1995-96, I am proposing further increases in guideline rents of 5 per cent. above the underlying rate of inflation in each year, and in the overall national management and maintenance allowance of 1 per cent. above the underlying rate of inflation in each year. I will review these guidelines and allowances each year after taking into account the relevant matters known to me at the time.

2 Marsham Street

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to vacate 2 Marsham street; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: On 2 June I announced that the Government proposed to relocate some 2,000 staff of the Department of the Environment to docklands. I did so in the light of advice that exceptional value for money was available there. I made it clear that I intended to secure fully commercial terms giving value for money to the taxpayer. I fully expected to be able to do so.

Subsequently, it emerged that rents elsewhere in London were falling rapidly and sharply. In pursuit of value for money my Department commissioned a further study to look at other locations, including the future availability of sites on the existing Government estate. Steps were also taken to establish the feasibility of remaining in Marsham street beyond the end of 1993 and precisely how much it would cost.

The further work led us to conclude that taking account of falling rents and the considerable and continuing staff related costs involved in a move to docklands, such a move did not now represent best value for money for the Department. Nor, given the present severe constraints on public spending, could I now justify the substantial one-off costs of a move in 1993-94. The study of 2 Marsham street has shown that it is both safe and affordable to remain there for a period although the building will, in due course, have to be pulled down.

The Government has therefore decided that the Department of the Environment should remain in Marsham street for about three years, and use the intervening period to find the most suitable accommodation at the best value for money for the taxpayer.

Poll Tax Arrears

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the current poll tax arrears for each local authority in England.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 10 November 1992]: I refer the hon. Member to my answer given on 6 November to the hon. Member for Cheltenham (Mr. Jones), Official Report, column 370.

Street Lighting

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidelines are currently provided for the improvement of street lighting in the interests of safety for women.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 9 November 1992]: I have been asked to reply.

Road lighting is generally installed to conform with British Standard codes of practice. Earlier this year the BS published BS 5489: Part 3: 1992 code of practice for lighting subsidiary roads and associated pedestrian areas. This code requires an assessment to be made whether the crime risk is high, average or low. The recommended lighting design is then related to the crime risk.

Public Record Office

95. Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many papers his Department has currently withdrawn from the Public Record Office; if he will list their titles; and when he estimates that they will be returned.

Mr. Howard: Government Departments have a statutory right under the Public Record Acts to retrieve records temporarily from the Public Record Office for their own administrative use. My Department currently has 28 records out on loan, as listed. Some of these are with the Department of National Heritage, for whom my Department continues to provide a records management service. Records are returned as soon as departmental action has been completed.

File Titles of Records temporarily withdrawn from Public Record Office

1. Caravan sites; Certificates of exemptions; policy.
2. Interdepartmental committee on atomic health and safety.
3. Stanton Drew: Acquisition or preservation.
4. St. John's Lodge: Proposals for future use.
5. St. John's Lodge: Lease of Bedford College.
6. Duck Island Lodge: Works.
7. Longford River: Diversion.
8. Temporary Cenotaph: Disposal of original model.
9. Scope of Metropolitan Statues Act.
10. Green Park: Three plans by Barry.
11. Procedure in the event of death of Sir Winston Churchill.
12. St. Just, Cornwall.
13. Silchester, Hampshire.
14. Dewsbury, Yorks: Moot Hall.
15. Tower of London: Crown Jewels (two records).
16. Tower of London: Jewel House Site.
17. Aycliffe Development Corporation.
18. Hatfield: Town Centre revised development proposals.
19. Dawley (Telford DC) Development Corporation: Appointment of members.
20. Letchworth Garden City Development Corporation: Appointment of members.
21. Water Undertakings: Welsh National Water Development Authority.
22. Town and Country Planning Act 1947: Mineral Regulations (two records).
23. Dolomite: Doncaster.
24. Extension of existing spoil heaps.
25. Wellington museum (two records).

Tree Preservation Orders

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the current statutes and regulations governing tree preservation orders in England and the dates on which they took effect.

Mr. Howard: The information requested is as follows:

	Came into force
Primary legislation
Town and Country Planning Act 1990	24 August 1990
Planning and Compensation Act 1991, section 23	6 January 1992
Regulations
Town and Country Planning (Tree Preservation Order) Regulations 1969	10 February 1969
Town and Country Planning (Tree Preservation Order) (Amendment) and (Trees in Conservation Areas) (Exempted Cases) Regulations 1975	12 March 1975
Town and Country Planning (Tree Preservation Order) (Amendment) Regulations 1981	13 January 1981
Town and Country Planning (Tree Preservation Order) (Amendment) Regulations 1988	30 June 1988

Departmental Properties

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list, for each local authority area in South Yorkshire, how many residential properties are currently owned by his Department; and if he will list, by location, those residential properties which are empty, giving the type of accommodation available, the length of time each property has been vacant, and its intended future use.

Mr. Howard: None.

Cash Limits

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to change his Department's cash limits and running costs limit for 1992-93.

Mr. Howard: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates, the following changes will be made:

(i) the cash limit for class VIII, vote 2 (miscellaneous housing administration and grants) will be reduced by £11,090,000 from £285,894,000 to £274,804,000. This decrease reflects a reduced requirement for expenditure on Housing Action Trusts (HATs) as a result of delays in the programmes for the four prospective HATs (Liverpool, Birmingham, Brent and Tower Hamlets) and slippage and economies in the programmes of the two established HATs (North Hull and Waltham Forest).

(ii) the cash limit for class VIII, vote 5 (central environmental services etc.) will be increased by £1,855,000 from £315,272,000 to £317,127,000. The increase includes provision for the new UK Ecolabelling Board; additional grant-in-aid to the Countryside Commission resulting from the partial take up of the end year flexibility entitlement, as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 15 July 1992 (Official Report, columns 698-702); additional grant-in-aid to English Nature; increased expenditure on international contributions; and increased grant for water supply and sewerage in assisted areas. These increases are partially offset by reductions made elsewhere on the vote. The cash limit change also reflects certain other minor adjustments to subheads within the Vote and makes provision for transfers to class VIII, vote 4 and the Overseas Development Administration to fund African elephant conservation projects.

(iii) the cash limit for class VIII, vote 8 (Department of the Environment: administration) will be reduced by £600,000 from £211,622,000 to £211,022,000 and the Department's running costs limit will be increased by £283,000 from £201,616,000 to £201,899,000. The changes include various inter-departmental transfers; the start-up costs of the relocation unit which is being funded from within existing provision; savings resulting from the dissolution of the Local Government Boundary Commission and reduced receipts from Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution. It is the Department's intention to seek Parliamentary approval for these changes in a spring Supplementary Estimate for class VIII, vote 8.

(iv) the cash limit for class VIII, vote 9 (revenue support grant, payment of non-domestic rates, valuation office rating services, etc., England) will be decreased by £7,037,000 from £29,530,333,000 to £29,523,296,000. The decrease reflects a change in the timing of payments of the council tax preparation grant; 66 per cent. will now be paid in 1992-93 with the balance paid in 1993-94.

(v) The DoE/UA non-voted cash limit will be increased by £28,354,000 from £989,095,000 to £1,017,449,000. This includes an increase of £12,100,000 for Olympic preparations; it also includes increased grant-in-aid of £15,555,000 to the London Docklands development corporation for work on extensions to the Docklands light railway and associated administration costs. This will be offset in part by a reduction of £1,900,000 in the Department of Transport's cash limit for class VII, vote 2. A further £14,190,000 is required for the Bristol spine road, land purchase in Leeds, reclamation and workspace provision in Merseyside and to increase the resources for local authority sector derelict land grant. £3,800,000 is being made available for assistance following colliery closures. There have been savings of £11,391,000 from city grant and derelict land grant as well as a £4,000,000 increase in derelict land grant receipts.

(vi) the Doe/HC non-voted cash limit will be increased by £700,000 from £1,706,500,000 to £1,707,200,000. This increase results from the full take-up of end year flexibility entitlement as announced by the Chief Secretary on 15 July 1992 (Official Report, cols 698-702).

(vii) the DoE/LACAP non-voted cash limit will be increased by £6,540,000 from £2,908,289,000 to £2,914,829,000. This increase reflects the transfer to the Estate Action programme of £6,294,000 of the savings on Housing Action Trusts; £1,403,000 full take-up of end year flexibility entitlement as announced by the Chief Secretary on 15 July 1992 (Official Report, cols. 698-702); and an increase of £310,000 in estate action grant. It also reflects savings of £1,467,000 in the revenue element of slum clearance and renovation grants.

(viii) the DoE/OES non-voted cash limit will be reduced by £40,117,000 from £149,133,000 to £109,016,000. The reduction reflects lower than expected take-up by local authorities of supplementary credit approvals for certain waste initiatives and takes account of an increase in payments on class VIII, vote 4.

(ix) the national loans fund cash limit for housing action trusts (HATs) will be reduced by £2,004,000 from £2,004,000 to zero. This decrease reflects a reduced requirement on HATs as a result of delays in the programmes for the four prospective HATs (Liverpool, Birmingham, Brent and Tower Hamlets) and slippage and economies in the programmes of the two established HATs (North Hull and Waltham Forest).

These changes are reflected in the forecast outturn for the planning total included in the Chancellor's autumn statement today.

Property Services Agency

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what changes he proposes to make to the cash limit on the Property Services Agency services vote in 1992-93.

Mr. Redwood: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limt for class VIII, vote 12 will be increased by £55,109,000 from £128,885,000 to £183,994,000. The increase will not constitute a claim on the Reserve as it will be netted of the proceeds from the Government's privatisation programme.

The estimate is sought to secure provision, mainly for the subscription of shares, so that the sale of PSA Projects may proceed as planned in December 1992. The cash asset reflects the currently estimated net liabilities of PSA Projects at end November 1992. These are £5,331,000 greater than those on which all prospective purchasers based their bids in the knowledge that, in the event of any under-or over-estimation, the sale consideration would be adjusted pound for pound. The impact is to increase the negative consideration payable at completion to £55,109,000. A completion statement will be prepared to quantify the actual liabilities at the date of sale and the sale consideration will be subject to further adjustment for any difference between the estimated and actual net liabilities whether in favour of the vendor or purchaser. Parliament will be advised of the final position at that time.

The consideration will also be subject to adjustment depending on the number of transferred staff in the business a year after the sale.

Expenditure on advisors fees incurred in preparing for the BM sales and in completing the Projects sale may be subject to revision in a spring supplementary estimate depending on progress of work and bills tendered.

The increase in this cash limit is within the forecast outturn for the planning total included in the Chancellor's autumn statement today.

Local Government Finance

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are his proposals for the appropriate level of aggregate local authority spending in 1993-94; and what is the level of central support for that spending.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will issue the consultation paper on the Government proposals for revenue support grant for 1993-94.

Mr. Howard: I propose that total standard spending for 1993-94 should be £41·142 billion for England. This represents an increase of £1·224 billion (3·1 per cent.) compared with this year's figure after adjustments for changes in local authority functions, including the transfer of most responsibilities for further education from authorities to the Further Education Funding Council on 1 April 1993. The total also includes the amount of £539 million for the transitional community care special grant announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health on 2 October.

This is a realistic increase when account is taken of falling inflation, public sector pay restraint in line with the announcement by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor today, and the extensive opportunities which authorities have to improve efficiency and value for money.

I propose that the level of aggregate external finance distributed to local authorities in 1993-94 should be £33·518 billion. This represents an increase of £1·167 billion (3·7 per cent.) after allowing for functional changes. It also includes the special grant for community care. This level of aggregate external finance means that the amount which authorities need to raise from local taxpayers in 1993-94 should be less in real terms than is being raised by the community charge this year.

I also propose that the national non-domestic rate multiplier for 1993-94 in England should rise by 3·5 per cent. to 0·416, in line with the rate of inflation. This will ensure that once again businesses will benefit from the Government's success in reducing inflation.

I shall announce proposals for the distribution of Government grants in 1993-94 later this month. At the same time, I intend to announce my capping proposals. I shall also set out my proposals for a scheme of transitional assistance to those households which face a significant increase in their local tax bills following the introduction of the council tax.

In the present difficult economic climate, both central and local government need to play their part in restraining expenditure to a level that the country can afford. Against that background, these proposals for total standard spending, aggregate external finance and the national non-domestic rate multiplier provide a sound framework for the funding of local authority services in 1993-94. Provided that authorities act responsibly, this settlement should allow them to maintain the services they provide next year.

TRANSPORT

Vehicle Inspectorate

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will extend the consultation period for the vehicle inspectorate beyond 30 November and extend the list of organisations consulted to include all those concerned with road safety and traffic-related environmental issues.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No. The consultation paper on options for the future of the vehicle inspectorate (VI) allowed ample time—11 weeks—for comment, and was sent to a broad range of road safety and environmental interests.

Okehampton Bypass

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many acres of land have been obtained, and at what cost, as public open space to compensate the loss to the public of open space as a result of the compulsory purchase order and the building of the Okehampton bypass.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: A total of 5·2 acres of land is being acquired under compulsory purchase powers in exchange for open space land at Bluebell Woods taken for the construction of the bypass. The purchase price is confidential between the Department and the vendor.

My Department has also used its best endeavours to make other purchases of land in mitigation of the effects of the bypass, but has no compulsory powers to do this; 6·2 acres of land have been purchased from British Rail, near Okehampton station; this land is now known as Station Wood and is available to the public. Negotiations with another landowner concerning land near Okehampton castle have proved unsuccessful.

2 Marsham Street

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he proposes that his Department should vacate 2 Marsham street; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacGregor: I have decided on value for money grounds that my Department will remain in 2 Marsham street for around the next three years. This decision follows a study of the options for relocation conducted during the summer.

My decision takes account both of the constraints on public expenditure and the results of a study by consultants which concluded that 2 Marsham street could continue to provide affordable and safe working conditions for several more years.

In the longer term, the building will have to be demolished and my Department will therefore be seeking suitable accommodation when a move becomes necessary.

Clapham Junction Accident

Sir Anthony Durant: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many of the recommendations in the Hidden report into the rail accident at Clapham junction have now been implemented.

Mr. Freeman: All the recommendations for British Rail and the British Transport Police have either been or are being implemented. The board's 1992 safety plan demonstrates the current safety initiatives underway, and the considerable resources BR is devoting to maintaining and improving its good safety record. Copies of the safety plan are available in the Library of the House.

Civil Aviation Authority

Mr. Sheerby: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current external financing limit for the Civil Aviation Authority.

Mr. Norris: The CAA's EFL for 1992-93 has been reduced by £1·1 million to £65·6 million. This is a technical adjustment reflecting the receipt of a European regional development fund (ERDF) grant for £1·1 million. The funds available to the CAA for investment will not be affected by this change.

Severn Bridge

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will consider making an exemption from toll charges of disabled drivers crossing the Severn bridge.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Section 8(5) of the Severn Bridges Act 1992 already exempts from tolls at the Severn bridge vehicles registered for use by disabled persons and exempt from vehicle excise duty, and vehicles being driven by disabled persons, or being used for their carriage, on which a current orange badge is displayed.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set out the factors affecting the permitted increase in the Severn bridge tolls from 1 January 1993; and what is their relationship to the retail prices index.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Section 9 of the Severn Bridges Act 1992 sets out the method by which the tolls at the Severn bridge are to be fixed, including the adjustments to be made in respect of changes in the retail prices index.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has had in relation to the increase in the level of tolls on the Severn bridge from 1 January 1993.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: We have received a number of representations from hon. Members.

Rail Privatisation

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the companies that have expressed an interest in his rail privatisation proposals; and if he will make a statement on the extent of private sector interest in his proposals.

Mr. Freeman: Before the issue of the consultation document on 12 October we had received expressions of interest about running franchised passenger railway services from around 50 companies. These approaches and subsequent ones arising from the consultation document are being treated as confidential. It would be inappropriate for me to list the companies or indicate the extent of their specific interests at this stage.

Chelsea-Hackney Railway Line

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how the route of the Chelsea-Hackney line has been safeguarded; and when progress will be made on building it.

Mr. Norris: Safeguarding directions for the line were issued by the Secretary of State for Transport in exercise of the powers conferred by articles 14(1), 18(3) and 30 of the Town and Country Planning General Development Order 1988. Initial directions were issued on 7 February 1991 and revised directions issued on 12 November 1991.

I cannot say when the line will be built. Decisions will be taken in the context of future public expenditure rounds.

Jubilee Line

Ms. Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the proposed Jubilee line extension.

Mr. Norris: I refer the hon. Member to the statement made today by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

London Transport

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on changes to the capital programmes of London Transport following the 1992 autumn statement.

Mr. Norris: London Transport will have to reassess its investment plans in the light of the funding announced in the autumn statement. Subject to that, I believe the settlement is sufficient to allow London Transport to invest £1·75 billion in the existing bus and underground system over the coming three years. This is some £0·5 billion higher, in real terms, than investment over the past three years. The funding is also sufficient to allow preparatory work on Crossrail to continue. And provision has been made for the Jubilee line extension, so that it can go ahead if the administrators of Olympia and York can meet our conditions on the provision of private finance by them.

Cash Limits

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what changes he proposes to make to the cash limit and running costs limit for his Department for 1992-93.

Mr. MacGregor: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates, the cash limits in class VII will be changed as follows:

Class and Vote	Current Cash Limit	Changes	Revised Cash Limit
VII, 1	2,124,258,000	[1,2]1,000	2,124,259,000
2	211,882,000	[1,3]3,323,000	215,205,000
4	171,657,000	[4]112,000	171,769,000
5	438,781,000	[1]1,070,000	439,851,000

[1] Take up of entitlement under the end year flexibility arrangements announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 15 July 1992 (Official Report, columns 698-702).

[2] Increases of £914,000 in respect of certain customer budgets from class VII, vote 2, £180,000 from property holdings (class VIII, vote 7) for repayment services and an additional £2,819,000 for the design and building costs of motorway service areas. These increases are offset by the transfer of £817,000 to class VII, vote 2 in relation to some running cost functions and transfer of additional maintenance costs and by the transfer of £4,000,000 to the Lord Chancellor's Department and the Crown Prosecution service to facilitate the implementation of the Road Traffic Act (£1,750,000 to class X, vote 1, £750,000 to class X, vote 2, £320,000 to class X, vote 5 and £1,180,000 to class X, vote 6). The running cost limit has been increased by £600,000 to allow my Department to bring in house certain consultancy work on the design and build of motorways and trunk roads.

[3] Increases of £220,000 in respect of repayment services from property holdings (class VIII, vote 7), £196,000 from Department of Environment (class VIII, vote 8) and £350,000 in respect of the privatisation of British Rail, partially offset by reductions following the transfer of small ships register responsibilities to class VII, vote 4 (£38,000) and of Docklands light railway sponsorship to Department of Enviroment class VIII, vote 8 (£26,000).

[4] Including an increase of £74,000 arising from the transfer of repayment services from property holdings (class VIII, vote 7).

My Department's gross running costs limit has been increased by £2,381,000 from £391,077,000 to £393,458,000.

All the increases are within the forecast outturn for the planning total included in the Chancellor's autumn statement today.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Public Sector Borrowing Requirement

14. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the level of public sector borrowing for the current financial year.

22. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the public sector borrowing requirement in the current year.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer will be giving a new forecast in his autumn statement later today.

Autumn Statement

16. Mr. Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what preparations he has made for bringing together the autumn statement with the Budget for 1993.

Mr. Dorrell: Preparations for the first unified Budget in December 1993 are well in hand. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor will make further announcements on this important change in his spring Budget statement.

Whisky

17. Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the level of duty on British whisky in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) other EC countries; and how much it has gone up in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) other EC countries since 1988.

Sir John Cope: In seven states the duty has remained nearly static, in four states, including the UK, the duty has gone up at around the rate of inflation, Greece has put up duty more substantially.

Current EC whisky duty rates and percentage change since 1988[1]

	Pence per 70cl bottle at 40 per cent. abv[2] [3]	Percentage change since 1988
Belgium	337	12·1
Denmark	1,036	1·2
France	250	0·2
Germany	278	15·2
Greece	35	[4]533·0
Ireland	574	2·8
Italy	44	−1·7
Luxembourg	202	0·1
Netherlands	309	0·1
Portugal	62	43·1
Spain	89	−0·2
United Kingdom	554	25·6

[1] Rescaled from 75cl bottle (EC regulations no longer permit the use of 75cl bottles).

[2] Rates of exchange as at 10.10.92.

[3] abv-alcohol by volume.

[4] A range of taxes is applied to spirits in Greece. This increase relates to the excise duty element only and the VAT element has been significantly reduced to offset this.

Economic Policy

18. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes there have been in economic policy since 20 October in the current year.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave earlier today to the hon. and learned Member for Fife, North-East (Mr. Menzies Campbell).

Financial Services

19. Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has to consider reforms in the area of financial services compliance in the short or medium-term future.

Mr. Dorrell: I have no plans to reform the current system of professional regulation within a statutory framework, with a strong practitioner input.

Pound Sterling

20. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what review he has undertaken of the effectiveness of measures to protect the pound by intervention in the financial markets.

Mr. Dorrell: The effectiveness of market operations is kept under review.

Pit Closures

21. Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what meetings he has had, and what studies he has commissioned, to evaluate the full cost-benefit financial effects to the United Kingdom economy of closing coal mines.

Mr. Portillo: I have had a number of meetings with ministerial colleagues to discuss a wide range of issues relating to the future of the coal industry.

Unit Wage Costs

23. Mr. Booth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has about the rate of unit wage cost growth in the United Kingdom; and what is the corresponding information on Japan and Germany.

Mr. Dorrell: In 1992 Q2 unit wage costs in manufacturing in the United Kingdom were only 1·4 per cent. higher than a year earlier. The corresponding figures for Japan and Germany are 8·6 per cent. and 3·8 per cent. respectively.

Mortgage Interest

24. Mr. Streeter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the financial effect on a household with a typical mortgage of the changes in mortgage interest rates over the last two years.

Sir John Cope: When the latest base rate cut feeds through to mortgage rates on 1 December, interest payments on an average £33,000 mortgage will have fallen by over £110 a month, compared with payments two years ago, and by over £130 a month compared with the mid-1990 peak.

Social Security Payments

25. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received calling for protection of social security payments in the current public expenditure round; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend and I have received a number of such representations.

Fixed Capital Formation

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide a table showing gross domestic fixed capital formation by region on (a) vehicles, ships and aircraft, (b) plant and machinery, (c) dwellings, (d) other new building work and (e) in total, for each year from 1989 at 1989 prices.

Mr. Dorrell: The latest information available relates to 1989, and was published in the November 1991 issue of Economic Trends, which is available in the House of Commons Library. Estimates for 1990 on a current price basis, together with any revisions for 1989, will be published in the December 1992 issue of Economic Trends.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide a table showing United Kingdom gross domestic fixed capital formation on (a) vehicles, ships and aircraft, (b) plant and machinery and (c) in total for each year from 1989 at 1989 prices.

Mr. Dorrell: The series requested are available at constant (1985) prices, or at current prices, but not at 1989 prices. The latest estimates are available on the CSO database which may be accessed by the House of Commons Library. The relevant database identifiers are:

	Constant (1985) prices	Current prices
(a) Vehicles, ships and aircraft	DFEH	DFEJ
(b) Plant and Machinery	DFCY	DFCX
(c) Total[1]	DFDM	DFDC

[1] Total gross domestic fixed capital formation includes expenditure on new dwellings and other new buildings and works.

Manufactured Goods

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the total trade deficit in manufactured goods since May 1979 at current prices.

Mr. Dorrell: Information on the balance for manufactured goods is published regularly in the Central Statistical Office's "Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics" and is available on a monthly basis since 1980, and on a quarterly basis for 1979 on the Central Statistical Office databank which may be accessed through the Library of the House.

Gross Domestic Product

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide a table showing annual growth in gross domestic product for (a) the United Kingdom, (b) the European Community and (c) the OECD for each year since 1989.

Mr. Dorrell: Volume index numbers of gross domestic product, from which these growth rates can be derived, are available on page 11 of the October edition of "Main Economic Indicators" published by OECD.

Copies of this publication are available in the House of Commons Library.

Retail Financial Services

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received regarding the introduction of statutory regulation for retail financial services.

Mr. Dorrell: The Financial Services Act 1986 provides a statutory framework for the regulation of retail and other financial services.

Personal Investment Authority

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what representations he has received from the clearing banks concerning the proposed formation of the personal investment authority;

(2) what representations he has received concerning the formation of the proposed personal investment authority.

Mr. Nelson: The recognition of self-regulating organisations under the Financial Services Act is primarily a matter for the Securities and Investments Board.

Securities and Investments Board

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what plans he has to give the Securities and Investments Board the power to exact civil penalties as an alternative to criminal prosecutions;

(2) what plans he has to modify the powers of the Securities and Investments Board.

Mr. Nelson: None. A wide range of powers has been transferred to the Securities and Investments Board under the Financial Services Act. These include powers to institute civil proceedings where appropriate.

IMF and World Bank

Mr. Denham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to ensure that the voting records of the United Kingdom directors of the International Monetary Fund and the World bank are made publicly available.

Sir John Cope: The proceedings of the IMF and the World bank are confidential so as not to inhibit full and frank discussion. Within this constraint, the United Kingdom welcomes the greater openness recently shown by these institutions.

Company Car Tax

Mr. Madel: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of responses to his consultation paper on reforming company car tax were broadly in favour of the Government's proposed price banding system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The consultation period does not end until 13 November and a detailed analysis of the representations is therefore not yet available.

Treasury

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, what proposals he has for changes in the running costs limits of the Treasury in 1992-93.

Mr. Nelson: The Treasury's running costs limit for 1992-93 is being reduced by £11,312,000 from £92,203,000 to £80,891,000 following the transfer of CCTA—the Government centre for information systems—and Chessington computer centre to the Office of Public Service and Science. The change will be reflected in a token supplementary estimate which will be presented for parliamentary approval in due course.

Cash Limits

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has for changes in the cash limit and running costs limit for 1992-93 for the Department for National Savings.

Mr. Nelson: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class XVIII, vote 10 (expenditure of the Department for National Savings on administration, publicity costs and certain other expenses) will be increased by £2,611,000 from £195,066,000 to £197,677,000. The increase comprises of £1,616,000 take-up under the end-year flexibility arrangements for capital expenditure, £814,000 take-up of end-year flexibility for running costs (as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 15 July 1992 (Official Report columns 698-702)), and £181,000 for sums payable to the Department of the Environment (Property Holdings) in respect of buildings maintenance.

As a result of these changes, the running costs limit for the Department for National Savings will be increased by £995,000 from £184,714,000 to £185,709,000.

The increase is within the forecast outturn for the planning total included in the Chancellor's autumn statement today.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has for changes in the cash limit and running costs limit for Customs and Excise for 1992-93.

Sir John Cope: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class XVIII, vote 5 will be increased by £6,856,000 from £815,159,000 to £822,015,000 and the running cost limit by £2,458,000 from £697,352,000 to £699,810,000. The increase is within the forecast outturn for the planning total included in the Chancellor's autumn statement today.

The increase in the running cost limit arises from the full take-up of entitlement to end-year flexibility as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 15 July 1992 Official Report, columns 698-702, and additional maintenance provision transferred from Property Holdings. The increase in the cash limit also includes the full take-up of end-year flexibility entitlement on capital expenditure.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has for changes in the cash limit and running costs limit for 1992-93 for the Inland Revenue.

Mr. Dorrell: The cash limit for class XVIII, vote 6 (Inland Revenue administration) is being reduced by £43,300,000 from £1,615,071,000 to £1,571,771,000. The running cost limit is also being reduced by £25,300,000 from £1,526,077,000 to £1,500,777,000. The reduction is being made to reflect a lower expectation of the number of repayment claims following the abolition of composite rate tax, reduced provision for pay and slippage on some capital projects. The reductions are partially offset by extra work arising from the 1992 Finance Act and take up of end-year flexibility for running costs.

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the Government were first informed of the costs of the liquidation of BCCI.

Mr. Nelson: I was first informed of the costs of the liquidation on 5 November.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the Economic Secretary to the Treasury last met Mr. Brian Smouha of the liquidator of BCCI; and what was the purpose of the meeting.

Mr. Nelson: I met Mr. Smouha on 5 November. The purpose of the meeting was to acquaint myself with developments on the liquidation of BCCI in advance of the debate in the House on 6 November, Official Report, columns 523-94.

National Savings

Mr. Ainsworth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to change the minimum deposit or purchase for national savings products.

Mr. Nelson: Small value transactions are expensive to administer so we regularly review the minimum deposit or purchase levels. As part of the survey of public expenditure priorities for the next three years I have decided that the following changes should be made:

Ordinary account minimum for each deposit—from £5 to £10.

Investment account minimum for each deposit—from £5 to £20.

Premium bond minimum purchase for children under 16—from £10 to £100.

Amendments to regulations to effect these changes will be brought before Parliament shortly.

I propose that these changes will come into effect from 1 February 1993.

The changes are expected to produce running cost savings on the Department for National Savings budget of just under £5 million in a full year.

Investors' Compensation

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer(1) what action he will take to help those persons who receive compensation from the investors compensation scheme in cases where this compensation does not meet the debts incurred from interest rates and legal cost, following the quantification date; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what additional assistance he can offer to clients of Fisher Prew-Smith Ltd. who have not received compensation under the Financial Services Act 1986 sufficient to cover their mortgage debts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 10 November 1992]: The rules of the investors compensation scheme are a matter for the Securities and Investment Board.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will take steps to ensure that the clients of Fisher Prew-Smith Ltd. do not lose their homes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 10 November 1992]: Borrowers should contact their building society to discuss interest and repayment arrangements as the societies have made clear that they want to enable borrowers to stay in their homes.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will investigate the involvement of the West Bromwich Building Society in the affairs of Fisher Prew-Smith Ltd.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 10 November 1992]: The prudential supervision of building societies is a matter for the Building Societies Commission.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will undertake an investigation into the conduct of Fisher Prew-Smith Ltd.; what action he will take to assist persons who have lost money as a result of home income plans; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will investigate the conduct of Ruben Walter Investment Management Ltd. in their handling of investments following the collapse of Fisher Prew-Smith Ltd.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 10 November 1992]: The regulation of investment businesses is a matter for the Securities and Investments Board and the recognised bodies under the Financial Services Act. Where the investors compensation scheme has declared firms in default, private investors may be eligible for compensation in respect of their losses arising from investment business conducted by the firm.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Coal

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much financial support Her Majesty's Government have given to the coal industry in each year since 1979, indicating what proportion in each year was to fund assistance for redundancies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Grant aid made available to the coal industry from 1979-80 to 1991-92 inclusive is set out in the table which follows. All payments under the RMPS and about 90 per cent. of restructuring grant payments can be classified as assistance with redundancies.

£ millions

Financial Year	RMPS[1]	Restructuring grant	Other grants	Total grants
1979-80	15		251	266
1980-81	15		254	269

[1] Redundant mineworkers payments scheme.

In addition to Government financial support, British Coal has been benefiting from the high margins, over and above world market prices, that the electricity generators pay for their coal supplies from the corporation. Under present contracts, which have been operating since April 1990, this assistance amounts to about £1 billion annually.

Pit Closures

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, what will be Lord Walker's salary for administering assistance measures to areas affected by colliery closures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what arrangements have been made for the remuneration of Lord Walker for his work in connection with pit closures; and what are the full terms and conditions of Lord Walker's contract.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his statement on 21 October, if he will announce the terms and conditions of the appointment of Lord Walker to assist and advise on the creation of alternative job creation in pit closure areas; and what relationship it will have with his appointment, and the terms and conditions thereof, as chairman-elect of the urban regeneration agency.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will indicate the relevant experience and qualities of Lord Walker leading to his appointment as the person to lead the review of the impact on the mining communities of the proposed pit closures.

Mr. Madden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on what terms, including salary, he has appointed Lord Walker to co-ordinate action to regenerate areas where coal mines are to be closed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his statement of 19 October, Official Report, column 207, if Lord Walker's post as adviser to his Department is to be remunerated.

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what salary will be paid to Lord Walker for his work in overseeing the Government's proposed aid to the coal mining areas.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what salary, per diem, or other emoluments Lord Walker will receive whilst fulfilling his duties in respect of assistance to the communities affected by coal closures.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answers 22, 23 and 29 October 1992]: The Government intend to see that measures of assistance for coal closure areas are effectively targeted and that any wasteful duplication is avoided. Lord Walker will be an adviser to me and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales. I see his role as being wide-ranging and will want him to look at any issues relating to the facilitation and co-ordination of the regeneration of the coalfield areas. In addition I have asked him to advise me on the broader implications of this for the delivery of my Department's regional policy and inward investment measures. He will liaise closely with bodies promoting regeneration and will advise me and my right hon. Friend on any measures which could be taken to promote economic revival of the areas. Lord Walker will carry out his work on coalfield regeneration in addition to his role as chairman designate of the urban regeneration agency. He will do this work without remuneration.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what office staff and transport facilities will be provided for Lord Walker for his duties as co-ordinator for the coal fields; and what is the estimated annual cost of staff and office costs for this purpose.

Mr. Heseltine: [holding answer 23 October 1992]: My Department and the Welsh Office will provide all the back-up support which Lord Walker may need. Other Departments concerned will also be closely involved in this work. This support will be provided from within existing resources.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will now introduce legislation to reverse the Caparo judgment.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: We have no plans to do so.

Cash Limits

Mr. Milligan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what changes will be made to his Department's cash limits and running costs limit for 1992-93.

Mr. Heseltine: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class IV, vote 2 (support for industry, international trade, statutory and regulatory work, consumer protection and administration) will be increased by £25,707,000 from £778,524,000 to £804,231,100. The cash limit for class V, vote 3 (administration) will be reduced by £23,789,000 from £43,295,000 to £19,506,000. Following a transfer from Property Holdings for building maintenance, the running costs limit for the Department of Trade and Industry is being increased by £311,000 from £305,362,000 to £305,673,000.

The supplementary estimate for £25,707,000 on class IV, vote 2 includes an increase of £1,657,000 in departmental and research establishments' capital expenditure as a result of take-up under the end-year flexibility arrangements announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 15 July 1992, Official Report, columns 698-702.

A transfer of administrative expenditure and receipts totalling £23,789,000 from class V, vote 3 is being made, mainly following amalgamation of central divisions previously on that vote. The remaining net adjustments include the £311,000 property holdings transfer referred to above and a transfer to the Office of Science and Technology of £50,000 as a contribution to the Royal Society's programme of support for CIS scientists.

There is a rise of £3,173,000 in gross provision for consumer and investor protection, reflecting increased expenditure on company investigations and £1,900,000 in gross provision for the consultancy initiatives as a result of higher than expected demand for the scheme. These increases are wholly offset by reductions in gross provision and increases in appropriations in aid elsewhere on the Vote. There are adjustments to inter-departmental payments following machinery of government changes to the Department of Environment (class VIII, vote 8), HM Treasury (class XVIII, vote V) and Department of National Heritage (class XII, vote 5).

There are some other changes in the allocation of provision. These include adjustments made between measurement and technolgoy support and the National Physical laboratory in respect of depreciation policy and Warren Spring laboratory for repositioning. All the changes are within the forecast outturn for the planning total included in the Chancellor's autumn statement today.

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to meet a delegation of creditors and ex-employees to discuss BCCI.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave him on 10 November 1992, Official Report, column 734.

Office of Gas Supply

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, what changes are proposed in the 1992-93 cash limit and running costs limit for the Office of Gas Supply.

Mr. Heseltine: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate the cash limit on the office of Gas Supply vote (class V vote 8) will be increased by £262,000 to £3,203,000. The increase provides for the estimated additional costs incurred by the Office in overseeing the development and implementation of a new gas transportation and storage regime, in the referral of British Gas to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission and in the urgent relocation of the Office of Gas Supply to larger premises. In addition receipts under section 8 of the Gas Act 1986 have been reclassified from appropriations in aid to extra receipts payable to the Consolidated Fund. As a consequence of this the running costs limit has increased by £88,000 to £2,783,000. These increases are within the forecast outturn for the planning total included in the Chancellor's autumn statement.

EC Coal Subsidy

Ms. Quin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if, in his capacity as President of the EC Industry Council, he intends to initiate a Council discussion on differing levels of coal subsidy in the EC.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 3 November 1992]: I expect there to be a discussion at the next meeting of the Energy Council on 30 of this month of the coal industry throughout the Community.

Home Equity Share Losses

Mr. Colvin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action is being taken by his Department to speed up the payment of compensation by insurance companies in respect of home equity share losses.

Mr. Nelson: I have been asked to reply. The regulation of investment business carried on by life insurance companies is a matter for the Securities and Investments Board and the Life Assurance and Unit Trust Regulatory Organisation. They and the other bodies helping to obtain appropriate redress for clients of unsuitable home income schemes are aware of the need to deal with cases as quickly as they can.

Written Answers to Questions

Friday 13 November 1992

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Departmental Properties

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list, for each local authority area in south Yorkshire, how many residential properties are currently owned by his Department; and if he will list, by location, those residential properties which are empty, giving the type of accommodation available, the length of time each property has been vacant, and its intended future use.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor's Department does not own any residential property in south Yorkshire.

Public Record Office

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many papers his Department has currently withdrawn from the Public Record Office; if he will list their titles; and when he estimates that they will be returned.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Government Departments have a statutory right to retrieve records temporarily from the Public Record Office for their own administrative use. The Lord Chancellor's Department currently has 45 records out on loan. They will be returned when the current administrative need to keep them is over. I will write to the hon. Gentleman with details of their titles.

TRANSPORT

Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library a copy of the health and safety policy of each of the agencies within his Department.

Mr. Norris: A copy of the health and safety policy of each of the Department's agencies has been placed in the Library today.

Jubilee Line

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what costs have been incurred as a result of the delay in announcing the building of the Jubilee line extension.

Mr. Norris: About £10 million.

Rail Station, Ashford

Sir Keith Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made towards the building of an international passenger station at Ashford.

Mr. Freeman: Outline planning consent has been obtained for the new station at Ashford. I am pleased to say that British Rail has confirmed to me that it is now able to progress the first stage of the project which is the track and signalling work necessary before the station itself can be built.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Set-aside

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what evaluation his Department has carried out of set-aside policy.

Mr. Gummer: In accordance with my Department's standard practice, studies of both the five-year and one-year set-aside schemes were commissioned from independent bodies. I have today placed in the Library of this House a copy of the report by Reading university of its socio-economic study of the first year of the five-year scheme in England, which my Department commissioned in 1989. A copy of the report of a similar evaluation of the scheme in Scotland by the Scottish agricultural colleges was recently placed in the Library by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland. I am also placing in the Library today a copy of the report by Wye college, university of London, of its socio-economic evaluation of the one-year set-aside scheme in England, also commissioned by my Department. In addition, I have placed in the Library a summary of the report of monitoring of the public access provisions of the countryside premium scheme, carried out for my Department by independent consultants. I have given all these studies careful consideration, although clearly the European Community's set-aside policy has developed significantly since they were carried out.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Crime, North Yorkshire

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many crimes of (a) violence against the person, (b) burglary, (c) theft or handling stolen goods and (d) criminal damage, and how many crimes in total, were reported to the North Yorkshire police in the 12-month period July 1978 to June 1979, and in the 12-month period July 1991 to June 1992.

Mr. Jack: The available information is for the number of offences recorded by the police in north Yorkshire and is contained in the following table:

Notifiable Offences Recorded by the Police in North Yorkshire

North Yorkshire	Number of offences
Offence group	July 1978 to June 1979	July 1991 to June 1992
Violence against the person	873	2,115
Burglary	4,873	13,804
Theft and handling goods	12,061	30,453
Criminal damage	2,486	5,726
Other offences	1,635	1,975
Total	21,928	54,073

Wolds Remand Centre

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give details of each racial incident leading to disciplinary action at the Wolds remand centre since it opened; and if he will outline what action he intends to take to tackle racial tension at the Wolds.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There have been no racial incidents leading to disciplinary action at Wolds remand prison since it opened. Tackling issues based on race, including racial tension, is the responsibility of all staff and they receive appropriate training. In addition, a race relations committee and a race relations officer are specifically charged with the task of ensuring that attention is paid to racial matters.

Female Prisoners

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many requests for places in mother and baby units in prisons in England and Wales are currently outstanding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Applications for a place on a mother and baby unit are considered by a multi-disciplinary team at a case conference. At present the units have no outstanding applications awaiting consideration.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many mother and baby unit places were available (a) at 1 January and (b) at 1 November; how many further places are planned for, in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: On both 1 January and 1 November there were 38 places available in prison mother and baby units.

At Styal, a further house is being converted to create 10 additional places and will be available before the end of the year. Work will commence over the winter months on a new unit at New Hall, which will provide a further nine places.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many pregnant female prisoners are currently on remand or sentenced in England and Wales.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: On 11 November there were 38 pregnant women currently on remand or sentenced in England and Wales.

Insurance Fraud

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home department how many firms have been prosecuted for submitting fraudulent insurance claims for fire-damaged property for each of the last three years.

Mr. Jack: Information as to whether prosecutions for fraud offences specifically related to fraudulent insurance claims for fire damaged property is not collected centrally.

Police Funding

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to discuss with police authorities the report by Richard Kornicki on the future of police funding before any decision is taken on its conclusions.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Mr. Kornicki's review of police funding is a working document offering internal advice to Ministers. Further work has since been commissioned. No conclusions have yet been reached, but when Ministers have proposals to put forward, we intend that the local authority associations should be among those who are consulted.

Colin Wallace

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of state for the Home Department if he will refer back to the Court of Appeal the conviction of Colin Wallace for manslaughter following new forensic evidence submitted by Professor Bernard Knight.

Mr. Jack: No representations have yet been received containing any such evidence.

Party Conferences

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the additional policing costs arising out of (a) the Liberal Democrat party conference, (b) the Labour party conference and (c) the Conservative party conference in 1992.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I understand from the chief officers of the forces concerned that the estimated additional costs are:

(a)	Liberal Democrat	(North Yorkshire)	Nil
(b)	Labour	(Lancashire)	£110,000
(c)	Conservative	(Sussex)	£2,200,000

Women

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those crime prevention initiatives and publicity campaigns which have been directly targeted at women in the last five years.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 9 November 1992]: Effective action against crime is of benefit to all citizens, men and women alike. But we know that matters such as personal safety can be of particular concern to women. A range of actions has been taken in recent years to enhance the response of the police and other agencies to rape and domestic violence, and there are a number of crime prevention initiatives specifically directed at improving women's safety. These include more than 200 schemes in the safer cities programme and three innovative projects aimed at tackling domestic violence in Islington, Leeds and Merseyside. These are being developed and evaluated by the Home Office. Most police forces produce material giving information and advice for the victims of domestic violence. In addition the Home Office's crime prevention handbook, "Practical Ways to Crack Crime" deals in detail with aspects of personal safety for women.

Broadcasting

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has for extending the moratorium on takeovers of ITV companies until the BBC charter is renewed.

Mr. Brooke: I have been asked to reply.

None.

ENVIRONMENT

Community Care

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance he will issue to housing authorities on their role in providing community care services from April 1993.

Mr. Baldry: My Department and the Department of Health jointly issued guidance to local authorities about their role under the new arrangements in circular 10/92, "Housing and Community Care", on 24 September. A copy of the circular was placed in the Library.

Hedgerows

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the change in the number of kilometres of hedgerow in Great Britain since 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 11 November 1992]: The survey carried out by the Institute of Terrestrial Ecology as part of my Department's 1990 countryside survey indicates that in 1984 there was an estimated total length of 549,000 km of hedgerow in Great Britain. By 1990 there had been a net loss of some 121,000 km. This figure includes losses due to poor management as well as deliberate removal.

The Government are firmly committed to measures that will safeguard hedgerows. Under the Ministry of Agriculture's farm and conservation grant scheme an estimated 2,000 km of hedgerow were planted or improved in 1991. In July we launched the hedgerow incentive scheme with a budget of £3·5 million over three years to promote improved hedgerow management. Furthermore, although pressure on the parliamentary programme for this Session prevented a place being found for a Government Bill on hedgerow protection, we welcome and support the introduction of a Bill with similar objectives by my hon. Friend the Member for Surrey, East (Mr. Ainsworth).

Council Tax

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimates his Department has made of the effect of the introduction of the council tax on house prices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 12 November 1992]: I have made no such estimates.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing for each county council in England the total amount of unapplied capital receipts.

Mr. Robin Squire [pursuant to his reply, 5 November 1992, c. 371]: The total usable receipts for each county council in England as at 31 March 1992 are shown in the table.

	£000s
Avon	9,488
Bedfordshire	204
Berkshire	566
Buckinghamshire	1,765
Cambridgeshire	296

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing for each housing authority in England and the amount of unapplied capital receipts from (a) housing sales and (b) other capital sales.

Mr. Robin Squire [pursuant to his reply, 5 November 1992, c. 371]: I have arranged for the revised information to be placed in the Library of the House.

Separate figures for housing receipts and other capital receipts are not available.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Charterline

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress has been made in the creation of the charterline telephone advice service.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have today appointed consultants Price Waterhouse to develop a pilot charterline service. The pilot will be launched early in 1993; if successful, it will be extended to cover all public services nationwide.

Our market research shows strong public demand for charterline. People often find it difficult to make complaints, or seek information, about public services. They need up-to-date and reliable information on the services available, and on how to complain if things go wrong. Charterline will provide details of the citizens charter and published statements of service standards; contact numbers to help people find out more about public services; and contact numbers for making complaints.

Charterline will also link in with existing telephone helplines, and other sources of help such as the ombudsmen.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Public Record Office

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Attorney-General how many papers his Department has currently withdrawn from the Public Record Office; if he will list their titles; and when he estimates that they will be returned.

The Attorney-General: The Law Officers' Departments occasionally exercise their statutory right to retrieve records temporarily from the Public Record Office for their own administrative use. Neither the legal secretariat to the Law Officers nor the Serious Fraud Office has any records out on loan. The Crown prosecution service has 14 records on loan and the Treasury Solicitor's Department one record on loan. All these records will be returned as soon as departmental action has been completed. I will write to the hon. Member about the titles.

Departmental Properties

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list for each local authority area in south Yorkshire, how many residential properties are currently owned by his Department or the Crown prosecution service; and if he will list, by location, those residential properties which are empty, giving the type of accommodation available, the length of time each property has been vacant, and its intended future use.

The Attorney-General: None of the Departments for which I am responsible own any residential property in south Yorkshire. One house is currently being administered by the Treasury Solicitor's Department pursuant to a grant of letters of administration.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Olner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were employed in the textile industry, the clothing industry and the mining industry in the west midlands in 1980 and for each subsequent year to date.

Mr. McLoughlin: The available information on regional employment for the industries requested is from the censuses of employment taken in 1981, 1984, 1987, and 1989. Data for the west midlands can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library, subject to the confidentiality restrictions of the Statistics of Trade Act 1947.

Minimum Wage Legislation

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many prosecutions by the wages inspectorate for breaches of the minimum wage rates legislation have been undertaken in (a) Pendle, (b) Lancashire, (c) the north west region and (d) the United Kingdom for each year since 1979.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information held is for Great Britain, not the United Kingdom, and is detailed in the following table:

The number of prosecutions by the wages inspectorate for breaches under part 2 of the Wages Act 1986

Wages Councils

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to the answer of 6 November, Official Report, column 432, what was the lowest rate of actual payment found by inspectors in 1991-92.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will place in the Library (a) the responses to the 1988 consultative paper on the future of wages councils and (b) representations, including notes of oral or telephone representations, received since 1988 on the future of wages councils which were taken into account in the drafting of the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Bill.

Mr. McLoughlin: No. We treat responses to consultation exercises, as with other representations, on the basis that they have been offered "in confidence".

EDUCATION

Class Sizes

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) how many children in each English education authority were in classes of 41 pupils or more in each year since 1988;

(2) if he will list, for each year since 1988, the English education authorities in which no children were in classes of 41 pupils or more.

Mr. Forth: The information requested for classes taught by one teacher is given in the table for maintained primary and secondary schools for each year up to 1991. Information is not collected centrally on class sizes in either maintained nursery or maintained special schools. The information is derived from a census of schools on one day in January of each year, and may not be representative of classes over the whole academic year.

Teachers' Pensions Agency

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will place in the Library a copy of the Teachers' Pensions Agency's health and safety policy.

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for health and safety policy has been delegated to the Teachers' Pensions Agency under its chief executive Mrs. Denyse Metcalfe. I have asked her to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Denyse Metcalfe to Mr. John McAllion, dated 11 November:

The Secretary of State for Education has asked me to supply an answer to the following question you tabled about the Teachers' Pensions Agency's health and safety policy:—

"To ask the Secretary of State for Education, if he will place in the Library a copy of the Teachers' Pensions Agency's health and safety policy."

The Agency is committed to complying with the requirements of the Health and Safety at Work Act 1974. The Agency occupies premises on the same site as the Department for Education in Darlington, and the Darlington Site Controller has oversight of health and safety matters for the site.

The provision of health and safety advice and compliance with the Act is covered in our service level agreement with the Department. The Department's written policy is still in draft form at the moment.

Post-16 Education

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make it his policy to set a target date for achieving an 80 per cent. participation rate in post-16 education.

Mr. Forman: The Government's expenditure plans for further education are intended to lift this country towards the top of the international league table in staying-on rates for 16-19 year olds within the next three years.

Technology

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what efforts are currently undertaken to ensure a progression in content between technology courses in the national curriculum and similar courses in higher education.

Mr. Forman: National curriculum technology provides knowledge, skills and understanding which offer a general basis for further study or employment. Post-16 the Government are committed to securing a range of high quality study options leading to well regarded qualifications and further progression, including to higher education. It expects vocational qualifications and A level and AS examinations to build on national curriculum technology. National vocational qualifications (NVQs) are now becoming available in most areas of employment, including those which build on a good basis in technology. The introduction from this year of general NVQs will strengthen still further the vocational route to higher education in technology and related subjects such as engineering and design.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Footpaths

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when plans were first made by the Department of Environment Northern Ireland roads service to provide a footpath on the south side of Upper Greensland road, Carrickfergus between Downview Park and Goldenview Park; and what is the likely start date for a minor works scheme to provide this footpath.

Mr. Atkins: There have been no minor works proposals for the construction of a footpath on the southern side of this section of road. A major works scheme which will involve the construction of this section of road and the provision of footpaths on both sides will be undertaken when the necessary funds become available.

Drugs

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he has any plans to establish local drugs prevention teams in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: There are no plans at present to establish local drug prevention teams in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what support is available to district councils for anti-drug or drug awareness campaigns.

Mr. Hanley: In Northern Ireland health education on drugs including anti-drug and drug awareness campaigns is a matter for health and social services and education authorities.

HEALTH

Health Service, Doncaster

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the annual cost improvement programme in Doncaster health authority for each of the last five financial years.

Mr. Sackville: This in[illegible]rmation is not collected centrally. The regional health authority is responsible for monitoring cost improvements of individual districts. The hon. Member may wish to contact Sir Michael Carlisle, chairman of the Trent regional health authority, for details.

General Practitioners

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average number of applicants for vacancies for general practitioner posts in the United Kingdom every year since 1989.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information available is shown in the table. The figures are based on records kept by the Medical Practices Committee only in relation to general practitioner vacancies advertised by family health services authorities, which are 11 per cent. of the total. They are not comprehensive for England as a whole. Information relating to Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland is a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and Scotland and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Da[illegible]	Average number of applicants for each vacancy

Tomlinson Report

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received from St. Bartholomew's hospital about the North East Thames regional health authority's attitude to the implementation of the Tomlinson Report; and what actionm she will take to prevent North East Thames regional health authority from telling purchasers, providers or anyone else in the NHS that decisions have already been taken on Tomlinson and that the negotiations are a mere formality.

Dr. Mawhinney: We have made it clear to everyone in the national health service and to the House the decisions on recommendations in the Tomlinson report will be made only following careful evaluation. I will be visiting the institutions most affected by the report and I will listen carefully to their views.

Residential Homes

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the registered private and voluntary sector residential homes in Pendle; and what information she has on the fees charged per week in each case.

Mr. Yeo: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Nursing Care

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps the Government are taking to ascertain the number of national health service continuing care beds likely to be needed per 1,000 population aged 75 years to 85 years and 85 years plus;

(2) what steps the Government are taking to ascertain the numbers of elderly people likely to require continuous nursing care per 1,000 population aged 75 years to 85 years and 85 years plus;

(3) what steps the Government are taking to ensure that adequate provision of national health service continuous nursing care is available in each health authority area.

Mr. Yeo: It is the responsibility of local health authorities to assess the health needs of their resident population and to plan their purchasing strategies accordingly. We have made it clear to health authorities that their duty to provide continuing residential health care for those highly dependent people who need it remains unchanged, and that no adjustment to the level of such care should be made except as part of an agreed strategy with the relevant local authorities.

Mentally Disordered Offenders

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she intends to publish the report of the inter-departmental inquiry chaired by Dr. John Reed on mentally disordered offenders; and what are the plans for implementation of the report.

Mr. Yeo: The report will be published shortly.

Community Care

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she intends to make available the additional information on the transfer of resources from the Department of Social Security to local authorities for community care, as indicated in paragraph 8 of her Department's memorandum issued on 2 October.

Mr. Yeo: A further memorandum on the social security transfer has been sent today to the local authority associations. A copy has also been placed in the Library.

PRIME MINISTER

Matrix Churchill

Mr. Soley: To ask the Prime Minister when the ministers concerned signed public interest immunity certificates in the Matrix Churchill case; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The relevant certificates were signed by the Home Secretary on 16 June 1992 and 29 September 1992, by the President of the Board of Trade on 11 and 26 September 1992, by the Secretary of State for Defence on 7 September 1992 and by the Minister of State (Foreign and Commonwealth Office) on 3 and 23 September 1992. I explained the basis for issuing these certificates to the House on 12 November.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister on what date it was first brought to his attention that Matrix Churchill exports had been used for military purposes by Iraq.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Prime Minister when he first knew that Matrix Churchill exports to Iraq had been sanctioned.

The Prime Minister: I shall write to the hon. Members as soon as all the relevant records have been checked.

WALES

Job Creation

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the number of jobs created in the past 12 months as a result of his Department's efforts.

Mr. David Hunt: The Welsh Office operates a range of programmes and activities which contribute to economic development, many of which cannot be quantified accurately in terms of direct jobs created. But some can: for example, during the past 12 months offers of regional selective assistance accepted by companies in Wales are planned to create nearly 7,300 new jobs as well as safeguarding nearly 4,300 others.

Public Record Office

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many papers his Department has currently withdrawn from the Public Record Office; if he will list their titles; and when he estimates they will be returned.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department has 65 records out on loan. It is estimated that they will be returned by 31 December 1992. The records concerned are:

1. Caernarvon Castle:
   Acquisition (including land adjoining).
2. Neath-Abergavenny Trunk Road: Heads of the Valleys Road:
   Section 1 Brynmawr to Abergavenny: letting of contract: contractor's request for financial assistance (Pt 1).

Foreign Companies

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his latest estimates of the number of (a) Japanese, (b) American and (c) German companies in (i) Clwyd and (ii) Wales; and how many people are employed by each of these companies.

Mr. David Hunt: The latest estimates are as follows:

(i) Clwyd: Japan, 9 companies, 2,000 employees; North American, 29 companies, 6,000 employees; Germany, 10 companies, 500 employees;

(ii) Wales: Japan, 44 companies, 12,000 employees; North America, 130 companies, 32,000 employees; Germany, 50 companies, 5,000 employees.

Employment figures for individual companies are commercially confidential.

River Dee Crossing

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he plans to have with Clwyd county council concerning the new River Dee crossing; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend has no plans for such discussions, although there have been discussions at official level. The scheme has received some £2·75 million Government support to date. Decisions about future provisions for transport grant schemes will be taken in the context of this year's public expenditure survey.

School Governors

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many school governors in Wales came to the end of their term in office at the end of the 1992 summer term; how many did not seek reappointment; and how many school governor positions remain unfilled in each local education authority area.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Returns from local education authorities indicate that between 12,000 and 13,000 governors completed their term of appointment this summer. Information on the number who sought re-appointment and the number of positions still vacant is not available but I am not aware of any authorities who have experienced difficulties in recruiting adequate numbers.

Children (Special Needs)

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many copies of "Children With Special Needs", the guide produced by his Department, have been distributed to date.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Almost 150,000 copies of the guide have been distributed to local education authorities, schools, interested organisations and in response to enquiries to the Welsh Office.

Contaminated Land

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the likely effect on inward investment of the introduction of contaminated land registers in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: The introduction of registers of contaminated land should help remove a possible source of uncertainty for developers and would be unlikely to have a significantly adverse effect on the very high levels of inward investment in Wales.

Clinical Scientists

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to ensure the maintenance of the role and number of clinical scientists following the establishment of the hospital trusts.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: NHS trusts are required to follow Government policy on employing appropriately qualified staff in delivering health care services and the importance of clinical scientists is well recognised. It is intended that future training activity in this and other groups should be related to forecast service requirements.

Education White Paper

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received supporting his White Paper on the "Future of Education in Wales".

Sir Wyn Roberts: Some 300 responses were received on the proposals contained in the White Paper "Choice and Diversity: A New Framework for Schools" (Cm. 2021). It is not possible to break these down as requested, since many of those consulted welcomed certain of our proposals but were opposed to others.

British Aerospace

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he proposes to meet the chairman of British Aerospace.

Mr. David Hunt: I shall be meeting Mr. John Cahill, chairman of British Aerospace plc shortly.

Mencap

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the projected governmental expenditure on Mencap in Wales for the year 1992-93.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Under the all-Wales mental handicap strategy in 1992-93, £82,736 has been allocated to Mencap in Wales.

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the projected Government funding of Mencap for the year 1992-93 which is allotted to Clwyd; and what are the figures for earlier years since funding was started.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the total Government funding for Mencap in Wales in each year since such funding was started.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Under the all-Wales mental handicap strategy a total of £654,544·09 has been allocated direct to Mencap in Wales, since funding started. Details as follows:

	£
1983-84	27,038
1984-85	46,788
1985-86	46,961
1986-87	63,931·99
1987-88	75,220·10
1988-89	68,554
1989-90	81,050
1991-92	77,655
1992-93	82,736

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the real increase in Mencap funding since the all-Wales strategy was introduced.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: An allocation of £27,038 was first given to Mencap in Wales direct from the all-Wales mental handicap strategy in 1983-84. Using the GDP deflator, this equates to £45,083 in 1992-93 prices. The equivalent allocation in 1992-93 is £82,736, which represents an 84 per cent. increase in real terms since 1983-84.

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of Mencap funding in Wales is supplied directly from Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: In 1992-93, the direct allocation to Mencap in Wales from the all-Wales mental handicap strategy is £82,736. Figures for the total Mencap in Wales funding are not kept centrally.

Mental Health

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what efforts are being taken to improve mental health facilities in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The all-Wales mental illness strategy was launched in 1989 to provide local, accessible and non-stigmatising services and so end reliance on traditional, large hospitals, many built up to 150 years ago. Health authorities, social services departments and the voluntary sector are jointly planning integrated services, with the increasing participation of service users and their carers.

Once a comprehensive pattern of services has been decided in each of the eight county-based planning units, and the costs identified, the costs will be met from a combination of local investment, reinvestment and Welsh Office funding. However, the Welsh Office is making £6·3 million available this year towards the development of new services.

Cervical Cancer

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures are being taken in Wales to ensure that women have regular check-ups for cervical cancer.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The report of the all-Wales advisory group on cervical screening was submitted to my right hon. Friend in January. After consulting those involved in the programme the report's recommendations have been adopted and guidance is in the process of being issued. A number of improvements to the co-ordination and management of the programme are proposed as well as developments aimed at increasing the number of women who accept the invitation to attend for a test, including the preparation of a common set of letters and leaflets by the Health Promotion Authority for Wales.

Quangos

Mr. Sheerby: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many quasi-autonomous non-governmental bodies there are in the Principality; what the comparable number was on (a) 1 January 1980 and (b) 1 January 1990; and what proposals he has for reducing the number of such bodies.

Mr. David Hunt: There are currently 21 executive non-departmental public bodies in Wales. There were 17 executive non-departmental public bodies in 1982 (the first year that this information was collected) and 19 in 1990. In addition, there are nine district health authorities and eight family health services authorities (previously known as family practitioner committees). This number has remained constant.

The Welsh Office has a policy of financial management and planning reviews. Executive non-departmental public bodies are subject to such a review every five years when the justification for the contiued existence of each of these bodies is considered.

Nursing Qualifications

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the estimated cost in Wales of training a nurse to reach state-registered nursing qualifications.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The current cost of training a state registered nurse in Wales is estimated at £41,000.

Fluoride

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the fluoride levels in drinking water for each district health authority area in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information on drinking water quality in water supply zones is contained in "Drinking Water 1991" the second annual report by the chief inspector of the drinking water inspectorate, a copy of which is in the Library of the House. This shows that of the samples taken of water supplied for domestic purposes in Wales in 1991, only one determination exceeded the concentration for fluoride prescribed by the Water Supply (Water Quality) Regulations 1989 (SI 1989 No. 1147).

Hospital Trusts

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what account is taken of party-political affiliation or membership by his Department in considering the appointment of chairmen of hospital trusts in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: None.

Extra-contractual Referrals

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish for each health authority in Wales the money allocated for extra-contractual referrals by (a) non-fund holding general practitioners and (b) hospital consultants.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Health authorities in Wales do not receive specific allocations for extra contractual referrals. It is for each health authority to decide the level of funding to be set aside for this purpose from within its overall revenue allocation in the light of local circumstances. Information relating to the planned level of spending on extra contractual referrals is given in health authorities' annual financial plans, but these budgets may be subject to revision during the course of the financial year.

On the basis of the latest information available, the following table identifies the reserves which health authorities in Wales currently have set aside for extra contractual referrals:

	£ million
Clwyd	1·8
East Dyfed	1·6
Gwent	1·6
Gwynedd	1·1
Mid Glamorgan	1·9
Pembrokeshire	0·8
Powys	1·0
South Glamorgan	2·0
West Glamorgan	1·6

Source of information: Latest available in-year income and expenditure monitoring returns from health authorities in Wales.

Cardiff Bay Barrage

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Countryside Council for Wales regarding the Cardiff Bay Barrage Bill (a) generally, (b) concerning the proposed pumping of fresh water from the Severn tunnel into the irrigation works lagoon at Redwick, Gwent, and (c) concerning the dimensions of the lagoon; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I have discussed the relevant aspects of the Cardiff Bay barrage proposals with the chairman of the Countryside Council, and my officials are in regular contact with officers of the council on both the Bill and the proposed bird reserve on the Gwent levels. The council is represented on the steering group overseeing the feasibility study of the creation of the reserve. Design of the reserve is still under consideration; the proposals will be published when they are complete.

Home Fire Fatalities

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the grant awarded to the Cardiff institute of higher education housing studies department in relation to the numbers of home fire fatalities.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: A grant of £27,000 has been awarded to the Cardiff institute of higher education under the Welsh Office's housing options Wales small grants scheme which will enable a fire risk and safety assessment project to be undertaken. The project aims to produce a model which can be used by public sector housing managers, in particular, to assist them in assessing the fire risks in dwellings and thus to target resources appropriately.

Valuation Tribunal Offices

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received regarding the proposal to close three valuation tribunal offices in Wales and to reduce the number of staff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I have received 33 representations in response to my consultation paper "Review of Valuation Tribunal Offices". I am considering these and I will announce my decision in due course.

Housing Revenue Account

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he will announce his proposals for housing revenue account subsidy for 1993-94; and what proposals he will be making.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Welsh Office is today consulting local authorities and other bodies on our proposals for the rent guidelines and management and maintenance allowances to be used in calculating next year's entitlement to housing revenue account subsidy. I shall be placing the consultation papers in the Library of the House with a list of the estimated guidelines and allowances for each authority. Our proposals are for an average guideline rent increase of £1·84 per week (a smaller cash increase than the average of £2·14 for 1992-93) with a range of increases for individual authorities from £1·25 to £2·75 per week. The new average weekly guideline rent would be £29·17. For management and maintenance, we are proposing to increase allowances by an average of £28 per annum per dwelling over the 1992-93 level.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Tourism

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he expects to announce his review of tourism.

Mr. Brooke: The conclusions of the review are reflected in the announcement I made in the context of the autumn statement. They are as follows:

> The British Tourist Authority's (BTA) role in promoting Britain abroad is an important one in an increasingly competitive environment. It is vital that BTA continues to secure the maximum possible industry contribution to its work and that it applies taxpayers' money in the most effective and efficient way. I shall expect the board to make proposals for improving its use of resources in its next corporate plan.
>
> The case is now much less strong for central Government funding of the promotion of tourism in England. The English Tourist Board (ETB) has done a great deal over the years to raise standards, to improve access to information, and to show the industry how their products can be developed and marketed. As the industry matures, and the regional tourist boards develop, it is appropriate for other bodies to carry on many of the ETB's central activities.
>
> However I also believe that central Government support for the regional tourist boards should continue. I believe that this support should be targeted much more closely than at present on areas of need where tourism might be an instrument of economic regeneration.

The allocations of Exchequer grant for tourism which I announced in connection with my right hon. Friend's autumn statement reflect these priorities. They are as follows:

	1993-94 £ million	1994-95 (planned) £ million	1995-96 (planned) £ million
British Tourist Authority	32·0	32·7	33·5
English Tourist Board	13·9	10·8	9·0
S4[1]	0·3	0·0	0·0

[1] Residual liabilities under the S4 capital grants scheme, now wound up.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Social Security Tribunals

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether appellants at social security tribunal hearings are able to make a tape recording of all or part of the proceedings.

Mr. Burt: The tape-recording of tribunal hearings is not normally permitted. However, in exceptional cases tape-recording may be permitted at the discretion of the tribunal chairman.

Invalidity Benefit

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has for the future level and taxation of invalidity benefit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: We have given details of invalidity benefit for next year in the reply of 12 November to my hon. Friend the Member for Hertfordshire, West (Mr. Jones). The question of taxation is a matter for my hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Income Support

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people were in receipt of income support in Pendle for each year since 1987.

Mr. Burt: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Mr. Michael Bichard to Mr. Gordon Prentice, dated 12 November 1992.

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking how many people were in receipt of Income Support in Pendle for each year since 1987.

The complete range of information is not available except at a disproportionate cost. This is because statistics of a local nature are destroyed at regular intervals in accordance with standing instructions and the information which is available provides only a snapshot rather than the number of customers in a given period.

I have listed below the information which is available. The figures quoted are from offices in Burnley and Rossendale which make up the Agency's Burnley, Pendle & Rossendale District. The District boundaries do not, however, correspond with those of the Pendle constituency and it is not possible to break these figures down further. The figures have been supplied by the Income Support Management Information System.

Current Income Support Claims (year ending)

	Numbers
August 1989	18,679
August 1990	19,158
August 1991	20,888
August 1992	22,654

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Benefits Agency

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to raise morale in the Benefits Agency.

Mr. Burt: The question of morale in the Benefits Agency is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Mr. Michael Bichard to Mr. Gordon Prentice, dated 12 November 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security concerning morale in the Benefits Agency.

I am sure you will know that one of the Benefits Agency's core values is "caring for staff" and, earlier this year, in order to give new meaning to this, we published our Staff Charter. This sets out in detail what staff have a right to expect of the Agency, and we are committed to producing an Action Update twice a year so that staff can see what progress is being made.

In producing the first Summer 1992 Action Update recently to all our staff we noted that there are perhaps three major areas in which we have been able to make progress in the first half of this year—the involvement of our staff, equal opportunities, and a new staff appraisal system.

The Benefits Agency Management Team has particularly welcomed the increased involvement of staff through the use of a half hour set aside in very many Districts for staff discussions, and through other imaginative ways in which staff participation is encouraged. We have provided an additional £1m to support the introduction of our new equal opportunities package—that package (and the money) are evidence of our determination to make progress on this front. We have also introduced a new and, we believe, a much better personal appraisal system throughout the Agency.

In some areas progress has not been as rapid as we would have wished. We are well aware of the fact that staff are expecting much more of us by way of development and training opportunities, and we will be paying particularly close attention to this in the second half of the year. But whether it be in the major areas mentioned above, or in the relatively minor developments such as the start of long service awards and the continued health screening programme, we remain fully committed to supporting, valuing and involving our staff, whatever their grade.

During the spring of 1992 a Staff Attitudes Survey was conducted throughout the Department of Social Security and its executive agencies. 4,694 questionnaires were completed and returned by Benefits Agency staff spread across a representative sample of grade levels and areas of work. The final results of the survey have only very recently been passed to agencies by the Institute of Manpower Studies (IMS), and we are in the process of analysing them to decide what action needs to be taken. At this early stage of our analysis it is nevertheless worth noting from the overall summary provided to us by the IMS that staff were reasonably satisfied with some aspects of work. Job security was a source of satisfaction, along with a friendly working atmosphere, flexible hours and an approachable line manager. We will be considering further those areas where less satisfaction was expressed—such as promotion opportunities and opportunities for training and development.

I would be the first to admit that we have a lot to do to help improve the morale of our staff, but the evidence received so far suggests that our staff do appreciate what we are trying to do for them. All our units, including Districts, Benefits Directorates and Central Services, will be carrying out their own staff perception surveys as part of their own commitment to caring for their staff. I can assure you that this has equal importance within the Agency with our other core values of customer service, value for money, and bias for action.

I hope you will find this report helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Social Fund

Ms. Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many people from the Birmingham, Yardley constituency, in the last two years for which figures are available, appealed against a Benefits Agency decision not to award a social fund grant; and how many appeals were upheld;

(2) how many people from the Birmingham, Yardley constituency have been refused social fund payments in the last two years for which figures are available.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Mr. Michael Bichard to Ms. Estelle Morris, dated 12 November 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security about Social Fund appeals and refusals in the Birmingham, Yardley constituency.

Applicants who are not satisfied with the Social Fund Officer's decision can apply to have the decision reviewed; there is no right of appeal against Social Fund community care grant (CCG) decisions. Decisions are firstly reviewed within the local office and, if the applicant is still dissatisfied with the decision, by a Social Fund Inspector who is independent of the Department.

The attached annex gives the number of requests for review against Social Fund CCG decisions and also the number of CCG decisions that were changed, firstly at District level and secondly, by the Social Fund Inspectors. Decisions changed at District level, if not changed wholly in the applicant's favour, may also have been changed by the Social Fund Inspector.

Details are held by Benefits Agency District, the boundaries of which are not coterminous with Parliamentary constituencies. I have therefore provided figures for the Districts of Birmingham Chamberlain, Birmingham Heartlands and Birmingham South East, each of which deals with some part of your constituency.

Figures for CCG refusals are given for the years 1990-91 and 1991-92. The information is collated according to the number of applications rather than the number of applicants.

Figures on social fund refusals by district are in the Library.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Benefits

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement about the delay in processing the benefits claim of the claimant about which the hon. Member for Woolwich wrote to the Minister of State on 18 September, national insurance number YP205065D.

Mr. Scott: The administration of benefits is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief-executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Mr. Michael Bichard to Mr. John Austin-Walker, dated 12 November 1992.

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the delay in processing the claim for your constituent, National Insurance Number YP 205065 D.

I should explain that we asked your constituent's representative for a signed request for review for the Community Care Grant to which you refer, and are unable to arrange a review until this is received. I am sorry that your constituent's Income Support claim was not handled as efficiently as it should have been, and offer my sincere apologies for this. I replied on 10 November to your letter of 18 September to the Minister of State for Social Security and Disabled People and this explains the position in greater detail.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Drugs

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what quantities of drugs destined for Northern Ireland have been seized by customs officers in each of the last five years.

Sir John Cope: The following show the figures of drugs seized in Northern Ireland:

Fiscal year ended March (kilos)

	1988	1989	1990	1991	1992
Cannabis	30·254	0·283	0·667	0·121	1·207
Cocaine	0·010	—	—	—	5·152

Note: Figures do not include LSD or amphetamine, seizures of which were negligible during the period. There were no seizures of heroin.

However there is no reliable information on areas of intended final destination.

EC Budget

Mr. Milligan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the effect on the United Kingdom net budget contribution to the EC of the accession of Sweden, Finland and Austria to the European Community.

Sir John Cope: Preliminary forecasts suggest that each country is likely to be a net contributor to the EC budget upon accession. If this were to be the case, their accession would tend to reduce the United Kingdom's net contribution to the EC budget.

Matrix Churchill

Mr. Soley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consultations were held by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise about (a) the prosecution of Matrix Churchill and (b) the withdrawal of the prosecution.

Sir John Cope: The commissioners of Customs and Excise, in the exercise of their independent prosecuting authority took the decision to initiate criminal proceedings in the Matrix Churchill case following advice of counsel on the sufficiency of evidence. They subsequently agreed with the conclusion of prosecuting counsel, following the evidence given by Mr. Alan Clark, that it would be wrong to continue with the prosecution. Ministers were informed of developments at various stages of the case.

Pay Review Bodies

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the future work of the pay review bodies.

Mr. Lamont: As I announced yesterday in the autumn statement, public sector pay settlements in the coming year will be restricted to between 0-1½ per cent. to keep the growth in public sector pay bills as low as possible. This policy will apply to the whole of the public sector and related bodies, including those groups whose pay is settled by reference to the recommendations of a review body.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has written to each of the review body chairmen and asked all except the School Teachers' Review Body (because of its statutory basis) not to recommend basic pay increases for 1993. However, the review bodies have been invited to continue their important work on performance pay and other specific issues as appropriate to their remit groups.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has also written to the chairman of the School Teachers' Review

Body explaining the Government's policy, and the Secretary of State for Education has directed it to have regard to the Government's general policy that increases in public sector pay should be restricted to between 0-1½ per cent. in the coming year.

The Government intend that groups covered by the Doctors and Dentists Review Body, the Nurses Pay Review Body and the Armed Forces Pay Review Body should receive an increase in pay of 1½ per cent. from 1 April 1993. In common with ministerial salaries, Top Salary Review Body groups will receive no pay increase for 1993.

For TSRB groups, the Government intend to honour the second stage of the 1992 award, under which these groups will receive an increase of 2·9 per cent. from 1 April 1993.

The Government see a continuing role for the review bodies, whose advice it has greatly valued, although there must be changes from time to time to reflect developments in their remit groups. Policy on public sector pay for future years will depend on a wide range of economic and other factors, including the development of performance pay and more decentralised arrangements. The Government could not accept that a year of pay restraint should be followed by a series of catching-up settlements which would dissipate the benefits achieved.

EC Declarations

Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what penalties will arise for (a) late completion and (b) incorrect completion of (i) the EC sales list and (ii) the intra EC trade statistics: supplementary declaration; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 11 November 1992]: Failure to submit, or failure to complete correctly, EC sales lists and supplementary statistical declarations under Intrastat will render the trader liable to penalties approved by Parliament in the Finance Act 1992.

The penalty regime for EC sales lists will be a civil penalty regime, with penalties up to £100 for misdeclarations and up to £500 for failure to submit.

For Intrastat there will be a criminal penalty regime. Where enforcement becomes necessary Customs intend to take full advantage of the powers to compound which avoids criminalising administrative error, unless the trader rejects the offer to compound. Provided guilty knowledge or recklessness is not involved, the Commissioners will have regard to the seriousness of the error and the length of time it has remained unreported but in no case will the offer exceed the £2,500 maximum penalty provided for in the legislation.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Nuclear Reprocessing

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to require British Nuclear Fuels plc to install krypton 85 retention filters on the new thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield.

Mr. Eggar: British Nuclear Fuels plc (BNFL) has made an application under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 to discharge increased levels of krypton 85 from its Sellafield site to take account of the operation of its thermal oxide reprocessing plant. The company's view is that a krypton removal system suitable for a full scale reprocessing plant is not currently available and that the environmental benefits of installing such a system would not justify its likely cost. BNFL has however given a commitment to keep the development of such a system under review and fit one should it become available and prove to be cost effective when set against the likely environmental benefits. The application is currently under consideration by the chief inspector of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and my right hon. Friend, the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

Car Market

Mr. Spellar: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 19 June, Official Report, column 720, when the Government will decide whether the United Kingdom should be a restricted car market from 1 January 1993.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend expects to make an announcement on this matter shortly.

Iraq (Defence Equipment)

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information he has on the use of accounts held in the Bank of Credit and Commerce International by British companies for the export of equipment to Iraq which could be used for defence purposes betwee 1987 and 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: I am not aware of my Department holding such information.

British Waterways

Mr. Gould: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the reasons for the postponement of the review by the Monopolies and Mergers Commissioin of the running of British Waterways.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I am considering a possible reference in the near future of the British Waterways Board to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission under section 11 of the 1980 Competition Act.

Offshore Hydrocarbons Unit

Mr. Wilson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the functions of the offshore hydrocarbons unit and the British Geological Survey core store and their significance to the national interest.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 12 November 1992]: The British Geological Survey's hydrocarbons unit undertakes studies at the direction of my Department on the hydrocarbon potential of the United Kingdom continental shelf. It also manages the storage of data obtained from licence activity on the shelf in premises which I own at Gilmerton in Edinburgh. These activities assist my Department in its objective of promoting the economic exploration and development of the nation's oil and gas resources.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals he has to dispose of (a) the offshore hydrocarbons unit or (b) the British Geological Survey core store; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 12 November 1992]: I have no plans to dispose of the core store which I own at Gilmerton in Edinburgh. I am considering what future contracting arrangements might be appropriate for activities currently carried out for my Department by the British Geological Survey's hydrocarbons unit.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions his Department has had with Messrs Simon Robertson about the future of (a) the offshore hydrocarbons unit and (b) the British Geological Survey core store; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 12 November 1992]: None. As part of the evaluation of the Department's future contracting arrangements in this area, my officials have held some preliminary discussions with the British Geological Survey and other organisations which might be capable of undertaking such work.

Launch Aid

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what conditions attach to grants under the launch aid schemes; and on what statutory basis such conditions are imposed.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 11 November 1992]: Launch aid is granted under section 1(1) of the Civil Aviation Act 1982.

The specific conditions attach to any launch aid grant vary from case to case and are contained in a contract negotiated between the Government and the recipient company. The terms of such contracts are confidential, but generally include conditions setting out the work programme and percentage of costs to be covered, the repayment terms and arrangements for monitoring the commercial and technical progress of the project.

DEFENCE

Departmental Properties

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list, for each local authority area in south Yorkshire, how many residential properties are currently owned by his Department; and if he will list, by location, those residential properties which are empty, giving the type of accommodation available, the length of time each property has been vacant, and its intended future use;

(2) if he will set out the numbers and locations of empty service married housing quarters in south Yorkshire.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As at 30 September 1992, the latest date for which figures are available, MoD owned the following service married quarters in each local authority area in south Yorkshire:

	Number
Barnsley metropolitan district council	2
Doncaster metropolitan district council	446
Rotherham district council	0
Sheffield city council	22

The following properties were vacant:

	Location
	Sheffield	Finningley
Total Vacant	2	144
Vacant under one year	1	94
Vacant one to two years	1	20
Vacant over two years	0	30

Ninety-seven of the quarters at Finningley were being considered for disposal, while the majority of the remainder at Finningley and those at Sheffield were undergoing or awaiting major maintenance work to enable them to be re-occupied by service families. The vacant properties were houses with either two or three bedrooms.

In addition, negotiations were in hand to dispose of 119 properties at Finningley to a housing association at a discount, in return for nomination rights for personnel leaving the services over the next few years.

Isle of Rona

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 20 October, Official Report, column 248, what plans he has for the future of his Department's Defence Research Agency's facilities on the Isle of Rona after the island is sold.

Mr. Aitken: This is a matter delegated to the Defence Research Agency under its framework document. I have therefore asked the chief executive to reply direct to the hon. Member.

Letters from Mr. John Chisholm to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 12 November 1992:

In today's written answer the Minister of State for Defence Procurement informed you that I would be replying directly to your question concerning the future of Defence Research Agency facilities on the Isle of Rona.

The DRA has recently purchased 140 acres at the northern tip of the island, where its main facilities are located. The sale of the remainder of the island will not affect our activities, which will continue as before.

I hope you will find this information useful.

Low Flying

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 19 October, Official Report column 159, in what form information is held, in respect of low flying by helicopters and complaints received in Eastern Command; and if he will publish such information as is available.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Information is held by name of complainant not by region or by Army command district. Any complaint about low flying received within eastern district would be passed to the appropriate MOD branch. For Army aircraft this would be HQ staff at Wilton, Salisbury, who assumed this responsibility in April. Since then two complaints have been received about a single incident in the Derby area on 10 June 1992.

Decompression Chambers

Mr. Alnger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the location of diving decompression chambers in the United Kingdom controlled by his Department.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Diving recompression chambers are situated as follows:

Port Diving Groups: Pembroke Dock: Devonport: Portsmouth: Rosyth: Greenock.

Marine Services Diving School, Rosyth.

HMS Cochrane, Rosyth.

HMS Neptune, Clyde Submarine Base.

HMS Nelson, Portsmouth

HMS Osprey, Portland.

HMS Drake, Plymouth.

HMS Dolphin, (Submarine Escape Training Tank) Gosport.

Defence Research Agency, Alverstoke.

Mr. Alnger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many individuals were given emergency decompression or re-compression in each of his Department's decompression chambers in each of the past five years; and how many of those were civilian contractors, leisure divers, military divers or victims of carbon monoxide poisoning.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information is not available in the form requested. The table shows the total numbers of service and civilian divers, and victims of carbon monoxide poisoning, treated over the last five years.

Chamber	Diving Civilian	Diving Service	CM Poisoning Civilian	Total
Pembroke Dock	17	1	1	19

Rescue Helicopters

Mr. Alnger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the ground speed and wind conditions used in the United Kingdom civil rescue helicopter coverage working group report 1986 to calculate the response times to incidents 40 nautical miles from a search-and-rescue base during daylight.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The working group assumed still air conditions and air and ground speeds of 105 knots for a Sea King and S61N helicopter and 90 knots for a Wessex helicopter.

Royal Naval Reserve

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what role he envisages for the future of the Royal Naval Reserve in general; whether the volunteer reserves will retain a seagoing role; and what assessment he has made of whether adequate steps have been taken to maintain the morale and motivation of the Royal Naval Reserve volunteers.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Royal Navy's reserve forces, including the Royal Naval Reserve, will continue to have an important role in our defence plans. My right hon. Friend the hon. Member for Bridgewater (Mr. King) the then Secretary of State for Defence published in March 1992 an open government document "The Future of Britain's Reserve Forces" which described proposals for fundamental changes in the management and deployment of reserve forces both in peacetime and on military operations. As part of this process, the future use of the Navy's volunteer and ex-regular reserves is being examined, including investigation into the future seagoing opportunities of the Royal Naval Reserve, with the aim of establishing enduring and worthwhile tasks to support the Royal Navy in the very different international climate that now exists. It is, however, too early to predict the outcome of these studies.

I am satisfied that adequate steps are being taken to keep the Volunteer reservists fully informed of developments. The assistant chief of naval staff signalled Royal Naval Reserve personnel in June 1992 reassuring them that work relating to the open government document was continuing. In addition, he holds regular meetings with senior members of the Royal Naval Reserve to inform them about the future direction of Royal Naval Reserve policy.

Fishing

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions have taken place with representatives of the Clyde Fishermen's Association anent fishing vessels being allowed to fish in the exemption area of Loch Long; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Discussions have taken place with local fishermen and the Clyde Fishermen's Association following a number of incidents in which fishing vessels entered the prohibited area of Loch Long and as a result proposals have been put to the Clyde Fishermen's Association to allow a limited number of local fishing vessels to enter the prohibited area when turning with fishing gear extended.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals he has to abrogate the Dockyard Port of Holy Loch Order 1967 in order to allow members of the Clyde Fishermen's Association to commence fishing in the loch; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Action is in hand to revoke the Dockyard Port of Holy Loch Order 1967. This will be completed as soon as possible.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions have taken place with the United States Navy anent the rules regulating the maintenance of a specified distance between foreign submarines, operating in United Kingdom waters under the operational control of the Royal Navy and fishing vessels shooting, towing and hauling their gear; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: All foreign submarines visiting United Kingdom waters, including those belonging to the United States Navy, are briefed on the operating procedures to be complied with when in the vicinity of fishing vessels. Discussions have taken place with the United States Navy following the incident involving the USS Sturgeon on 16 September and further discussions will take place once they have completed their report on the incident.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals he has to commission a research project into the feasibility of commercial and recreational fishing in the Holy Loch; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None.

Iraq

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has on the use of accounts held in the Bank of Credit and Commerce International for the supply of British-made equipment to Iraq which could be used for defence purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: My Department holds no such information.

Carver Barracks

Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of Carver barracks.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I hope to be able to announce our proposals for the future of Carver barracks shortly.

SCOTLAND

Unemployment

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what the percentage rates of (a) male unemployment and (b) female unemployment in (i) the Greenock travel-to-work area and (ii) Strathclyde were for each year since 1987.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 10 November 1992]: The information requested is set out in the table:

	Greenock travel-to-work area		Strathclyde region
	Male	Female	Male	Female
	Per cent.	Per cent.	Per cent.	Per cent.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Nuclear Non-proliferation

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what matters in regard to enhancing nuclear non-proliferation controls have been introduced by (a) the United Kingdom and (b) other community member states, to the European Foreign Affairs Council during the United Kingdom presidency of the European Council.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No specific proposals on nuclear non-proliferation have been discussed by the Foreign Affairs Council during the United Kingdom presidency. However European political co-operation has continued to work on non-proliferation issues and is taking forward a United Kingdom proposal to strengthen IAEA safeguards. This concerns voluntary reporting of information to the IAEA on exports of certain nuclear materials, equipment and specialised non-nuclear materials.

Iran

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information Her Majesty's Government possess on the purpose of the nuclear centre at Moallem Kalayen in Iran; and if he will make a statement on the Government's assessment of the Iranian nuclear programme and its military aspects.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: An IAEA inspection team which visited Iran in February (including the site at Moallem Kalayen) reported that they had found nothing inconsistent with the peaceful application of nuclear energy. Information about particular nuclear facilities which Iran is obliged to provide to the IAEA is held in confidence by the agency. We have noted Iran's statements that her nuclear programme is entirely for peaceful purposes. We are nevertheless concerned by allegations that Iran is pursuing a nuclear weapons programme. We have made clear the importance of Iran, and all other states parties to the NPT, abiding fully by their treaty obligations.

Leonard Peltier

Ms. Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received about the case of Leonard Peltier; and if he will make representations to the United States Government about the human rights implications of the case.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: A member of the public wrote to the Prime Minister in July this year. Her Majesty's Government do not propose to make representations to the United States Government about this case.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his most recent assessment of the danger posed by military activity affecting the HAK plant at Tuzala in the former Yugoslavia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: As the HAK chemical plant at Tuzala in northern Bosnia is in an area of fierce fighting, it is not at present possible to gain access to the plant in order to make any assessment of the impact on it.

Russian Nuclear Industry

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are his most recent estimates for each ex-Soviet state of the number of scientists with experience in building nuclear weapons.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have been asked to reply. The number of scientists in the former Soviet Union with some knowledge of nuclear weapons production is about 10,000 to 15,000; the vast majority are Russians. Only 2,000 to 3,000 of these have access to the most sensitive information. Of the former Soviet republics only Russia has a nuclear weapons production capability.

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his most recent estimate of the size of the ex-Soviet nuclear arsenal in terms of numbers of warheads in each republic of the former union.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have been asked to reply. It is estimated that the former Soviet Union's nuclear arsenal consists of some 27,000 or more nuclear warheads. The vast majority are based in Russia but it is estimated that in Ukraine, Kazakhstan and Belarus there are about 1,500, 1,200 and 80 warheads respectively.

CAMBRIDGE REFERENCE LIBRARY

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment his Department has made of the number of weapons that are no longer under the control of the KGB.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have been asked to reply. The internal functions of the former KGB are now the responsibility of the Russian Ministry of Security. The Ministry of Security controls no major armed forces formations or weapons systems; those formerly under the command of the KGB have been transferred to the Russian Ministry of Defence.

EC Officials

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many and what percentage of officials employed by the European Commission within each grade are Britons.

Mr. Jackson: I have been asked to reply.

The figures for British nationals employed in the European Commission are as follows:

Grade	British employees	Per cent
Administrative	413	12
Executive	163	7
Clerical	233	5
Manual	7	1
Total:	816	7·3

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 213

SESSION 1992–93

2nd November—13th November 1992

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Speaker and deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R=first reading, 2R=second reading, Money res=money resolution, Com=Committee stage, Rep=Report stage, 3R=third reading, amendt/amendts=amendment/amendments, *=matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
